The word of God shows that nature provides but one wife for one man, and one husband for one woman. That word teaches us that He "made them male and female"—not male and females, nor female and males. And if there are any present who do not bow to the authority of that word, I would point such to the census. The census, in every country, and in every age, shows that the sexes are numerically equal, and that the arrangements of Providence forbid polygamy.

I have proceeded in my argument for sustaining this proviso on the ground that this Government has as full power and authority over the people and institutions of its Territories as a State government has over the people and institutions within its jurisdiction. Now, I ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] whether the government of his State should or would permit the dark-haired men of his State to press and practice upon their claim to a hundred wives each, and thus to shut out the light-haired men from marriage? But I will consume no more of the time, as so many are eager to speak.

Mr. DISNEY. It may be proper, Mr. Chairman, in regard to the position which I occupy on this bill, to make a brief explanation. It was not my purpose, when I came here, to engage in the discussion. I will state that the bill, as I originally submitted it to the Committee on the Public Lands, did not embrace the existing proviso. When the committee had the bill under consideration, I was taken sick, and, during my absence, as stated by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Cobb,] I believe on his own motion, this proviso was inserted.

Various arguments passed through my mind with regard to this matter concerning the Mormons and this proviso, both pro and con. I shall not weary the House by repeating them. They bore upon the point which the gentleman from Georgia has touched, as to how far the Congress of the United States might legally interfere with the religious faith and religious action of the people of the Territories. Again, on the other hand, it suggested itself to my mind as a question of policy. The committee will observe that this bill, as it now stands, so far as it relates to the granting of lands does not interfere with the religious belief or existing institutions of the people of the Territory. There is no interference at all. The proviso simply provides that in making these grants of lands, a particular class of persons shall not be entitled to the benefits of them.

One word here by way of reply to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Letcher,] who asked me a question this morning. That question, as I understand it, was, why a limitation of this sort had been imposed with regard to donations of land to settlers, when a similar provision was not introduced with regard to the salary of the surveyor general? Now, Mr. am I really expected to answer a question of that sort? The first section of the bill provides that where an individual shall discharge certain specified and well defined duties, he shall be paid for the services so rendered at a specific and defined rate. That is natural. The reason is obvious. The propriety of it will be admitted by everybody. The first section, then, is simply to provide compensation for a particular officer, who is to render certain services; and there can certainly be no necessity for me to explain why a limitation is not put upon the salary of that officer. The latter portion of the bill provides for donations of land to settlers. Now, the Government might pay one who practices polygamy for discharging the duties of surveyor general for services rendered, and yet might esteem it impolitic to make donations of land—gifts to parties on condition of settlement, and thus settle that country with persons practicing polygamy. The distinction, I apprehend, is sufficiently obvious without any further remarks from me.

One word more. I have risen merely for the purpose of explanation, and not to express opinions. As I have already stated, when I submitted this bill to the Committee on Public Lands it was without this proviso.

Now, with regard to the Mormons themselves, I have to state the fact, that polygamy is a legal institution in the Territory of Utah. I have a volume of the statutes of Utah before me, and I have examined it carefully.

Mr. MILLSON. Really, I am somewhat astonished at that declaration of the gentleman from Ohio. Do I understand the gentleman to say that polygamy is a legal institution in the Territory of Utah?

Mr. DISNEY. Yes.

Mr. MILLSON. Has the law legalizing it ever been revised by Congress? I should like to know if the gentleman has any information upon that subject?

Mr. DISNEY. I have just stated that I have examined the laws of the Territory of Utah.

Mr. MILLSON. What I wish to ask the gentleman is, whether that law has ever been revised by the Committee on Territories? And if so, whether the Committee on Territories are prepared to—what I take it for granted they will promptly do—report a bill annulling such a law?

Mr. DISNEY. I will answer the gentleman. There is no statute in the Territory of Utah expressly allowing polygamy as such, although it recognizes its existence. The statutes recognize the issue of marriages under such a system there as heirs-at-law, and make provisions in regard to estates, and in every way and form recognize the existence of polygamy as a legal institution. I hold in my hand a statute of that character. I desire merely to make one more remark in addition to what I have already said. It is proper for me, in justice to the Mormons, to state that their statute-books are filled with provisions against incontinence of a most severe character.

Mr. ORR. With a view of offering a resolution in the House, to close debate, I move that the committee rise.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. ORR. I give notice that if the committee will rise, I will move to close the debate upon this bill in fifteen minutes after the committee shall have resumed its sittings.

Mr. SIMMONS. I hope the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina will not be agreed to, as this is a subject which ought to be fully discussed.

Mr. ORR. If a majority of the committee concur with the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Simmons,] he can extend the time to an hour, or two hours, or longer.

The question was then taken upon Mr. Orr's motion; and it was decided in the negative.

So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, I had been a silent reader of the proceedings of Congress for many years before I came here as a member of this House and had an opportunity of being an eye witness. I have now seen the manner in which so much loose and hasty legislation gets through Congress. It is done under great excitement, with much declamation upon every thing but the question under debate, and then voting on the question without discussing it. I am in favor of retaining the clause in the section "that the benefits of this act shall not extend to any person who shall now, or at any time hereafter, be the husband of more than one wife." It is jokingly suggested to me that I stand in a dubious position in relation to this question; but it is a disinterested position. Sir, I am opposed to striking out the clause for two reasons.

My first reason is, that it would be repudiating the whole antecedent policy of this Government upon the subject of legislating for Territories, and fitting them to become republican States of this Union. The ordinance of 1787, providing for the government of the Northwest Territory, from which the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin were formed, and which received the sanction of the old Congress under the Confederation, and the confirmation of the new, laid down six articles as fundamental rights, to be forever secured by the Government to the people, "for extending the fundamental principles of civil and religious liberty, which form the basis whereon these Republics, their laws, and constitutions, are erected; to fix and establish those principles as the basis of all laws, constitutions, and governments, which forever hereafter shall be formed in the said Territory, and for the establishment of States and permanent government therein," &c. And among these articles, the third one reads in this manner:

"Religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged."

Here, sir, religion and morality are recognized as being necessary to good republican institutions. Certainly, sir, they do not mean by religion and morality Mormonism and polygamy.

But again, sir, this very ordinance of 1787 was adopted, word for word avowedly on its face, by Congress, as an ordinance for the government of the Mississippi Territory, then containing the embryo State now in part represented by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Phillips,] and made it the law there too, "excepting the last article forbidding slavery," which exception was made in consequence of the contiguity of that great Territory to slave States, and of its being deemed a necessary outlet for their emigration. But the whole of the six articles, excepting the last, was adopted and applied in so many words to that Territory, together with its declaration that religion and morality are the basis of free republican institutions; and with its provisions for the support of schools and education.

It seems, sir, that this Government once had something to do with these subjects. Congress once thought that Territories could not be properly fitted to become republican States without morality. If the learned gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Stephens] will take the trouble to look into Heeren's introduction to his Political History, he will be satisfied the author is right, when he says, the reason why the civilization of Asia is so much behind that of Europe is owing to the institution and prevalence of polygamy, which spoiled the domestic relations, and occasioned more evil than slavery itself, because one was the parent of the other.

Sir, polygamy, everywhere, spoils the domestic relations, breaks up the family circle, which is the school of morality, of social order, and of republican liberty. But, sir, as with individuals, so it is with a people, always going from one extreme to another. A few years ago the Mormons were driven out of the State of Illinois by violence, and the two Smiths were shot in a base and cowardly manner in prison, from general disgust with their institutions. The whole society was soon afterwards expelled from the State. Now that they are gone away into the western woods, and got homes in another place, at a great distance from ourselves, we do right not to persecute; but by no means, with our Government patronage, let us encourage and strengthen such institutions; for, when in the course of the increase and settlements of our people in the western domains, they come to be neighbors, or fall in contact with Mormons, they will certainly have more trouble. All their institutions are at variance with ours. I would therefore pass no law to build up or strengthen them. I shall vote in favor of retaining the provision in the bill for these reasons. It seems to me very unwise in the House of Representatives to allow the idea to go abroad to the world that we are recognizing and patronizing such institutions by bounty laws, institutions at war with all true liberty and the moral sentiment of Christendom.

Mr. MILLSON. I desire to say but a very few words, for the purpose of explaining the reasons why I shall vote to strike out the proviso; and it seems to me that the very reasons urged by gentlemen who are in favor of retaining it, should have brought them to an opposite conclusion.

The proviso declares "that the benefits of this act shall not extend to any person who shall now, or at any time hereafter, be the husband of more than one wife."

Now, sir, I am unwilling that the statute-books of this Confederacy shall contain the admission that anywhere, within the reach of our laws, an institution exists under which a man is allowed to be at one time the husband of more than one wife. Sir, this proviso would be a confession of the weakness and powerlessness of Congress. Have we no further control over those who would establish this profligate institution in a Territory belonging to the United States than by withholding from them largesses and benefits? Have we not the right to apply to them our criminal legislation? I trust, sir, we shall never make such an acknowledgment of our feebleness; never confess our want of authority to strike at the root of the evil, and punish, if necessary, the perpetrators of these offenses against decency and law.

But how can a man be truly said to be the husband of more than one wife? Our laws acknowledge the right to have but one; and every second and further matrimonial contract, the wife being still alive, is simply null, and does not raise the female to the dignity of a wife. No man, then, in any Territory subject to our laws, can have more than one wife; and if, in the Territory of Utah, a man may, as this proviso seems to suppose, have more than one wife, it is only because Congress establishes or consents to such a law. We have reserved to ourselves the right to revise the statutes of the Territorial Assembly of Utah, and have declared that all acts disapproved by us shall be null and void. There can be no statute in Utah allowing a plurality of wives, except by the consent of Congress; and until Congress gives that assent—and it has not done it yet—there can be only one wife who can legally hold that relation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I was surprised to hear just now, what I learned then for the first time, from the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Disney,] that the Legislative Assembly of Utah has already provided, or attempted to provide, for the legalization of polygamy. I beg leave to call the attention of the Committee on Territories to this act of the Legislature of Utah. I take it for granted that the legislative acts of that Territory have been sent to Congress, for the purpose of being revised, as provided for in the law organizing that Territory. If so, sir, it devolves upon the Committee on Territories, to whom the duty belongs, to lose no time in bringing this subject to the notice of the House. I trust they will act promptly and decidedly.

Allow me, Mr. Chairman, to suggest that a grave responsibility rests upon us, as a moral people, as a people partaking of the civilization of the nineteenth century, to do all that may be incumbent upon us to repress the shocking licentiousness which is prevailing in a Territory of the United States subject to our control, and whose laws must undergo the supervision of Congress.

I, for one, have never surrendered, and I will not agree to surrender, the control of Congress over the legislation of the Territories. And the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GIDDINGS] made an incorrect statement this morning, when he said that no southern gentleman in this House had yet spoken who had not ridiculed the right of Congress to interfere with the domestic institutions of a Territory.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I stand corrected.

Mr. MILLSON. I know many southern gentlemen who, in the recent debate, have, as I myself have done, protested against this doctrine—a doctrine which was, only a very little while ago, known as “squatter sovereignty,” but which, in the more euphonious and refined vocabulary of the present day, is designated as “popular sovereignty.” I believe that this Government has full control over the legislation of the Territorial Assembly, and full authority to annul any law which the people of the Territory, in their legislative capacity, may undertake to enact. I do not pretend to say that we can deprive them of any of their natural or personal rights; but such powers as they derive from us are always subject to our supervision and control. All their political power—all their legislative authority—is derived from Congress, and it can be derived from no other source. And I, for one, will never abandon these principles.

Sir, if it be true, as I was grieved to hear the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] say it is, that it has been attempted to legalize this licentiousness in the Territory of Utah, then we shall be partakers of the shame and of the disgrace, if we fail to discountenance and repress it. If we, either directly or indirectly, give it our sanction, we shall be held responsible for it. May not the very language of the proviso be construed as an indirect sanction of it? I ask gentlemen who have spoken upon this subject, and who, as I infer from their remarks, agree with me in sentiment, I ask them if there is not some reason for apprehending that if this proviso be adopted, declaring that land shall not be given to those having more than one wife, some judicial authority, I know not where, may torture it into a sanction by Congress of the crime of polygamy in the Territory of Utah, by recognizing the possession, in one man, of more wives than one? For these reasons I shall vote to strike out this proviso.

Mr. PARKER. I approve entirely of the remarks expressed by my friend from Virginia who has just taken his seat, in reference to the vile character and consequences of polygamy; but I do not agree with him that this proviso should be stricken out of the bill. I think it should be retained for precisely the reason which the gentleman has given for striking it out. The gentleman says that it is impossible for a man to have more than one wife.

Mr. MILLSON. I said legally.

Mr. PARKER. Very well; that it is impossible for any man to have legally more than one wife. Does the gentleman mean to say that Virginia could not make polygamy legal within the limits of that State?

Mr. MILLSON. I do not.

Mr. PARKER. Then the gentleman would confine his action exclusively to the Territories. Now, sir, how can we go to the Territory of Utah to prevent polygamy? How can we prevent it by any direct legislation? Who will enforce the law if you make one? Here, then, is a great, if not an insurmountable, difficulty. I am, therefore, in favor of retaining this proviso in the bill, for the purpose of discouraging the evil there. I am in favor of refusing to grant to men who practice polygamy any portion of the public domain. It is perfectly legitimate and proper, in my view of the case, that it should be retained. I desire its retention expressly for the purpose named.

My friend from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] thinks that, by retaining this provision, we infringe upon the Constitution; for we have no right to adopt any legislation which may look to a religious test. Sir, what religious test is there here? If there be a religious test here, there are other religious tests in the bill. Go back to the preceding section of the bill, and you will find that we make a discrimination between married and unmarried men. What is there here? We make a discrimination here in regard to men who have each more than one wife. That is all. Why that discrimination between the married man and the man who has no wife? It is simply because we wish to invite to those Territories men with their families. If that be the case, and it be a legitimate object, cannot we discourage the population of these Territories by those who have two, or a dozen, or twenty wives, and rebuke the practice of the crime of polygamy? It seems to me to be perfectly legitimate. No provision of the Constitution is infringed.

There is a large class of the community residing in most of the States of this Union who look on all marriage, if not as illegitimate, at least as impolitic. I have reference to the Shakers. Now, would it not be legitimate for us to make provision in a bill of this character, with a view to the population of the Territory, if we thought they were a class of people which ought to be invited to the Territories, giving them a bonus for going there, as you give a bonus to married men in preference to unmarried men? But I need not enlarge; I am for retaining this provision, and I do not understand this matter in the light which the gentleman from Virginia does. All our laws recognize the existence of such a thing as bigamy—the having of two wives—or being twice married.

Mr. MILLSON. The gentleman is too good a lawyer not to know that the first marriage is the only legal one, and that there can be but one wife.

Mr. PARKER. That is all true. I mean not to cavil about terms. We are talking about facts, about the man who, in the contemplation of the law of Indiana and the law of Virginia, has, as we say, two wives, who is guilty of bigamy. We know that he can have but one legal wife. Why, the gentleman might as well tell you that there was no such thing under the old patriarchal law as polygamy.

This thing can exist in fact, and the question is, shall we countenance it in this law, or not? I am against it tooth and nail; and I will go with the gentleman, when the laws of Utah are submitted to us, to put a quietus on this feature of them to the full extent of our power. It is our duty as a moral and Christian people to do so. I am for retaining the provision. I look on it as a wholesome thing. It will work well. I do not wish to invite to that Territory, or any other Territory of the Union, any man who goes there with a multitude of wives in his train. All our elementary law writers on the question of bigamy have placed this matter, with all its pernicious consequences, in bold relief; in a relief, too, which has met with the sanction of all the civilized and christianized world. We ought not now attempt by our legislation to retrace the steps not only of all these States but all the moral world. I know that this practice is tolerated in Utah, but it is an anomaly among civilized and Christian people.

I am for retaining this provision, then, for the purpose of discountenancing bigamy. As I said before, there is no constitutional difficulty in my way any more than there is in making the discrimination between the married and unmarried man, the former having one half section of land and the latter only one quarter. I would go further, and say that the man who has more than one wife should have no land at all.

Mr. BENSON. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the law organizing the Territory of Utah. If I understand the subject before the committee, we are acting upon a bill relating entirely to the Territory of Utah. We are not talking about a Territory where the laws are different from what they are in Utah. We have been told here repeatedly to-day—we have been told by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DISNEY], who says he has examined the laws of Utah—that those laws do recognize the right to have more than one wife. Now, I want the committee to look, for a single moment, at the act organizing the Territory of Utah, and see how the law stands on this subject. Gentlemen who will look at the sixth section of that act, will find how and where the legislative power is to be exercised. I will read it:

“That the legislative power of said Territory shall extend to the rightful subjects of legislation, consistent with the Constitution of the United States and the provisions of this act; but no law shall be passed interfering with the primary disposal of the soil; no tax shall be imposed upon the property of the United States; nor shall the lands or other property of non-residents be taxed higher than the lands or other property of residents.”

And now comes the clause to which I ask particular attention:

“All the laws passed by the Legislative Assembly and Governor shall be submitted to the Congress of the United States, and, if disapproved, shall be null and of no effect.”

Now, I ask the lawyers of this House whether, when a law has gone through the regular course of enactment in the Territory of Utah, it is not the law of the land in Utah until it is disapproved by Congress?

Several MEMBERS. Certainly.

Mr. BENSON. Then if such is the fact, I ask if it is not legal in the Territory of Utah for a man to have more than one wife? I agree entirely with what the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] has said. But I ask if you are going to shut your eyes to the fact that there are such laws existing in the Territory of Utah, and strike out this proviso because you are not willing to acknowledge, by implication, that there are any such laws in existence? Sir, we know the fact; the world knows it; the Congress of the United States knows it, for it has been proclaimed upon this floor again and again, that there are such laws in Utah. And with your eyes wide open to this fact, are you going to strike out this proviso, and say to the people of Utah, of every other Territory, and to the world, especially with this new doctrine of squatter sovereignty which seems to be prevailing in some quarters, though, I desire to be thankful, not in others, that you regard such laws and such a practice, in this Republic, of no sort of consequence?

Mr. MILLSON, (interrupting.) The gentleman from Maine and myself evidently aim at the same end. We have the same views. We merely differ as to the proper mode of accomplishing a common object.

Mr. BENSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLSON. I merely wish to make a suggestion to him. I am aware, and it was for that reason that I said what I did, that the act organizing the Territorial government of Utah provides that the acts passed by the Territorial Legislature shall be transmitted to Congress, and if disapproved, shall be null and void. If disapproved, then they are null and void, not only from the moment when they are disapproved, but the disapproval dates back and declares those laws to have been null and void.

Mr. BENSON. Oh, no, that would be a kind of ex post facto legislation. They are laws until disapproved by Congress.

Mr. MILLSON. I think not.

Mr. BENSON. The statute says so. That is all I can say about it.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. It has been so decided with reference to our Territory.

Mr. BENSON. Let me ask the gentleman from Virginia one question. Suppose Congress should declare that polygamy, or a plurality of wives should not be allowed, by disapproving of the laws of Utah which now allow it, could you go back and punish for bigamy, or polygamy, those persons who have had more than one wife under the laws existing in Utah?

Mr. LANE. Will the gentleman from Maine yield me the floor for a single moment?

Mr. BENSON. I will be done in a single moment, and then I will yield the floor altogether. I wish simply to say to the committee that I hold it to be the duty of Congress to put their hands upon crime of this kind wherever they can find it. But we have been told by certain gentlemen upon the floor, that we are not to punish crime, and that we are to close our eyes to its commission. I do not believe in any such thing. We punish, most assuredly, piracy, and there has been, if I am informed aright, in the other branch of Congress, a proposition to confer upon the President power to suspend certain laws for the punishment of crime.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I certainly advocated no such doctrine.

Mr. BENSON. I do not refer to the gentleman from Georgia, but to the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. PHILLIPS.] I took notes of his remarks at the time, and I understood him to say that we had no right to regulate the morality of the country.

Mr. STEPHENS. I desire to put the gentleman from Maine right, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. BENSON. I am happy to be put right at all times.

Mr. STEPHENS. Power is conferred upon Congress by the Constitution of the United States to punish crimes for violation of law. Congress has got no right to go beyond that. Congress can punish individuals for violating the post office laws. Power is given to them for that purpose. Congress can punish individuals for trespasses upon the public domain. Power is given to them for that purpose. Congress may define any line of duty upon subjects within its constitutional limits, and point out what shall be the penalty for a violation of it; and such a violation would be an offense coming within the class of which I spoke. I deny that Congress can go beyond that.

Mr. BENSON. One line of duty in which Congress may punish crime—and I call that crime which is held so in the thirty-one States of this Union—is by withholding its donations. This bill says "donate."

Mr. STEPHENS. Can there be any crime where there is no law? If there be no law in Maine against bigamy, would it be just to punish for a violation of the principle? And if there be no law in Utah against polygamy, is it not manifestly unjust to make such an unjust discrimination as is proposed? There is no law there against polygamy, and hence there is no legal crime of which your courts can take jurisdiction.

Mr. BENSON. I was remarking when I was last interrupted, that the Congress of the United States are about to confer a donation upon these people; and can they not withhold this donation if sound morality requires it? They should administer this Government according to those principles which shall promote the morals of the country. Now, I ask where there are thirty-one States of this Union that punish this multiplicity of wives as a crime, will you treat those who practice this in Utah so tenderly, and donate to them your public lands? I will agree with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] if there is no law in Utah against a multiplicity of wives, that it is not a crime by law there—that is a self-evident proposition. At the same time the practice is to be discountenanced in all proper ways—and I hold this to be one—do not give them your public lands according to the provisions of this bill. Let them first conform to the laws upon this subject, so important to the common welfare, which prevail in every State in the Union, and then it will be time to confer upon them the gift of your public domain.

We have not been officially informed of it, but it is universally conceded that polygamy exists among the citizens of Utah. Now, then, I ask again, are we to shut our eyes to this fact, and make a donation to those who live in violation, not of the law of Utah, but of the law of every State in the Union, and I may add, of the law of God? I would make no such donation as that—nor am I willing to close my eyes to the fact which exists, while I know that it does exist—and I therefore am opposed to the striking out of this proposition.

Mr. WALSH. There have been some very singular things done and said here, Mr. Chairman, during this debate. The best, and, in my estimate, the most effectual method of preventing polygamy, is for every young man, at the earliest opportunity after he finds that he can support a wife, to procure one. [Laughter.] Now, sir, if my friend and colleague on the opposite side of the House, [Mr. SIMMONS,] had adopted this plan, and if others had adopted it—for I believe he still remains a bachelor, and, therefore, he ought to be the last man in the world to grumble about other men taking two or more wives, as he has not yet taken one himself—if, I say, my colleague and others, had pursued that course, there would have been no such thing as an opportunity afforded to any man to monopolize wives. [Laughter.]

There is another thing connected with this debate, Mr. Chairman, which has struck me as remarkable, and it is this: that there have been several gentlemen on this floor speaking upon this subject, who remind me of a hurdy-gurdy, set to a single tune. Not a solitary question can be brought up in this House that we do not hear a driveling sermon on abolitionism, and that we do not witness an attempt to goad a large portion of the members of the House into a state of ill-feeling, which can be productive of no good to us and no good to the country.

Mr. Chairman, in reference to the provision under consideration, I am in favor, most emphatically, of striking it out of the bill. I think the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] has given incontrovertible reasons why it should be stricken out. And I see no propriety in us at this time, when this flourishing Territory is progressing towards the condition of a populous State; I see no propriety, I say, in our creating a state of feeling there which may tend to produce irritation and injury. The history of this people, from the earliest period of their settlement, has been one of outrage, wrong, bloodshed, and oppression; and now that they have removed far beyond reach of the narrow prejudices and bigotry of those surrounding them, the system of oppression and wrong under which they suffered should not be revived. I believe that, with the single exception of this conventional idea of theirs, of their right to have more wives than one—and that is only a simple difference of opinion between them and us—the Mormons are as good citizens, and as faithful to the Constitution and the Republic, as the citizens of any other State or Territory in this Republic.

Sir, time, example, good precepts, and persuasion, will do more to remove polygamy from that Territory than all the laws you can pass here. Do nothing. I would impress upon the members of this House the propriety of doing nothing to insult the prejudices of a people already goaded into madness by the wrongs and oppressions which they suffered before they reached their present location. They are rapidly gaining in strength and numbers. They will soon become one of the most powerful sects—you must not shut your eyes to the fact—in this country; and I trust that the liberality of this House will not disgrace itself by indorsing so narrow and contemptible a species of legislation.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. I desire to have the debate upon this bill closed. Every gentleman must see that unless debate is closed very soon upon this bill, we shall not be able to act upon the territorial business which is before the House this week; and this week is the extent of time set apart, by the order, for that purpose. I therefore move that the committee rise, with a view to offer the usual motion to close debate.

Mr. LANE. I appeal to gentlemen to allow this motion to pass. We have other important bills relating to the Territories which have not yet been touched. We have no certainty of time for this purpose beyond the present week; and that we may not be deprived of the benefits of that legislation, so important to the Territories, I hope the committee will rise, and close the debate upon this bill now.

The question being upon the motion of Mr. LANE,

Mr. CAMPBELL demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. TAYLOR, of Tennessee, and BAILEY, of Georgia, appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 79, noes not counted.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman [Mr. PHELPS] reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the special order, being bills relating to the organized Territories, and more especially House bills Nos. 316 and 317, and had directed him to report bill No. 316, with sundry amendments thereto, to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass; and that upon bill No. 317 they have come to no conclusion.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. I move the usual resolution to close debate upon the (No. 317) bill last under consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union in five minutes after its consideration shall be next resumed in committee. The question was taken; and the motion agreed to.

Mr. LANE. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was put; and the motion agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. PHELPS in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill to establish the office of surveyor general in Utah, to grant donations to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question pending is upon the motion of the gentleman from Utah to strike out the last proviso in the third section of the bill under consideration.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Upon that motion I demand tellers.

Mr. KERR. Before the question is taken upon the motion to strike out, I will take the liberty of expressing the reasons by which I shall be governed in the vote I shall give upon this motion. I do not propose to detain the committee long. I regard the crime of bigamy—

A MEMBER. Polygamy.

Mr. KERR. No, sir, bigamy. That is bad enough. I say I regard the crime of bigamy as a very heinous one. I am not disposed to give it any countenance upon the part of this Government. But, sir, its practice has been acknowledged in the Territory of Utah, ever since the organization of the Territory. It was known at the time of its organization that it did exist, and then was the time for Congress to meet the question directly, and take the necessary measures for its prevention. But, sir, Congress did not meet the question in that form, at that time. And I say it is our manifest duty to meet it directly—now. Congress possesses the power of supervising all laws made by a Territorial Legislature; and I say it is clearly the duty of Congress to exercise that power by annulling any law which may exist in that Territory that countenances or sanctions such a crime.

But I am in favor of striking out this provision for another reason. This is a homestead bill; and while we are giving away the public lands to all who come from Europe and elsewhere, to fugitives from justice, and to everybody who will go there and take it, I say it will be doing injustice to these people to refuse to give it to them. Congress knew of the existence of polygamy among these people, when they organized the Territory, and used no means for its suppression. These people, when they took possession of a portion of the territory of this Republic, practiced polygamy openly as no crime; and I say that, under these circumstances, it is unjust to exclude them from the benefits of this provision when they are extended so freely to outcasts from Europe, and fugitives from justice.

Another reason by which I shall be governed in the vote I shall give upon this provision, is that mentioned by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON,] and, I believe, by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WALSH,] that, by the adoption of any such proposition, we are recognizing, in the form of law, that in this country the crime of polygamy does actually exist. I am opposed to the provision for this reason. When we are taking hold of this crime, I propose to take hold of it directly, as we should of any other crime. By the laws, I believe, of some of the States of this Union, polygamy is a crime punishable with death. I believe that punishment suited to the crime, and I believe it the duty of this Government to prescribe that penalty for its commitment, wherever it exists in the Territories over which the Federal Government has jurisdiction.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I wish to oppose the amendment. What time have I to do it in?

The CHAIRMAN. The general debate has not yet closed on the bill, but it will in two minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will take the two minutes, and then five minutes afterwards, if I can. I think the proper distinction is not made by gentlemen who argue in favor of striking out the proviso. This land proposed to be donated is the public domain, and belongs to the people of the States in common. If, then, we give them to actual settlers who will cultivate, we have a right to impose the terms; and we have the power, I hold, to say that "you shall not have this public domain as a gift, if you intend to use it to perpetuate that system which is recognized throughout all the States as a high offense against public morals."

The CHAIRMAN. The time fixed for the closing of the general debate has now arrived. The amendment pending is to strike out the last proviso of the third section.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then I move that after the words "one wife" there be inserted the word "living."

I am opposed to the striking out of the provision referred to for the reason which I have given. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] assumes the ground that Congress is undertaking to define such acts as shall be regarded as crimes, and to punish them as such in the Territory of Utah. Such is not the fact. I do not know that I should disagree with him very much as to the power of Congress to enact a criminal code for Territories, but I do contend that the people of that Territory, or those who would settle on our lands, have no right to ask of us a bonus in favor of extending a system of wrong doing or revolting crimes, in the shape of donation of public lands. If we donate the lands we have the right, and it is our duty to impose such terms and restraints, as will lay deep and strong in that far distant land the foundation of sound morals. In what relation do we stand to the Territory of Utah? Why, sir, a very high State paper, which has recently come before the other branch of this Congress and the public, (the President's veto of the bill granting lands to establish hospitals for the indigent insane)——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is not in order. He must confine his remarks to the amendment under consideration.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I can refer to a State paper which has appeared before the public without saying anything of what has occurred in the other branch of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman misunderstands the point of order made by the Chair. We are now under the five-minute debate, and the gentleman must confine his remarks to the amendment; they must be relevant to it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. My amendment is to insert after "one wife" the word "living," so that the section will read "one wife living." If his wife dies, then he is at liberty to take another, and still have the benefits of the act; but I am opposed to the settler having more than one wife living. I propose to insert two provisions in order that he may be confined to one for the reasons which I have given.

As I said before, it is regarded as a high moral offense in every State of this Union, and we stand to these Territories, if there be any force in the authority of a high State paper which has appeared before the country this morning, (the veto message,) in the relation of guardian, or parent, or proprietor of the public domain, and we have a right to impose the terms on which that public domain shall be given either to corporations, associations, or individuals. I will never agree, as one of the Representatives of the people who own the soil, to give it as a bonus for settlement to those who disregard all the moral restraints which they themselves enforce in their own State governments, through the instrumentality of strong penal enactments.

Mr. GOODRICH. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL,] and let me say that I am not so much troubled about invidious distinctions as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR] seems to be—while I say that I am, at the same time, ready to cooperate with him in any direct mode of striking at this crime, as he calls it. But strike at this crime as directly as you may, you will not reach it so effectually as you will by retaining this proviso in the bill. Annul by law the act authorizing polygamy, and how will you secure the practical enforcement of your law? Annulled as that act may be by the law of Congress, the people of Utah will still practice polygamy. I therefore want this proviso retained for the purpose of reaching that people, if they are not already beyond the reach of moral considerations, by carrying the moral power of this Government there, so far as we have the power of legislating on the subject. We derive that power just as we derive the power in the States to reach any evil. Polygamy, as all agree, is a great moral, social, and political evil. I am ready to strike it down in any way, directly or indirectly. I would reach it by carrying the moral power of this nation out to Utah Territory, and saying to the people of that Territory, that any man who practices this crime of polygamy shall not receive the Government bounty—shall not have the land which we give to other people. I would touch them through their interests in that way. I would reach this evil just as we reach the great evil of intemperance in the States. We legislate in the States upon the subject of intemperance, some by the application of the Maine law, and others by other means. I am for the Maine law; others are in favor of other measures. But we strike down intemperance as an evil, and so would I strike down this evil, if these people are not beyond the power and influence of moral considerations. I wish to put into this bill a moral power against polygamy. I want to say to the people of Utah that they shall not receive grants of the public lands as other people receive them, if they continue in the practice of this crime.

The question was then taken on Mr. CAMPBELL's amendment; and it was rejected.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it is proposed to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That the benefits of this act shall not extend to any person who shall now, or at any time hereafter, be the husband of more than one wife.

Now, the proposition before the House——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must remind the gentleman from Tennessee that debate is exhausted upon that amendment. The gentleman from Tennessee, if he desires to submit any remarks, must offer some amendment, and his remarks must be confined strictly to an explanation of such amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR. I propose to strike out the word "one," and insert in its place the word "two," so that it will provide that the benefits of this act shall not extend to any person who shall now, or at any time hereafter, be the husband of more than two wives.

I am opposed to striking out this proviso; and as I expect soon to be called to vote upon it, I desire to give my reasons for offering the amendment I have. I regard the proposition to strike out the whole proviso as offering a premium to the polygamists of the whole world to settle in that Territory. I desire to know if the American Congress intends, by its action, to offer a premium to bigamists and polygamists of the whole world, to come and take possession of a great, widespread, and fertile Territory of this Government——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee, under the rules, is required to show why one wife should be stricken out and two wives inserted. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAYLOR. I will speak to that point directly. While the position of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] may be correct, I will not stop to discuss the distinction he makes between mala prohibita and mala in se. Yet I submit to this committee whether the Government, through this Congress, is to offer a bonus for the establishment and perpetuation of evil in that Territory? This is the point involved in controversy.

In a very few years, under the operation of the proposition to strike out this proviso, you will have that Territory peopled by polygamists, who will inevitably outnumber those who may settle there opposed to polygamy. What then? The first step will be to apply for admission into the Union. If you admit them, what then? By your action, your initiatory action, in encouraging settlements in that country, you, the American Congress, have virtually established these polygamists—this crime and vice of the dark ages. Is the American Congress prepared, for the sake of technicalities, to establish this principle? I cannot vote for the proposition to strike out this proviso. These are briefly my reasons, among others, why I cannot vote to strike it out.

With the permission of the committee, I ask leave to withdraw the amendment I offered.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. BALL. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. HAVEN. Is the amendment last offered disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not yet disposed of, and is still pending.

Mr. HAVEN. I do not wish to speak in opposition to the amendment, but I simply desire to perfect the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair assigned the floor to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON,] understanding that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BALL] did not wish to speak in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. MILLSON. I oppose the amendment for the reason I have opposed the whole proviso. My idea is that we ought to treat the subject in a more solemn manner than we are disposed to treat it by the amendment under consideration.

I had prepared, Mr. Chairman, a further amendment to the proviso, declaring that every law, and every part of any law, that may have been heretofore passed by the Territorial Legislature of the Territory of Utah establishing or allowing bigamy or polygamy, is hereby disapproved, and declared null and void. But upon consideration, and a few moments' reflection, it occurred to me that it would be better to proceed in this matter with more solemnity. The question is one which demands the solemn consideration of Congress; and the best way to effect this would be the introduction of a joint resolution or bill, having one single object only in view; and that, the annulling of any such laws or regulations in the Territory of Utah. A bill to this end, and not connected with any other measure of legislation, will therefore command the almost unanimous assent of every member, perhaps, in both Houses of Congress. It was for these reasons, sir, and with the view to effect this purpose, that I conceived the idea of introducing such a proviso. I first supposed that it was the appropriate duty of the Committee on Territories to introduce such a joint resolution; but as they have failed to do so, and as no other gentleman has made a move in that direction, I determined to take the first opportunity of annulling this legislation, which has been hitherto allowed to take place in the Territory of Utah.

The CHAIRMAN. No further amendments in order, and the question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. TAYLOR.]

Mr. TAYLOR. If there be no objection, I will withdraw that amendment.

There being no objection, the amendment was accordingly withdrawn.

A MEMBER. What is the state of the question?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BALL] has moved to strike out the section——

Mr. HAVEN. I desire to insert at the end of the section proposed to be stricken out the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

And Congress hereby disapproves of all laws, if any, in the Territory of Utah, that in any way recognize, allow, or enact, that any man may have at one time more than one wife, or that any woman may at one time have more than one husband.

Mr. ORR. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina will state his question of order.

Mr. ORR. My point of order is, that the amendment is not germane to the bill, or to the section under consideration.

Mr. HAVEN. Allow me to submit that this very proviso is legislating in respect to these relations between husband and wife. That is the gist of the proviso itself, and therefore I submit that the amendment is not out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the amendment is not in order under the 55th rule of the House, which provides that no motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration will be admitted under color of amendment. The amendment, as submitted by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HAVEN,] proposes to annul or repeal laws enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Utah. The section under consideration proposes a donation under certain restrictions. That is the difference, and the amendment is not in order.

Mr. HAVEN. I humbly and respectfully desire to make an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question then is: "Shall the decision of the Chair, pronouncing the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York out of order, stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. On that I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL and SEYMOUR appointed.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the Chair state the point?

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition under consideration is the proviso to the third section, which declares that "the benefits of this act shall not extend to any person who shall now, or at any time hereafter, be the husband of more than one wife." The preceding portion of this bill relates to the donation of lands to the settlers in the Territory of Utah. The gentleman from New York proposes to add to this section the amendment which has just been read by the Clerk. The Chair rules that the proposed amendment is not in order, for the reason that it is not germane to the bill; and rules it out of order under the 55th rule, which says:

"No motion or proposition, on a subject different from that under consideration, shall be admitted under color of amendment."

"No motion or proposition, differing from that under consideration, can be admitted under color of an amendment." The proposition under consideration is the donation of lands to actual settlers, and proposes to restrict that donation. The proposition of the gentleman from New York proposes to repeal certain laws now in force in the Territory of Utah.

Mr. HAVEN. I wish to make one suggestion at this point. The proviso itself declares that these lands shall not be given to a man who has more than one wife. My amendment proposes to restrain them from having more than one wife.

The CHAIRMAN. Further debate is not in order. The question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Will it be in order to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. HAVEN] whether the law which he proposes to repeal has ever been before this House?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order. The pending question is simply one of parliamentary law.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

The tellers then took their places; and the question being taken, the tellers reported—ayes 76, noes 50.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained by the committee.

Mr. PARKER. I propose to amend by adding at the end of the proviso the following:

But nothing herein contained shall be taken as implying that bigamy or polygamy can in any manner be sanctioned.

Mr. ORR. I rise to a question of order. The same point of order made on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, which the committee has just decided out of order, applies to this.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and decides the amendment to be out of order.

Mr. READY obtained the floor.

Mr. KERR. I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's appeal comes too late. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. READY] had been recognized by the Chair, and is entitled to the floor.

Mr. READY. I have an amendment which I desire to offer. If, however, the gentleman from North Carolina desires to appeal from the decision of the Chair, I will yield him the floor for that purpose.

Mr. ORR. There is no difference between the application of this amendment and that the committee have just ruled out of order.

Mr. PARKER. There is a marked difference.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the amendment to be out of order. Does the gentleman appeal from his decision?

Mr. KERR. I think the amendment is in order; but I will not appeal.

Mr. READY. I move to amend by adding at the end of the proviso the following:

And that any person who shall at any time have more than one living wife shall forfeit all right to any lands acquired under this act.

My object in presenting that amendment, sir, is to eradicate the evil of polygamy by the roots. [Great laughter.] I regard it as an excrescence on the body-politic. [Renewed laughter.] The proviso to this bill does not reach the evil. You may pass the bill with the proviso, and still the polygamist may indulge in this practice with impunity, afterwards as well as before. What is he to do? You say that if he has more than one wife he shall not be entitled to the benefit of this act. You permit him to avail himself of the benefits of this act, having but one wife, and when he has obtained his three hundred and twenty acres of land from the Government—when he has perfected his title, then you allow him to go and marry fifty wives, if he can find so many to have him. Therefore, I propose this amendment with a view of making a forfeiture of his right to the land which he may have acquired by his grant from the Government, if he shall afterwards indulge in this unlawful practice.

Mr. Chairman, I differ with the gentlemen who seem to be of the opinion that Congress has no right or power to interfere with this subject. Certainly, so far as the constitutional right of this body is concerned, there can be no question. The Constitution declares that "Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States." What are we doing here? Are we not proposing, by legislation, to make certain needful rules and regulations respecting the territory of the United States? We are proposing to dispose of a large portion of this territory. We are making discriminations in disposing of that territory. We are saying that a married man shall be entitled to three hundred and twenty acres, while a single man shall be only entitled to one hundred and sixty acres. And have we not the same right to provide that a man who has committed a crime shall not be entitled to the benefits of this law? Suppose that a man had forfeited the right to the protection of his Government by the commission of crimes; suppose that he had been convicted of infamous crimes, crimes which, in the language of law, rendered him infamous, deprived him of certain great rights, the right of citizenship, the right of suffrage, the right of testifying as a witness, the right of holding offices of honor and trust, would it not be as competent, under the Constitution, for Congress, in passing laws to dispose of this territory, to say that such a man should not be entitled to the benefits of this law? Certainly, sir.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. I move to strike out the word "act," and in lieu thereof to insert the word "section." It seems to be the intention of the committee to exclude from the benefits of this act all persons who may be in the category of a polygamist. The sixth and seventh sections of the act provide for the operation of the preemption law. The language employed in this proviso would exclude all persons in the Territory with more than one wife from the enjoyment of the preemption privilege, from the right of entering or purchasing land, which I suppose is a larger exclusion than is designed by those who favor the retention of the proviso.

The proviso is:

"That the benefits of this act shall not extend to any person who shall now, or at any time hereafter, be the husband of more than one wife."

That language, of course, includes the whole act, subsequent sections of which provide for the extension of the preemption privilege, and the power of purchasing public lands. I suppose the object of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, in introducing that proviso, was to exclude the polygamists from these donations, and not to exclude them from the purchase of public land, if they think fit to pay for it. It seems to me, therefore, that the word "section" should be substituted for "bill," in case the proviso is allowed to stand.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment indicated by the gentleman from Michigan cannot be entertained at this moment, as there is an amendment to the amendment already pending. The Chair considered the gentleman from Michigan as speaking in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. READY.]

Mr. KERR. I was about to raise that point. The gentleman from Michigan has not spoken in opposition to the amendment, and I want to oppose it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair felt disposed to indulge the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. KERR. What is the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee?

The Clerk again read Mr. READY's amendment.

Mr. STUART. My amendment will apply as well to that amendment as to the original proviso.

Mr. KERR. Is the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee an amendment to an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending to strike out the proviso, and the gentleman from Tennessee proposes to amend the proviso.

The question was then taken on Mr. READY's amendment; and it was adopted.

Mr. KEITT. I move to amend the proviso by striking out the word "act," and inserting "section" in lieu thereof.

Mr. Chairman, a question has arisen in this debate as to the power of Congress to interfere in the domestic relations of the Territories. I desire to submit a suggestion or two to the committee on that point. If it were an interference with such relations within a sovereign State, there could be no question as to the incompetency of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, the gentleman from South Carolina is not confining himself within the rule.

Mr. KEITT. I merely desire to throw out some suggestions for the consideration of the committee. You propose now to interfere in the domestic relations of these Territories. You say that no man shall have two wives. Where do you get the power to do that? In fact, where do you get the power to legislate at all for the Territories? The right to acquire carries with it the right to govern, you say. But to what limitations is the right to govern subjected? To all the restrictions and limitations contained in the Federal Constitution. The power to legislate is, at best, an implied power; and all such powers should be used with great caution. Now, if Congress has a right to say that no man in the Territories shall have more than one wife, may it not say that no man shall have a wife at all? If it can prescribe the number of wives, may it not altogether abrogate the marital relation?

I ask the question for information. If Congress can determine that there shall be no polygamy, may not Congress also determine that there shall be no marriage union whatever? Cannot Congress go a step further, and say that there shall be no parental relation? What power is involved in the decision of this question? Is not sovereignty involved? Is not sovereignty necessarily implicated in the right to arrange and manipulate the vital relations of a community? If so, where is sovereignty lodged? In the inhabitants of the Territory? Sir, I have scarcely even contempt for the piebald doctrine of "squatter sovereignty." Is it in the Federal Government? This assumption of power would aggrandize this Government with a ruthless, overshadowing, and aweing central despotism. Where is it, then? In the people of the several sovereign States.

If, then, this exercise of power appertains to sovereignty, how will you reach the evil alluded to? The declamation of gentlemen may bubble up, but it will never moisten the roots of any constitutional right. In truth, sir, an exigency has arisen which was never contemplated by the framers of the Constitution. To meet this, you propose to swell the powers of Congress by construction. Do this, and you will soon burst the bands of a Federative Union, and weld the fragments of the Constitution into a consolidated despotism. The first step in this always is an amplification of power by construction. Sir, I think polygamy a burning shame upon any community. I abhor all trifling with the marital tie; all conjugal licentiousness; and I will extirpate this disgraceful evil as quickly and as sharply as any man, if I can but see the power in Congress to do it. All I ask is for gentlemen to show me this power.

Again, how do gentlemen propose to accomplish this purpose? By the enactment of laws? How will they be executed? By a jury of the vicinage? Why, every inhabitant is a Mormon. He will screen the accused, instead of aiding in the execution of your laws. Government can only scourge out this evil by military tyranny. Sir, "to this complexion" your acts must come at last. Now, sir, will this justify an assumption of power? I again ask for the power of Congress in this matter; and if it is shown to me, I will cheerfully act. I cannot legislate in blindness, both as to power and the mode of reaching an end. I advise gentlemen to look to these, and not to moral and social enormities, in the character of which we all agree.

Mr. DAVIS, of Rhode Island. I would ask the gentleman where Congress gets the power to insert the word "white" in this bill? I should like to have the gentleman answer that question.

Mr. KEITT. I have an immitigable scorn, sir, for abolitionism and all its offshoots; but I will answer the question—

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken on Mr. KEITT's amendment; and it was rejected.

Mr. SEWARD. I move to amend by inserting at the end of the proviso the following words: "unless the marriage shall be legal."

I insist that there is a necessity for the adoption of the amendment I have offered, for this reason: Congress has no power to disturb existing rights. If the people of the Territory of Utah were clothed with authority to pass a statute which recognizes the validity of these marriages, then polygamy is not a crime, and Congress has no power to declare that a crime which has been legalized in the Territory. We might as well attempt, by legislation, to bastardize the issue of these marriages; and we might as well go still further, and change their law of inheritance, and say that the issue resulting from these marriages should not be entitled to inherit the property which belongs to their parents.

It is too late now, after the Government of the United States has sanctioned the existence of this law of polygamy, and given to these people a territorial organization, to fix upon them as a crime that which has been sanctioned by your Government. I hold that the only way to treat this matter, is to bring up the question directly, and assert the power, if we possess it, of repealing the organic law under which polygamy is sanctioned in this Territory. What right have we to fix upon these people as a crime that which has been sanctioned by law? The very highest authority we have declares that there can be no offense where there is no law. Such is the language of the Bible; and it is useless to talk about the existence of crime, when it receives the sanction of your laws. The marriages which have taken place under territorial law are valid; and the rights of these parties cannot be disturbed by the action of Congress. All that we can do is to look to the future, and prevent these marriages, if we consider them immoral.

Mr. KERR. I am opposed to the amendment, of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. SEWARD,] for the reason, as I believe, that it will render the proviso a little more acceptable. I do not see that anything in the world is to be accomplished by the fling that is now being made at the Mormons. Supposing polygamy to be a crime, as all of us pronounce it to be, what will be the effect of an attempt, at the present time, to strike at it? It will drive off the Mormons from Utah to some other portions of the Union, where the homestead bill that we have passed during the present session of Congress will enable them to settle down again comfortably and securely. Congress will thus aid and abet in establishing them elsewhere by the authority given them to go there, and thus indirectly sanction this very institution of polygamy, and do injustice to other communities.

Mr. COX. I would like to understand the provisions of the law of the Territory of Utah in relation to matrimony. Does the law of the Territory on that subject justify a plurality of wives?

Mr. KERR. I hope my friend will pardon me. My time is too limited to allow it to be encroached on. I understood the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DISNEY,] the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, to state this morning, that he had in his possession a copy of the laws of that Territory, in which polygamy was recognized by law there; and I understood the Delegate from that Territory this morning, in reply to a question, substantially to admit that fact.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I was going on to observe that polygamy, whatever it may be, has not been legalized by Congress. It is confined to Utah; it is confined there almost exclusively. The effect of the present proposition, if adopted, will be to diffuse it through the vast extent of the public domain. For, if you virtually prohibit it in Utah by the provisions of this bill—which is a homestead bill on a very restricted scale—the effect will be to drive the Mormons from their present locality, and scatter them broadcast through all the rest of the public domain of this country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as one who is sincerely and decidedly opposed to the prevalence of crime of every sort, and especially to the existence and prevalence of this particular crime, I am opposed to this amendment. If Congress has not got the fearless independence and determination to make a bold and direct onslaught on the institution of polygamy, by providing penalties for the punishment of those guilty of that crime—so long as Congress does not aim at its total suppression—then I say let it stay where it is. Let it be confined to Utah; and do not interpose any enactment of legislation here, the direct tendency of which will be to unsettle again that migratory horde of people—for they are a migratory people, start at a very short notice, and go a very great distance, in order to secure a place where they can enjoy the exercise of their religious rights. I am in favor of giving these Mormons a title in the land, instead of having them cut off as they are by the restriction of this territorial bill.

Mr. SEWARD. If there be no objection, I desire to withdraw my amendment.

There was no objection, and the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I desire to make an inquiry. If I understood aright the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BENSON,] who read the law organizing the Territory of Utah—

The CHAIRMAN, (interrupting.) The gentleman from New York must propose an amendment if he wishes to speak, debate having been exhausted on the original amendment.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. Then I move to amend the section by inserting the words "or who shall not have a wife."

The CHAIRMAN. If I understood the gentleman from Maine, who read the law organizing the Territory of Utah, all laws there passed must ultimately come before the House for approval. Am I right, sir?

Mr. KERR. No, sir; you are not. The gentleman from New York will allow me to explain. I was present when the law was read this morning. Legislation in Utah is the law of the Territory until reversed by Congress.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. Well, Mr. Chairman, I understand that such laws as are passed in the Territorial Legislature are sent to the Speaker of the House, and require the action of this House. Am I right, sir?

The CHAIRMAN. They do not require the action of this House.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. Well, sir, if it is so that the law organizing the Territory of Utah, and the laws which are made in that Territory, are in force until they are superseded by the action of this House, then I am in favor of striking out this proviso, and acting directly on this question when it comes here before us for our sanction or for our reversal.

For that reason I shall vote to strike out this proviso; stating at the same time, that if I can have an opportunity of passing directly upon the question, and entertaining the conviction that I do, that polygamy is hostile to our institutions, and not in accordance with the spirit of the age, I shall vote against it. I shall now vote for striking out the provision in this bill, with the hope, and under the impression that that other question will soon come before us for our direct action.

Mr. BERNHISEL. I desire simply to remark that there is no statute in the Territory of Utah on the subject of polygamy. It is a matter of ecclesiastical law.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. If there is no statute law in Utah upon that subject, and if we shall not, therefore, be enabled to reach this enormity by a direct vote, I shall change my position, and stand by this proviso. If we have the power of donating these lands, we may connect with such donations the conditions upon which they shall be made, since we stand in the position of donors, with power to impose the terms of the grant.

If this practice rests upon ecclesiastical law, and this House has not the power to strike it down, I shall then sustain this proviso, that being the only manner of reaching the evil. I am therefore decidedly in favor of standing by the proviso.

Mr. LYON. Mr. Chairman, this Territorial bill proposes to give, upon certain conditions, one hundred and sixty acres of land to every single man, and three hundred and twenty to every married man, "provided further, that the benefits of this act shall not extend to any person who shall now, or at any time hereafter, be the husband of more than one wife." Against the striking out of this proviso I most earnestly protest. This subject is too lightly considered, I fear, by this enlightened committee. Its great consequence as a precedent makes it needful that our investigations should be thorough, worthy of Christian statesmen and Christian lawgivers. I would appeal to the hearty patriotism of every member present, educated, as they have been, in the principles of the Pilgrim fathers, Cavaliers, and the Huguenots—the descendants of men who fled from profligate, libidinous, and licentious courts to enjoy a virtuous quiet in the unbroken wilderness of the West—if they are willing to see this Government disgrace itself by express or implied legislation, in any way sanctioning the practice of polygamy in this country. Its enormity as a crime has been made the subject of stringent statutes in every State in the Confederacy. Is a premium to be paid, in fertile lands, for the debauching of our daughters and the deluding of our wives? Is this Congress so weak as basely to stoop to such a purpose, reversing all the cherished associations and instructions of our childhood? Is this black cancer sore, this creeping leprosy, to be encouraged?

When the people of Utah are placed on the same basis as the people of other Territories, is not that sufficient, is not that enough? Strike out the clause, and what will be its actual consequences? Individuals will go there whose senses are stronger than their sentiments, whose passions override their principles, and avail themselves of Government bounty, and, like Persians, Hindoos, and Musselmans, fill their houses with the blooming beauties of the North, and the witching women of the South, provided they have wealth or personal attractions to induce such a painful and horrid sacrifice. It has been demonstrated clearly by all political economists, Dr. Franklin, Malthus, and Miss Martineau, that one man is just enough for one woman, the very state the Lord originally intended when he created Adam and Eve. That there should be no monopoly of the fair sex. Yet, when polygamy is tacitly respectabilized by an American Congress, it may not be so difficult to fill with sisters and daughters—those whom God destined for a nobler domestic sphere—an American Harem, a Mormon Seraglio. Sir, there is but one way to kill the cockatrice. It is to break the egg. It is to break the egg.

Let us look for a moment to those countries where polygamy exists—to the feeble and dismembered empire of the Sultan, at present under the protectorate of England and France. Women, according to the Koran, have no immortal souls; women are sold as slaves; women are protected by high walls, guarded by eunuchs, the creatures of appetite, ministering to the most inflammable passions of our nature. The bitter unhappiness of Harem life is little understood—its degradation of woman, its brutalization of man. The innocent young creatures who seek Constantinople, and other cities of the Orient, look upon it as destiny; and bear their lot, prisoned by marble walls, amid the splendid misery of hanging gardens, sparkling fountains, radiant flowers, breathing perfumes, with sad and breaking hearts. And, sir, do you think things are different among the "Latter-Day Saints" in the Mormondom of Utah? No, sir; just as bad. Amid the jealousies of a plurality of wives the respect of parental authority is lost, the gentleness of fireside instruction and hearthstone memories is destroyed. Crime of the most revolting character ensues; infanticide follows as a matter of course as soon as the husband finds he is getting more children than he can support. Sir, human nature is just the same in every land. Do you think Abdul Medjid, with three hundred and seventy wives, has been the father of only five children? It is impossible. [Applause and laughter.] The bodies of dead infants float on the sapphire tide of the Bosphorus, and the Light of many a harem, from the destruction of her offspring, has been lost among the dark shadows of the cypress of Scutari. There is not a drug shop in an Oriental city but sell the means of destroying the new-born. And, being warned of these things, let us not fix this plague-spot upon the route to the golden gate of the Pacific, the western pathway of empire. Posterity, sir, will anathematize this kind of legislation to the latest years of the Republic. We all shall die, crumble to dust, our names be lost in oblivion, but the principle we establish by implication, as the ghost of Hamlet's father, will evidence against us when we have passed away. Let us meet this subject, discourage it, condemn it, reject it. And, sir, it will be an honorable precedent, not for a day, but for all time.

The Mormons have been spoken of as a persecuted people—a martyred people, driven from State to State. With their sorrows I sympathize, for their griefs I grieve; but it seems a curious way to console them for the past by asking Congress to sanction polygamy in the future. It is said that this practice existed in the days of Solomon. True. The running after the strange women of Egypt, the falling from grace in the service of God, was the great reason of Solomon's reign, after a glorious day, ending with a lurid sunset. And from his loins issued that undutiful heir, whose unjust acts was the scourge of Israel; for plurality of wives destroys young men, and debases old. The light of the Prophets went out the night Jesus was crucified. The Old Dispensation was fulfilled, and a day of progress was brought in under the rays of a New Testament, from whose teachings our nationality sprang into existence. Lamartine beautifully said: "Jerusalem was the sepulcher of the Old World, and the cradle of the New." Let us, as Christians, follow and legislate in the doctrines of Christ, not of Joe Smith; let us take the holy Gospel, not the Book of Mormon.

One idea further, in continuation. Point me to a nation where polygamy is practiced, and I will point you to heathens and barbarians. It seriously affects the prosperity of States, it retards civilization, it uproots Christianity. The Ottomans or Turks are the best specimens of this system; and although they import, and have for centuries, the most beautiful women from the mountains of Georgia and of the valleys of Circassia, those free and brainful countries, Tartar maidens from beyond the Caspian, and the Arabian girls from Yemen, yet, effeminacy and weakness, lack of intellectual strength, bodily energy, national decay, is its sad, unfulfilling result, while the Greeks, the Jews, and the Armenians have increased in numbers and enterprise under the iron heel of their merciless oppressors. Who fought the battles of the Turks since the day of Mahomet II.? Under Achmet, Amurath, Selim, and Mahmoud? Under whose leadership did they become a terror to Europe? It was the renegade and apostate Croates, Walcharens, Greeks, Poles, and Hungarians. Under their commands they victoriously floated the Crescent over the battlements of Belgrade, over the towers of Pesth, and by the walls of Vienna. But for the god-like gallantry of Stahrenberg, they might have swept on to the Elbe and the Rhine.

The Moors, after seven hundred years in Spain, were driven hence—though best and bravest of all the Moslems—a nation of polygamists and voluptuaries. Their last stronghold, Granada, fell before the pious sovereigns of Castile and Arragon. I will quote the rebuke given Boabdil el Chico by his heroic mother on his weakness at the surrender of his kingdom. "You do well," said she, "to weep like a woman for what you failed to defend like a man."

It has been doubted by gentlemen whether this clause is constitutional; yet, with the following words in relation to the powers of Congress, tender must be their scruples if they doubt it. Section third of the Constitution of the United States reads as follows:

"Congress shall have power to dispose of, and make all needful rules and regulations respecting, the Territories."

This is one of the necessary regulations—one of the wholesome rules. We are told by the Delegate from Utah [Mr. BERNHISEL] that it is an "ecclesiastical establishment," a religious law, and over such many strict constitutional constructionists believe we have no control. The Thugs or stranglers of men, the Phansears, the Buddhists, who worship Juggernaut, the Seftis, who perform every year human sacrifices, all have a right to practice their abominations under the territorial government of the United States, if once settled here. They all have an equal claim to their "religious establishment," no matter how demoralizing or inhuman, over which it is said Congress has no right to interfere or to control; but that we have power to prevent giving a bounty for its encouragement, I think I have fairly shown. If the many-wifed demoralizers get outnumbered by the virtuous single-wifed, a wise State government may yet be formed that will do honor and credit to the Union. Let us nip this evil in the bud, for the sake of morality, religion, and Christianity. Marc Antony was the first polygamist of all the Romans. Mark his fate. The conqueror of Phillippi, like the builder of the temple of the Lord, fell before the Circean spells of the Syrens of Egypt. The fugitive of Actium died ingloriously in the arms of Cleopatra. This foul system was encouraged by the Emperors Theodosius, Honorius, Arcadius, and by Valentinian, by an express law, in the year 393. When the name of the Roman empire was Ichabod—its glory had departed.

Sir, this is a

"Monster of so frightful mien
As, to be hated, needs but to be seen;
Yet, seen too oft, familiar with her face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace."

By the blessed memory of those virtuous spirits who battled for LIBERTY not LICENTIOUSNESS it should be blotted out, as a stigma, a dishonor, a disgrace, from existence on the soil of NORTH AMERICA. [Sensation, and cries of "Good!" "Good!" "Well done!"]

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I will remark that I agree with my colleague, that in killing the cockatrice you hurt the egg, but which end of the egg? [A laugh.]

Mr. PARKER. Is there an amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The only amendment pending is that offered originally by the gentleman from Utah, to strike out the proviso.

Mr. PARKER. I move to amend the section in the nineteenth line, by inserting after the word "husband" the words "guilty of being," so that the proviso will then read:

And provided further, That the benefits of this act shall not extend to any person who shall now, or at any time hereafter, be guilty of being the husband of more than one wife.

Mr. Chairman, I am gratified to observe that there is, so far as I can learn, but one sentiment in this committee in reference to the crime of bigamy or polygamy. The faces of all of us are against it. I rather incline to the belief that there is not one exception to the rule. I believe even the gentleman from Utah himself is not an exception, for since he has occupied a seat upon this floor, he has not, to my knowledge, said one word in favor of it; and during this discussion he has not opened his mouth in its defense. The question then simply is, in what shape shall we meet this crime. My friend from North Carolina [Mr. KERR] objects to the adoption of this proviso, because it is meeting the question indirectly. He prefers marching directly up to it, and in the common parlance of the day, taking the bull by the horns. He is for declaring at once that polygamy shall be deemed a crime. Well, sir, suppose you do make that declaration, what will be the effect? It has been tolerated in that Territory ever since the Territory was organized; and they do not deem it to be a crime there. It cannot be found in their statutes, and you cannot, by annulling any of their laws, reach it. You cannot reach it in any other way than through the organic law of the Territory; and if in that way you declare it a crime, and the crime is still committed there, how can you execute the law? How are you to execute it?

I say, then, that it is impossible to reach it directly by any law upon your statute book, and that it cannot be more effectually reached than in the form proposed in this section. It can be reached in this manner, and in this form it is perfectly legitimate.

I have introduced this amendment for the purpose of satisfying what seemed to be an objection with the gentleman from New York, and others, who think, as the phraseology of the matter stands, that there is an implication that we can recognize this thing. With the amendment, that implication is destroyed. We declare, in fact, that we regard it as a crime, and thus save the objection on that score. It seems to me that, with such an amendment, we can let this matter stand, and stand with propriety, to discountenance this heinous crime, in the estimation of every member of the committee.

Mr. COBB. I move a pro forma amendment for the purpose of answering some of the remarks made by my colleague in the early part of this day's session. I am glad to find, though an humble member as I know I am, on this floor, that in opposing the striking out of this proviso, strong minds and strong nerves have come to my rescue, notwithstanding the strict scrutiny, and, I might say, the instigation from my distinguished colleague; notwithstanding his attempt to throw the opposition into ridicule, I have been sustained.

The gentleman proposes to discriminate. I would ask him whether we do not discriminate in this very section? Do you hear any complaint from my worthy colleague on that subject? We exclude adult females from the provision of this bill. Why should he parade himself, then, in reference to the exclusion of the Mormons with more wives than one? I say that it is the duty of Congress to prescribe to whom it will give this land, when it makes a clear donation without equivalent. I hope that, after the gigantic appeals we have heard, his conscience, if not his judgment, will lead him to favor the retention of the proviso.

Mr. PARKER. I will withdraw my amendment, if there be no objection, so that the gentleman may offer one which he has, and which I prefer.

There was no objection, and the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. HUGHES. I move to strike out of the proviso all after the word "hereafter," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "live with or have more than one woman as his wife, under color of law;" so that the proviso will read, if the amendment be adopted, as follows:

And provided further, That the benefits of this act shall not extend to any person who shall now, or at any time hereafter, live with or have more than one woman as his wife, under color of law."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee has been adopted, and incorporated in the proviso. Does the gentleman propose to strike any portion of it out?

Mr. HUGHES. I do not propose to interfere with the amendment adopted, but to insert mine as it has been read by the Clerk. I offer the amendment for the purpose of obviating the difficulty of the criticism on this section which has been indulged in by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON.] He and some other gentlemen have raised objections to this section, from the fact that it seems to infer that polygamy legally exists in some portions of the Territory. The provision, as I propose to amend it, would do away altogether with the idea of legality. It merely involves the idea that there is a custom prevailing in the Territory—a claim that, under the color of law, a man may have more than one woman as a wife. But the idea of the legal relation of husband and wife under such circumstances, is entirely done away with in my amendment.

My amendment also substitutes the word "provisions" for the word "benefits," contained in the proviso. I have made that alteration for the reason that it might be inferred from the proviso, unless so amended, that the benefits of the bill are not conferred upon these parties, because it is a sufficient benefit to have more than one wife. I think the word "provisions" is better than "benefits," as I suppose women in Utah are like women all the world over; and there might be some cavil as to whether it was a real benefit for a man to have more than one wife. If Mrs. Caudle's curtain lectures have penetrated into that distant region, and if the curtain lectures there are of the usual duration, it might be a matter of considerable doubt whether it could be called a benefit for a man to have half a dozen wives. [A laugh.] I think my amendment obviates the objections which have been raised by different members of the committee, and I hope it will prevail.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I shall trespass upon the attention of the committee for but a single moment. I do not intend to occupy my five minutes. It seems to me that a great portion of this debate has been altogether outside of the real question before the committee. In the homestead bill, which was before the House some time ago, and which passed the House, certain conditions were imposed. One condition was that the beneficiaries should be white; another condition was that they should reside on the land for the space of five years. Now, I do not understand that either of those conditions implied that we thereby declared that all those who were not white, or who did not live upon the land for five years, were criminals.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine must confine his remarks to the pending amendment submitted by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WASHBURN. I will endeavor to do so. And so I do not understand that, in voting down the amendment of the gentleman from New York, and voting for the bill as it now stands, we declare, directly or indirectly, expressly or by implication, that polygamy is or is not a crime. We only say that, in making these donations, we will impose such conditions as we did in the case of the homestead bill, as we shall judge to be of sound policy. In the homestead bill we imposed such conditions as we thought would be beneficial to the country; but we did not thereby declare that everybody who did not come within those conditions was a criminal. And so in this case; we believe that sound policy and the good of the country, requires that, in making these donations, we should limit them to certain persons, and we may do it. I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUGHES] will not prevail, and that the bill will be passed as it was originally reported.

Mr. PARKER. I wish to make a suggestion to my friend from New York, [Mr. HUGHES.] Inasmuch as the Delegate from Utah [Mr. BERNHART], told us that there was no law regulating this matter in the Territory, I ask the gentleman from New York to accept the following modification: to insert at the close of his amendment the words "under color of law or otherwise."

Mr. HUGHES. I accept the modification. The question was then taken on Mr. HUGHES's amendment, as modified; and it was agreed to.

Mr. LETCHER. I propose to amend the amendment by striking out all after the word "person," in the eighteenth line, so that it will read, "And provided further, That the benefits of this act shall not extend to any person." [Laughter.]

If the amendment I have offered is adopted, this bill will receive my support. If it is not adopted, I shall most certainly vote against it.

Mr. COX. Is the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia in order?

Mr. LETCHER. I do not mean to occupy much of the time of the committee in discussing it. It does seem to me, from all we have heard here—if I can get this provision adopted—that the bill will pass without any opposition at all; and I do not think that there will be half a dozen votes against it. It seems to me, as the time for the discussion of territorial bills is so limited—there being only two days more under the special order—and as the Committee on Territories seem to be hatching bills regularly every night, [laughter,] that the sooner we get through this bill the better, if we mean to have the other bills considered at all.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Is it in order to move an amendment now?

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment would not be in order now, as there are two amendments already pending.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I desire to offer, at the suitable time, an amendment to the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will first be taken on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER.]

Mr. LETCHER. I ask for a division.

Mr. DISNEY. I desire to say a single word. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this is a bill creating the office of surveyor general for the Territory of Utah.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is not confining his remarks to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. DISNEY. I think I am clearly in order. I repeat, that this is a bill creating the office of surveyor general—

Mr. LETCHER. I would ask the Chair if the gentleman from Ohio is in order to debate this question after division is called for?

The CHAIRMAN. A division had been called for by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER;] but the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] rose and addressed the Chair before the division had taken place; and therefore, in the opinion of the Chair, he is in order. It is an every-day practice for gentlemen to rise and address the Chair in this way.

Mr. DISNEY. As I said before, when I was interrupted, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the bill now under consideration is a bill creating the office of surveyor general for the Territory of Utah. The language of the bill itself is imperfect. The phrase "for the benefit of settlers on the public lands" is incorrect. It should be "for making donations of the public lands." But the phraseology of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] would prevent the extension of the benefits of the bill to any person, and would practically defeat the objects of the whole bill.

Mr. LETCHER. That is precisely what I want.

Mr. DISNEY. The gentleman from Virginia says that the defeat of the bill is precisely what he wants by his amendment. This bill provides for the extension of the land system of the United States to the Territory of Utah.

Mr. LETCHER. Very well. Then make a bill for that purpose.

Mr. DISNEY. The bill under consideration is a bill for that purpose.

Mr. LETCHER. No, it is not; it is a bill for a great many other purposes.

Mr. DISNEY. Yes; but the main object of the bill is to extend the land system over the Territory of Utah; to provide for its survey; to create the office of surveyor general. Among the provisions of the bill, it is true that there is one making donations of lands to actual settlers. But yet the gentleman from Virginia limits the bill to the one idea, seeing nothing beyond it, knowing nothing else, but limiting its operation, in his mind, to a single solitary point. And therefore he moves the amendment which, if adopted by the House, will effectually defeat the bill.

Mr. LETCHER. The bill is not, in my mind, limited to a single point. But I told the gentleman from Ohio, in my remarks proposing the amendment, and I have told him since, that I wanted to destroy this bill.

Mr. DISNEY. Very well. I stated so.

Mr. LETCHER. Very well; when you undertake to make a statement in what I am concerned, state the fact as it occurs.

Mr. DISNEY. I shall, sir; and I have done so in this instance.

The gentleman from Virginia says that he desires to defeat this bill. If the House is of the same disposition, then, in the name of God, let it be done rapidly. It is a bill to provide for the extension of the land system of the United States over the Territory of Utah, to cause the Territory to be surveyed, to bring it under the control of the land administration, to create the proper officers to execute this work. The gentleman from Virginia is opposed to all this. I do not know what reason he has for his opposition, but I presume it is about the same as he usually has in opposing measures of every kind.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, is there anything before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments pending; and no further amendment is in order. The question is now on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER.]

A division was called for.

The question was then taken by division. The Chairman announced that there were but forty-four votes in the affirmative; not a sufficient number.

Mr. LETCHER demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. KEITT and CAMPBELL were appointed.

Mr. MEACHAM. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the special order, being business relating to the organized Territories; and more especially House bill No. 317, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. BOYCE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly, at three o'clock and forty minutes, adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 5, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

Mr. BADGER. I wish to suggest a slight amendment to the Journal. It is stated there that I presented a report from Professor Jackson, in relation to the coal fields in North Carolina. There was another report laid in it which I suppose escaped the attention of the proper officer. I wish to add, "and also a report of Professor Emmons, State geologist of North Carolina."

The amendment was ordered to be made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS—PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania, that this is private bill day.

Mr. HUNTER. I gave notice yesterday that I should, to-day, make a motion to change the rule, so as to allow the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. I ask that my motion be taken up.

Mr. SLIDELL. I object.

Mr. CHASE. I wish to ask the Chair if a single objection is sufficient?

The PRESIDENT. A single objection, in the opinion of the Chair, is sufficient to prevent the consideration of that resolution to-day.

Mr. CHASE. Then I object to it.

Mr. HUNTER. Does the Chair decide that, after having given notice, I cannot make the motion to-day?

The PRESIDENT. A resolution was filed yesterday by the Senator from Virginia, to change, for to-day, the resolution setting apart Friday for private bills; but this being private bill day, that resolution cannot be considered without unanimous consent.

Mr. HUNTER. Does the Chair decide that my resolution cannot be called up and considered, unless by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT. That is the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. BADGER. I hope, although this is objection day, that there will not be any objection to my being permitted to do this: I some time ago presented a petition, and had it referred to a committee, but somehow or other, it has got mislaid, and I ask permission to file a duplicate of the petition, for the purpose of having it referred. There being no objection, it was received.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest to the Senator, that an order was made by the Senate, setting apart last Friday for the consideration of adverse reports.

Mr. PETTIT. But the Senate adjourned from Thursday to Monday.

The PRESIDENT. The Senate adjourned over, and no business was transacted on that Friday.

Mr. PETTIT. Is that the order of business now?

The PRESIDENT. No, sir; the Chair is of opinion that the consideration of private bills must be proceeded with.

Mr. CHASE. I wish to inquire whether, inasmuch as the Senate adjourned over on last Friday, and, of course, did not sit on that day, that order, which would have been regularly executed on last Friday if the Senate had sat, is not the order for to-day?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that it is not; but that that order was confined in its effect to last Friday.

Mr. BADGER. I wish merely to suggest this to the President, if his opinion be not clear and decided upon the other point. While the Nebraska bill was under consideration this thing was done; I did it myself. I laid a resolution on the table on one Thursday, to suspend the rule for the next day—Friday. It was taken up, and considered on Friday. It was considered on all hands that it could not be objected to, and for the reason that it had been brought in the day before.

Mr. PETTIT. But there is no such case now. No resolution to suspend the rule was introduced yesterday.

Mr. BADGER. I beg the Senator's pardon; there was. It was read from the Journal just now. A resolution was introduced yesterday.

Mr. PETTIT. I understand that there was a mere notice on the part of the Senator from Virginia, that he would move this morning to suspend the execution of the order setting apart Friday for private bills. He did not submit a resolution to change the form of the previous resolution, or to rescind the rule.

Mr. HUNTER. I first gave notice that I should move to suspend the rule to-day; but it was suggested to me that that notice would not do, and afterwards I changed it to the form of a resolution.

The PRESIDENT. The resolution appears on the Journal of yesterday as having been presented, and, but for the resolution adopted by the Senate, setting apart Fridays for the consideration of private bills, it could be considered to-day.

Mr. CHASE. Precisely; that is it.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not agree with the Chair, but I am not disposed to appeal from his decision. I am willing to submit to any rule, whatever it may be, which is enforced regularly.

Mr. BRIGHT. I am unwilling that the Chair should remain unsupported in his position. It is clearly right. The object of the rule was to set apart Friday for private bills, to the exclusion of all other business. We might waste the entire day now in discussing this point of order. I think the Chair is right in not entertaining the proposition, as the consideration of private bills is the business of this day under the rules.

Mr. BADGER. We all submit.

Mr. WALKER. I was going to submit similar remarks to those made by the Senator from Indiana. But, on the other point on which the Chair has intimated his decision, I wish to make this remark. If I understood the order which was made at a former day, it was, that on the ensuing Friday, the consideration of adverse reports should be the special order. Well, if we adjourned over on that day, it seems to me that there is a continuance of that order on the next private bill day, and that, of course, the special order now comes up. That special order is the consideration of adverse reports. I think, myself, it is very important that we should dispose of them; and that we should now, if it be in the power of the Senate, go into their consideration at this time.

Mr. FISH. I wish to suggest a compromise between these conflicting opinions. This being objection day, I suppose there will be but a very short time occupied with the private Calendar; I hope, therefore, we will go through with the private Calendar, and then I shall ask the Senate to take up the adverse reports to which there shall be no objection. That will probably give some time to the chairman of the Committee on Finance to have the Indian appropriation bill considered.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the day which was set apart for the consideration of the adverse reports having passed, the order is passed over.

Mr. FISH. I hope the unanimous consent of the Senate will be given to take up adverse reports, after we have gone through the Calendar.

Mr. SLIDELL. Does the Senator desire us to take up adverse reports?

Mr. FISH. This being the first Friday in the month, and objection day, I shall ask the Senate to take them up after we have gone through with the Calendar.

Mr. BADGER. That I suppose cannot be done, unless by unanimous consent.

JOHN G. MACKALL.

The PRESIDENT. The first bill on the Calendar is one for the relief of the legal representatives of John G. Mackall, deceased, which has been reported from the Committee on Claims. It is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be paid to the legal representatives of John G. Mackall, deceased, $4,450, as indemnity in full for the loss of his buildings, which were destroyed by the enemy during the late war with Great Britain.

Mr. HUNTER. I think this is one of the bills to which the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] objects.

The PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. PRATT. The Senator from Delaware is not here. He cannot, therefore, object. I suppose no objection can be made by proxy. If the Senator from Virginia has any objection to the bill, and objects to its consideration, of course it must go over; if not, I hope it will be passed.

Mr. HUNTER. I would like to hear the report read.

The report was read.

It appears that, during the late war with Great Britain, a party of militia was, on the 15th of June, 1814, the day on which the destruction took place, posted, by order of a superior officer, close to the dwelling house of the claimant in Calvert county, for the purpose of preventing the enemy landing on the shore of the river Patuxent, and of defending the premises.

It also appears from the testimony of several witnesses, that the person in immediate command and another officer, were seen by the enemy to enter into and come out of the house; that they were dissuaded by the party left in charge in the absence of the proprietor, who was at a distance, in the command of a company of militia, from making resistance, under the supposition that it would be useless, owing to the superior number of the enemy.

The reason given by the enemy for having destroyed the property was, that they had seen the militia in and about the premises, and that one of their marines had been wounded by them. It is true that it does not appear that the house had been occupied any considerable length of time either as a barrack or depository for military stores; but it is clearly shown that the occupation was by order of the officer who was authorized to make it, and the destruction was occasioned by the occupation of the premises in the immediate vicinity, by the American forces which were drawn up to resist the landing of the enemy, while the officers in command were seen entering into and coming from the house by the British officers as they advanced upon it.

Although the facts stated do not bring the claim within the letter of the law of 1816, and the amendment to it of March 3, 1817, as there does not appear to have been a continuous occupation for military purposes, the committee think that it comes fairly within the equitable construction of these acts.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

On the question of ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading, on a division, no quorum voted.

Mr. STUART. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, and Mr. PETTIT called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 13, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Badger, Bell, Benjamin, Clayton, Cooper, Dawson, Foot, Gwin, Norris, Stuart, and Walker—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Bright, Brodhead, Chase, Clay, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Evans, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Hunter, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Morton, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Rusk, Slidell, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, Toucey, Wade, Weller, and Williams—26.

So the motion was lost.

The PRESIDENT. The question is, "Shall the bill be engrossed, and read a third time?"

On a division, the PRESIDENT declared that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. PRATT called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. PRATT. I desire to say only a single word in reference to this claim. It will be recollected that the claim which was passed some Fridays since, was on the ground that it was personal property destroyed, which did not come, because of its being personalty, within the acts of 1816 and 1817. This is the case of a house destroyed.

Mr. HUNTER. This is not in order.

The PRESIDENT. Not at all.

Mr. HUNTER. If the Senator from Maryland is permitted to discuss the question, other gentlemen ought also to be allowed the same privilege.

Mr. WALKER. I should like to hear one of the adverse reports read, as debate is not in order. I should like to know the reasons of some of the former committees who reported adversely.

The PRESIDENT. If there be objection to the consideration of the bill, it will be passed over.

Mr. WALKER. I do not object further than to hear one of the adverse reports.

The PRESIDENT. There is no adverse report among the papers.

The yeas and nays were taken on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading, and resulted—yeas 22, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Chase, Clay, Cooper, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Foot, James, Morton, Pearce, Pratt, Rusk, Slidell, Toombs, Wade, Weller, and Williams—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Clayton, Evans, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Hunter, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Norris, Pettit, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Toucey, and Walker—16.

It was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM G. RIDGELY.

The next was the bill, also reported from the Committee on Claims, for the relief of William G. Ridgely.

It authorizes the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to audit the claim of William G. Ridgely, for tobacco destroyed by the British in 1814, at the warehouses at Nottingham and Magruder's ferry, in Prince George's county, and at Benedict's in Charles county, Maryland, and from such proof as may be exhibited to them, within six months after the passage of this bill, to ascertain the quantity and value of the tobacco destroyed, the amount so ascertained to be paid out of the Treasury.

Mr. NORRIS. This is a class of claims to which I understand the Senator from Delaware objects, and desires to debate. I therefore object to the consideration of the bill.

The bill was accordingly passed over.

DAVID MYERLE.

The next was the bill, reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, for the relief of David Myerle.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to David Myerle the sum of $30,000, with interest thereon, from the 1st of January, 1850, for losses, sacrifices, and expenses incurred by him in testing and establishing the practicability and safety of the process of water-rotting hemp, under the direction of the Navy Department.

The consideration of the bill was objected to by Mr. EVANS, and it was passed over.

MOORE AND HASCALL'S PATENT.

The next was the bill, reported from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, for the relief of Hiram Moore and John Hascall.

Mr. WALKER. That will lead to debate. Let it go over.

The bill was passed over.

JOHN BRONSON.

The next was the bill, reported from the Committee on Claims, for the relief of John Bronson.

Mr. BADGER objected to its consideration, and it was passed over.

ABIGAIL STAFFORD.

The next was the joint resolution, reported from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, explanatory of an act entitled "An act for the relief of Abigail Stafford."

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury, in making payment under the act specified in the title of the bill, to allow interest upon the sum appropriated by that act, according to the principles of equity and justice; that is, at the rate which would have been allowed had the amount been subscribed under the funding system.

Mr. STUART. I should like to hear the report read.

The PRESIDENT. There is no report accompanying the bill.

Mr. STUART. Then I object to its consideration.

BENEDICT J. HEARD.

The next was the bill, reported from the Committee on Claims, for the relief of Benedict J. Heard; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BADGER objected, and the bill was passed over.

UTICA STEAM WOOLEN COMPANY.

The next was the bill from the House of Representatives, reported from the Committee on Claims, for the relief of the Utica Steam Woollen Company.

Mr. BADGER. Let that go over.

Mr. CHASE. I hope the Senator from North Carolina will reconsider his objection. I do not understand that he desires to debate the bill, but that he objects as a sort of punishment for some other objection.

Mr. BADGER. Let it go over.

The bill was passed over.

CAPTAIN VOORHEES.

The next was the bill, reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, for the relief of Captain Philip F. Voorhees, United States Navy; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SLIDELL objected, and the bill was passed over.

OTWAY H. BERRYMAN.

The next was the bill, reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, for the relief of Otway H. Berryman; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to allow and pay Purser Berryman $2,160 02, being the amount of losses sustained by him while commanding and acting as purser of the United States schooner On-ka-hy-e.

The grounds relied upon by Lieutenant Berryman are substantially those which induced Congress to grant relief to Lieutenant Charles G. Hunter. Lieutenant Berryman assumed the command of the United States schooner On-ka-hy-e in October, 1846, under an order from the Navy Department, dated the 20th October, 1846, and he immediately entered upon special duty, and performed active and arduous service in the Gulf of Mexico, to Brazil and Chagres, during twenty-two months, which was terminated by the total shipwreck of the vessel on a sunken reef, in July, 1848. With his command he was ordered to perform the duties of purser to the vessel, and these duties he performed throughout the whole period of his command.

No adjustment of his accounts took place until his return to the United States, when it was found that he had actually expended as purser more money by $2,325 than he could produce the requisite vouchers for. This sum he paid to the Government, and his accounts were balanced accordingly.

He alleges that he has diligently and faithfully kept and disbursed the means entrusted to him as purser, to pay the lawful liabilities of the Government, and that the omission to take and return the proper vouchers for all his expenditures was alone the result of his ignorance of, and his want of practice in, the duties of purser.

The bill was objected to, and was passed over.

SURVEYING BRIG DOLPHIN.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to present a communication from the Navy Department.

Mr. GWIN. That is a very important document, and I move the printing of two thousand extra copies.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair cannot entertain the motion unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. BROWN. What is the paper?

The PRESIDENT. It is a communication from the Navy Department, in compliance with a call of the Senate of the 5th instant, transmitting the report and charts of the cruise of the United States surveying brig Dolphin, Lieutenant S. P. Lee, commanding.

Mr. GWIN. I move that the communication be printed for the use of the Senate. I move also, that two thousand extra copies be printed.

The PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the motion to print will be entertained.

The motion was agreed to; and the motion to print two thousand extra copies was referred to the Committee on Printing.

RICHARD W. MEADE.

The PRESIDENT. The next bill on the Calendar, is "for settling the claim of the legal representatives of Richard W. Meade, deceased," which will be read.

Mr. CHASE. It is unnecessary to take up the time with reading the bill; it is objected to.

The PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

JOHN S. WILSON.

The bill reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims, for the relief of John S. Wilson, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to John S. Wilson, $800, with interest, at the rate of six per centum per annum, from the 17th of May, 1822, in full compensation to him for damages sustained by being evicted of his title, derived by patent from the United States, to certain lands mentioned, in the State of Missouri, by the decree of the Supreme Court of the United States, in favor of the devisees of Auguste Choteau, at the January term, 1835.

Noel Burke, alias Pierre Cadier, was in July, 1815, possessed of six hundred and forty acres of land, lying on the waters of the St. Francis river, in the county of New Madrid, and Territory of Missouri, which had been injured by earthquakes. Under the "Act for the relief of the inhabitants of the late county of New Madrid, in the Missouri Territory, who suffered from earthquakes," approved February 17, 1815, a certificate of location No. 69 was issued by the recorder of land titles to Burke, authorizing him or his legal representatives to locate six hundred and forty acres on any of the public lands in the Territory, the sale of which was authorized by law. Burke transferred the certificate to Francois Lesieur, and Lesieur transferred it to M. P. Leduc, and Leduc conveyed all his right, title, and interest, to John S. Wilson, who located the certificate as the legal representative of Burke, on the 17th day of May, 1822, on the east half of section twenty-two, and west half of section twenty-three, in township fifty-two north, of range one east, of the fifth principal meridian, in the State of Missouri; and on the 5th day of November, 1824, a patent was issued in favor of Burke, or his legal representatives.

In January, 1835, the Supreme Court confirmed, by their decree, one league square of land to the devisees of Auguste Choteau, which league square of land covered all but about seven acres of the lands so located by Wilson. The claim of Choteau rested upon the acts of Congress of the 3d March, 1811, and 17th February, 1818, which reserved those lands from sale, and also on the eleventh section of the act of 26th May, 1824, which authorized the claim to be presented to the district court of Missouri for adjudication, whilst the claim by Wilson rested upon the act of 17th February, 1815.

It appears, therefore, that the location of Wilson was made upon lands reserved from sale by law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

ISAAC COOK AND OTHERS.

The bill for the relief of Isaac Cook and others, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Isaac Cook, B. A. Napier, and Pelatiah Shepherd, or the legal representatives of such of them as may be deceased, the sum of $200, in full, for the use of the schooner Tempest, belonging to them, and impressed by Major J. G. Camp, in September, 1814.

The petitioners were the owners of the schooner Tempest, on Lake Erie, in 1814. She was pressed into the service of the United States by Major Camp, acting under the orders of General Brown, to aid in transporting the army and military stores from Buffalo to the Canada shore, and was detained in the service for ten days, for which no compensation has been paid.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

JOHN METCALF.

The Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to the consideration of the bill for the relief of John Metcalf.

It proposes to pay to John Metcalf $1,250, in full compensation for a quantity of goods belonging to him, which were lost or destroyed in consequence of the impressment into the service of the United States, by order of General Brown, of the schooner Tempest, at Buffalo, in the summer of 1814.

During the campaign in the year 1814, the schooner Tempest, at Buffalo, was impressed into the service of the United States, to convey troops from Buffalo to the Canada shore, and was retained in the service ten or twelve days. At the time of the impressment she had on board a quantity of goods belonging to the petitioner, consisting of gin, brandy, shoes, &c., which were unloaded and left upon the beach, in an unprotected condition, during the time the schooner was in the service of the United States; and while so left, the liquors and a considerable portion of the other goods were stolen or otherwise lost.

Mr. WADE. I understand that Mr. Metcalf is dead. I therefore move to amend the bill by inserting "the legal representatives of."

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, the amendment was concurred in, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed. Its title was amended, so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of John Metcalf."

JOHN HAMILTON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) The next bill on the Calendar is House bill for the relief of John Hamilton.

Mr. STUART. There is an adverse report on that bill from the Senate Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CHASE. I move that the adverse report be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

So the bill was rejected.

PARMELIA SLAVIN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next bill on the Calendar is the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of Parmelia Slavin, late the wife of John Blue, deceased, on which the Committee on Pensions of the Senate have made an adverse report.

Mr. CHASE. I move that the report be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

So the bill was rejected.

SUSAN COODY AND OTHERS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER announced that the next bill on the Calendar was one for the relief of Susan Coody and others, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CHASE objected to the consideration of the bill, and it was passed over.

SYLVESTER PETTIBONE.

The bill for the relief of Sylvester Pettibone was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to release Mr. Pettibone from a judgment in favor of the United States, obtained against him in the district court of the United States for the district of Wisconsin, and from all liens and encumbrances created by the judgment, but the costs of the suit are first to be paid by Pettibone, together with the further sum of $500 for the benefit of the United States.

Mr. COOPER. What committee reported the bill?

Mr. WALKER. I will state the case.

Mr. BADGER. Will my friend allow me to say that when the bill was last before the Senate, I made a motion to amend it by striking out "and the further sum of $500 for the benefit of the United States."

Mr. WALKER. This is a case of which I made a statement before.

Several SENATORS. There is no objection to the bill.

Mr. BADGER. This man has paid what he could raise by selling his property, and now you ask him to pay $500 more. He became surety for a fellow, who ran away; and he has done what he could to pay the judgment. This is complete blood money. Let him be discharged on paying the costs. He has already paid what he can raise.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was reported to the Senate, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. WALKER. There is another peculiarity in this matter, which renders it necessary to make another slight amendment. I move to strike out the words "a judgment," and insert "two judgments;" for, not satisfied with imposing an enormous penalty on one bond, the United States sued him on two, and obtained two judgments.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

JAMES EDWARDS AND OTHERS.

The bill for the relief of James Edwards and others, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of War to ascertain, by the best evidence of which the nature of the case will admit, the value of the houses and other property of James Edwards, of the late Edward M. Wanton, and of Nehemiah Brush, destroyed at Micanopy, Florida, in the year 1836, by order of Lieutenant Colonel B. K. Pierce, to prevent them from falling into the hands of the enemy, and that the amount so ascertained be paid, but with the provision that the amounts so to be paid shall not exceed $2,482 32 in the case of Edwards; $1,812 50 in the case of Wanton, or $800 in the case of Brush.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

DAVID MYERLE'S CLAIM.

Mr. EVANS. The bill for the relief of David Myerle was passed over at my instance. I am disposed, however, to withdraw the objection provided the bill be put on the footing which it formerly occupied, when it passed the Senate at previous sessions. I learn that Mr. King and many others, who understood the transaction, agreed to give Mr. Myerle $10,000 instead of the sum claimed. If his friends are willing to take that amount, I am ready to withdraw my objection. I read this man's communications, and they did not satisfy me at all that he was entitled to anything; but still I am willing to waive the objection in order to allow the bill to pass, as it formerly passed the Senate, giving him $10,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator move to take up the bill?

Mr. EVANS. Yes, sir.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to strike out "$30,000," and insert "$10,000."

Mr. BADGER. If that motion is to be persevered in, as it cannot be discussed—

Mr. GWIN. We can vote down the motion.

Mr. BADGER. The motion proceeds on a great mistake. If he is entitled to anything, he is entitled to $30,000.

Mr. EVANS. I did not withdraw my objection, except on that condition.

Mr. BADGER. What condition?

Mr. EVANS. The condition that the amount should be reduced to what was formerly proposed to be granted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator objects to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WELLER. I do not so understand the Senator from South Carolina. He desires action on the bill. This is a claim which has been pending for a long time before Congress, and, in my judgment, it is as just and equitable a one as we were ever called upon to pass. I hope the Senate will dispose of the bill now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Discussion is not in order. If objection be made, as a matter of course, the bill must be passed over.

Mr. EVANS. I object.

WILLIAM HARRIS.

The bill for the relief of William Harris, of Georgia, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the claim of William Harris, and pay him for his services in the United States Army in the same manner as if he had not deserted therefrom; but with the provision that the amount shall not exceed the pay and emoluments of a sergeant of infantry, from the 8th of April, 1814, to the 25th of November, 1816.

Mr. STUART. I move to amend the bill by striking out the words:

"In the same manner as if he had not deserted therefrom."

Mr. TOOMBS. I object to that bill. I wish to obtain information in regard to it, after the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. STUART. The claimant is represented as a boy who enlisted improperly.

Mr. DAWSON. I hope the objection will be withdrawn.

Mr. STUART. I do not object, but I desire that it shall not appear that we are paying deserters; that is all.

Mr. TOOMBS. My colleague has explained to me the bill, and I withdraw my objection.

Mr. STUART's amendment was agreed to, and the bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

From the report of the Committee on Military Affairs, it appears that in the spring of 1814, in the eighteenth year of his age, Harris enlisted under Lieutenant Martin, in the eighth regiment of United States infantry, then commanded by Colonel Jack; whereupon he was appointed sergeant, and served in that regiment as recruiting officer until the declaration of peace in 1815, when he demanded his discharge, which was refused him on the ground "that he was too useful a man to be spared." In 1815 he was transferred to the seventh regiment United States infantry, to Captain E. Montgomery's company, under the command of Colonel James McDonald. He then applied to Colonel McDonald for his discharge, asserting his title thereto because he was a minor, but Colonel McDonald refused to discharge him because he "could not be spared." Subsequently, the company being ordered to Fort Montgomery, he accompanied it, and served there as sergeant for nearly two years. At Fort Montgomery he again petitioned for his discharge, his anxiety to leave the army becoming greater the longer he remained in it, and his applications for discharge, to which he was justly entitled, being all disregarded, he deserted, he thinks in 1817, and now asks pay for his services while he was in the army.

On the 18th September, 1819, he was arrested in Franklin county, Georgia, and being brought before the court under a writ of habeas corpus, he was discharged from his confinement and from enlistment on account of non-age.

The petitioner declares that he did not desert his country in the hour of danger, while her peace, safety, or honor were threatened, but at a period of profound peace, and that he would not have deserted at all, but he was anxious to return to his home to aid in supporting a poor widowed mother, who at the time resided in Elbert county, Georgia.

The amendment was concurred in, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

WILLIAM A. SLACUM.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, considered the bill for the relief of the personal representative of William A. Slacum.

Its object is to authorize the accounting officers to settle and adjust the account of the late W. A. Slacum, and to pay to his personal representative, in addition to what Mr. Slacum received in his lifetime, his charges for expenses incurred in visiting the Columbia river, in pursuance of the directions of the Secretary of State, in 1836 and 1837. The amount allowed is not to exceed $712 90. There is also to be paid to his representative, as compensation for the services rendered to the United States by Mr. Slacum on that mission, at the rate of six dollars per diem, commencing June 1, 1836, and continuing to March 15, 1837; but the amount of pay received by Mr. Slacum as a purser in the Navy during the period of time mentioned, is to be deducted from the per diem allowance.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

FRANCISCO LOPE URRIZA.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill for the relief of Francisco Lope Urriza.

Mr. TOOMBS. I think this bill ought to be discussed. Its principles are very important. If I understand it, it proposes to set aside the decision of a court of admiralty—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. WELLER. I hope not. It has been laid aside once at the request of a Senator who knew nothing about it, and I hope it will be considered now. I do not think it presents any complicated questions at all. I had the honor of submitting the report, accompanying the bill, from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Any discussion, as a matter of course, is out of order. The bill being objected to, must go over.

CAPTAIN L. C. EASTON.

The bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, for the relief of Captain Langdon C. Easton, assistant quartermaster of the United States Army, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It authorizes the proper accounting officers of the War Department to credit Captain Langdon C. Easton, assistant quartermaster United States Army, on settlement of his accounts, with the sum of $17,650, being the amount of which he was defrauded by his late clerk, Gustavus McCourt, while stationed at Santa Fe, New Mexico.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

PAYMASTERS' CLERKS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next bill on the Calendar is one for the relief of paymasters' clerks who served in Mexico, which was introduced by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. Jones,] and has been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs adversely.

The question is on indefinitely postponing the further consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

THE GENERAL ARMSTRONG.

The PRESIDING OFFICER announced that the next bill on the Calendar was one for the relief of the claimants of the private armed brig General Armstrong.

Mr. PEARCE objected to the consideration of the bill, and it was passed over.

THOMAS FRAZER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill from the House of Representatives, for the relief of Thomas Frazer, is the next upon the Calendar.

Mr. STUART. That is reported upon adversely by the Committee on Pensions of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on indefinitely postponing the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

ANN W. ANGUS.

The bill for the relief of Mrs. Ann W. Angus was announced as the next upon the Calendar.

It proposes to continue to Mrs. Angus, for five years, from March 4, 1854, the pension heretofore granted to her, which expired on the 4th of March last, and also to extend to her the benefits of all laws which may hereafter be passed, making general provision for widows or further continuing their half pay, and to give her all the benefits to which she would have been entitled if her husband, Samuel Angus, had died in the service of the United States.

Mr. MALLORY objected to the consideration of the bill, but he subsequently said: I ask leave to withdraw the objection which I made a short time ago to the consideration of the bill for the relief of Mrs. Ann W. Angus, and I ask that that bill may be taken up.

Mr. TOOMBS. I object to the gentleman's withdrawing his objection.

Mr. BADGER. The Senator cannot do that. Mr. TOOMBS. I am not satisfied myself as to some of the principles involved in this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia may object himself to the consideration of the bill, but he cannot object to the Senator from Florida withdrawing his objection.

Mr. TOOMBS. Can a gentleman withdraw his objection to a bill at any time during the sitting?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such has been the practice of the Senate.

Mr. TOOMBS. After another bill has been called?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOOMBS. Then I renew the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PACIFIC RAILROAD BILL.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the Senate will indulge me for a moment in order to allow me to present a map, which has been prepared with a great deal of care and attention, under the direction of the select committee on the subject of the construction of a national railroad from the valley of the Mississippi to the Pacific ocean. I move its reference to the Committee on Printing, and I ask that two thousand extra copies be printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to print will be referred to the Committee on Printing, if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

AMOS AND J. E. KENDALL.

The bill, reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, for the relief of Amos and John E. Kendall, was announced as the next in order.

Mr. BADGER. That bill will certainly be discussed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed over.

GEORGE S. CLAFLIN.

The House bill for the relief of George S. Claflin was next taken up.

It proposed to enact that the name of George S. Claflin be placed upon the pension rolls of the United States at the rate of eight dollars per month, to continue during his natural life, commencing on the 1st of December, 1851.

It is alleged in the petition that Claflin served in the late war with Great Britain, as a sergeant of militia; that he was taken prisoner in 1814, and continued in captivity, at Quebec, Montreal, and Halifax, until 1815, or about eight months, when he was discharged; that in consequence of his intolerable treatment, insufficient and unwholesome food, his constitution was destroyed; that both his feet were frozen through exposure, and that since his release he has been constantly in such feeble health as to be unable to earn a support. On this statement, a bill passed the House of Representatives for his relief, on the 3d of January, 1851, but was lost in the Senate. Now, again, a bill has passed the House for his relief; but the evidence is deemed wholly insufficient to justify the special interference of Congress in the case. Except the affidavit of the petitioner himself, there is no evidence of the exposure in the public service, or that he contracted any disease while serving in the Army of the United States. Indeed, the only evidence, besides his own affidavit, that he ever was in the service of the United States at all, is the testimony of Amos Dawley, who merely says he knew him before the war, and "after his return from service in the United States Army, at the close of the war."

The Senate Committee on Pensions reported adversely on the case.

Mr. CLAY. I move that the adverse report be concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The question being taken; the motion was agreed to.

RULIF VAN BRUNT.

The bill for the relief of Rulif Van Brunt, reported from the Committee on Claims, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill proposes to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to audit and adjust, upon the principles of justice and equity, the claim of Rulif Van Brunt, for the occupancy, by a military force of the United States, of certain lands and buildings, leased by him in Brooklyn, New York, and for property belonging to him, and taken and used or destroyed by those troops during their occupancy, in 1814, and to pay the amount so found due, not exceeding $750.

Van Brunt leased the premises, for the occupation of which he claims compensation of Mr. Jackson, from 1st April, 1814, to 1st April, 1815, and had it in a state of cultivation, with valuable crops growing thereon, when it was taken possession of by the twenty-second brigade of New York infantry, then in the service of the United States, and ordered for the defense of New York. General Johnson, then in command, certifies that on the 2d September, 1814, his brigade was encamped at Fort Green, King's county, New York, on land owned by John Jackson, which, with a house and barn, was rented to Rulif Van Brunt; that all the fence was removed, and produce of the labor of Van Brunt, before the 2d September, was destroyed; that the dwelling house was in possession of Turney, and the barn was occupied as a guard-house, by his order, with the consent of Jackson. Samuel Dorsey deposes that he was a resident of Brooklyn at the time, and was conversant with the circumstances of Van Brunt being the lessee of the place, of its occupancy by the troops, and that Van Brunt was compelled wholly to abandon the farm, and procure a house for his family, &c., elsewhere.

The damages and loss incurred by Van Brunt in consequence of this occupation, are estimated, under oath and from personal knowledge, at from $990 to $1,010.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

HORACE SOUTHMAYD AND SON.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the relief of Horace Southmayd & Son.

It proposes to require the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to Horace Southmayd & Son, upon the shipment of foreign dutiable goods, shipped by them from New York to Tampico, in the schooner Mary Catharine, which cleared at New York on the 7th of April, 1847, the amount of drawback to which they would have been entitled if those goods had been shipped to some foreign port or place in any country with which the United States were in amity.

The memorialists, in April, 1847, shipped from New York to Tampico, then in possession of the American forces, by the schooner Mary Catharine, a cargo of goods, among which were wines and silks. The vessel cleared at New York on the 7th of April, 1847, when the circular instructions of the Treasury Department of the 30th June and 8th December, 1846, were in force. By these instructions American vessels carrying only articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, or imports from foreign countries to our own, upon which duties had been fully paid, were authorized to enter the port of Tampico without the charge of any duties; and drawback on foreign imports into the United States exported to Tampico, in our vessels, was forbidden to be allowed. Under these regulations the schooner cleared. On the 9th April, 1847, another Treasury circular was received by the collector of New York, bearing date the 7th April, by which goods imported into the ports of Mexico, in possession of the American forces, were chargeable with duties as military contributions. The vessel reached Tampico two days after the receipt of these last instructions, and the memorialists were compelled to pay duties, which they did under protest. The amount of the duties thus paid was $2,190 47, and the return of this amount is claimed upon the ground that there was a want of notice at the time of the shipment of the goods at New York that they would be subject to duty on entry at Tampico.

The Treasury Department, very properly, replied to this, that it was a privilege allowed our citizens to carry on trade of any kind with ports or places in Mexico during the war, and not a right; and that it was to be enjoyed subject to all the contingencies likely to arise in the course of the war, restricting or varying such privilege. They could not, therefore, complain of the operation of the new Treasury instructions, which, in the judgment of the President, were rendered necessary for the more effectual prosecution of the war.

Inasmuch, however, as duties have been twice paid, in this case, upon those portions of the shipment which consisted of foreign dutiable goods originally imported into New York, which paid duties both there and at Tampico, and on which no drawback was repaid on their exportation from New York, it seems to be equitable and proper that the import duties on such foreign articles paid at New York should be refunded in the nature of drawback.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

THOMAS D. ANDERSON.

The bill for the relief of the representatives of Thomas D. Anderson, deceased, late consul of the United States at Tripoli, reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle an account with the proper personal representatives of Thomas D. Anderson, for contingent expenditures of the consulate at Tripoli, from December 31, 1821, up to the period when he ceased acting as consul; and in full for all claims for such expenditures and other demands arising out of the consulate after the 31st of December, 1821, to allow them at the rate of $750 per annum during that period.

T. D. Anderson, whilst in the discharge of his duties as consul, contracted a disease in the eyes, by which he was deprived of vision, and in consequence thereof was unable to procure and preserve the vouchers for the contingent expenditures of his consulate, during the last five or six years that he remained in office; and from the want of the usual and proper vouchers, no credit was given him for such expenditures by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, from the 31st December, in the year 1821, to the 27th August, 1827.

A claim was preferred at the Treasury, by the representatives of Mr. Anderson, for an average allowance, on account of such expenditures during the period referred to; but they were advised that they must have recourse to Congress for the allowance of that part of the contingent account unsupported by vouchers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

CAPTAIN WILLIAM DAVIS.

House bill "for the relief of the legal representatives of Captain William Davis, late commander of the United States transport schooner Eufala," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct $360 to be paid to Captain Davis in full compensation for all claims against the United States for his services as commander of the Eufala.

Captain Davis was employed during the late war as captain of the United States transport schooner Eufala, at a compensation of $360 per month; in that capacity he sailed from New Orleans for Philadelphia, on the 25th September, 1848, and has not since been heard from. It is presumed that the vessel, and all on board, were lost during the severe October gales of that year. Payment for his services was made up to the time of sailing from New Orleans, and it is asked that the compensation should be continued for the length of time usually required for the voyage, on the ground that the expense of the voyage, in stores, &c., had been incurred.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

THOMAS C. NYE.

The bill for the relief of Thomas C. Nye, reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, was next announced.

Mr. RUSK. The Senator from Maine, [Mr. Hamlin,] who reported the bill, is not present. I ask that it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That course will be pursued.

URI EMMONS'S PATENT.

The next bill on the Calendar was one for the relief of the heirs of the late Uri Emmons.

Mr. FISH. That will be objected to. Let it pass over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

SAMUEL BRAY.

The bill for the relief of Samuel Bray was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Samuel Bray, late keeper of the Dog Island light-house, such amount, not exceeding $500, as he may, upon satisfactory proof, find to be the loss sustained by him during the gales of the 23d and 24th of August, 1851.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

TAMPICO VOLUNTEERS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next bill on the Calendar, is one for the relief of the Tampico Volunteers, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, which will now have its second reading.

It proposes to recognize the several companies of volunteers called into service by Colonel William Gates, by his order dated Tampico, February 25, 1847, and known as Tampico Volunteers, as having been in the military service of the United States, in the years 1847 and 1848, and to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to audit and pay the accounts of the officers and men constituting the companies, in accordance with the established regulations of the Department.

During the Mexican war, on the 29th February, 1847, Colonel William Gates, by his special order, No. 7, directed Major Morris to enroll and organize all the citizens of Tampico, Mexico, into companies of fifty men each, selecting the officers to be approved of by the commanding officer. In obedience to this order, Major Morris did organize four companies, called the Tampico Volunteers, who served as such about twelve months for which service they have never been paid.

In the similar cases of the Louisiana troops called out by General Gaines, and of the Texas mounted men called out by Colonel Curtiss, at Camargo, Congress made special appropriations for their payment. The committee consider the Tampico Volunteers equally entitled to compensation for their services.

The bill was objected to, and was passed over.

SENECA G. SIMMONS.

The bill for the relief of Seneca G. Simmons, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to instruct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department, in settling the accounts of Seneca G. Simmons, as assistant commissary of subsistence, to allow him credit for whatever sum of money belonging to the United States he may prove, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War, to have been stolen from his possession at Matamoros, Mexico, on the night of the 11th of April, 1847. But the amount to be allowed is not to exceed $1,500.

The petitioner prays to be released from his liability to account for $1,500, Government money, stolen from his possession in Mexico, while he was assistant commissary of subsistence, and stationed at Matamoros.

From the report of testimony taken before a military commission, ordered by Colonel Cushing, at Matamoros, on the 13th of April, 1847, it appears that Simmons, as assistant commissary of subsistence, had in his possession large sums of money for the use of the United States troops in that vicinity; for want of an iron chest (for which he had made requisition) he was compelled to keep the public money in a strong wooden box; and on the night of the 11th April, 1847, the room in which that and other boxes containing money were kept, was entered by robbers, the lock of the box was broken, and the sum of $1,500 abstracted therefrom. The evidence shows conclusively that the robbery did not result from any negligence or carelessness on the part of the petitioner.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

SAMUEL W. BRADY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next bill on the Calendar, is one from the House of Representatives, for the relief of Samuel W. Brady, which has been reported from the Committee on Pensions.

The bill proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Samuel W. Brady, of Virginia, on the roll of invalid pensions, and pay to him four dollars per month during his natural life, to commence January 1, 1850.

Brady claims to have received an injury by a fall from the walls of Chapultepec, in the battle of 13th of September, 1847, which entitles him to a pension. He was discharged from the regiment of voltigeurs in March, 1848, for the reasons given by the surgeon, that he labored under chronic rheumatism and chronic catarrh, both of an intractable character, and general debility.

The papers appear to have been regular before the Commissioner of Pensions, with the exception that the claim was based on injuries received while scaling the walls of Chapultepec, which fact did not appear from the surgeon's certificate, or from that of Lieutenant Peritt; but the latter certifies that he was in the battle of Chapultepec, and that after the battle he was on the sick list, in the city of Mexico, and was discharged some months after that battle on the surgeon's certificate of disability, not having performed any duty from the time of the battle.

Mr. CLAYTON objected to the consideration of the bill, and it was passed over.

MAUZY AND WARD.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill for the relief of Fayette Mauzy and Robert G. Ward, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to credit the judgment obtained by the United States against Mauzy and Ward, in the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Virginia, amounting to $615 62½, with interest, from the 2d of April, 1841, with the amount certified by that court to have been improperly paid by Ward in a suit in chancery, wherein the United States were complainants, and John Morrison and others, defendants, the amount being $491 97, with interest on $366 77 from the 18th of September, 1840, which was certified by the court, as justly due by the United States to Ward.

The United States recovered, in the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Virginia, a judgment against the petitioners for the sum of $615 62½, with interest thereon from the 2d day of April, 1841—the same being the amount due the Post Office Department by William Ward, late postmaster at Culpeper Court-House, Virginia. The United States recovered, in another suit in the same court, but at a different term, a decree in chancery against John Morrison and others; and from the proceedings had therein, it appears that Robert G. Ward, one of the defendants, had erroneously paid to the United States a sum equal to $499 97, with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent. per annum, from the 18th day of September, 1840; and the court certified as follows: "And the court doth further certify its opinion that, in equity and justice, the said sum of $499 97, with interest as aforesaid on $366 77, part thereof, from the 18th day of September, 1840, ought to be refunded by the United States to the said defendant, Robert G. Ward."

The petitioners ask that the first judgment may have applied towards its discharge the amount certified by the court, in the suit in chancery, as due to one of them, (Robert G. Ward,) and which ought to be refunded by the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be read a third time, read a third time, and passed.

THOMAS CROWN.

The next bill on the Calendar, was one for the relief of Thomas Crown, reported from the Committee on Claims, which was read a second time.

It proposes to direct the Third Auditor of the Treasury to ascertain the damages sustained by Thomas Crown, by reason of the refusal of the War Department to execute a contract entered into by him with Captain George Blaney, on the part of the Government, on the 16th of March, 1826, and to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the damages thus ascertained, to an amount not exceeding $6,000.

In 1826 Mr. Crown entered into a contract with Captain Blaney, acting for the Government of the United States, for the delivery of three millions of bricks at Oak Island, on Cape Fear river, in North Carolina, at $7 75 per thousand, to be used in the construction of a fortification. He immediately made the necessary preparations, at large expense and outlays, and commenced making the bricks, according to his contract. In July he was prepared to deliver eight hundred thousand bricks, and did actually deliver five thousand; but Captain Blaney refused to receive the remainder, and insisted (as is alleged) that the memorialist should transfer the contract to one Potter. This he resisted for considerable time, and urged upon Captain Blaney his obligation to receive and pay for the bricks, according to the contract. At last, his funds becoming exhausted, and Captain Blaney persisting in his refusal to receive the bricks, the memorialist was forced to yield, and sold to Potter the bricks on hand and the contract with Captain Blaney, who subsequently received from Potter, as satisfactory, the identical bricks that he had refused to receive from Crown.

The committee concur in the opinion that the memorialist would have been able to fulfill his contract, and would have done so, but for the interference of Captain Blaney; that he was coerced by Blaney to sell out to Potter; and that the violation of the contract was on the part of the Government. The question of damage alone remains. Crown states his damage at $6,000, but offers no proof to sustain this amount. The difference between the price received from Potter and the contract price should be the measure of damages upon this point. The committee are satisfied that the bricks made by Crown were as good as any that were obtained, and should have been received, and that he should be saved from loss incurred entirely through the fault of the authorized agent of the Government.

Mr. TOOMBS objected to the consideration of the bill. He subsequently withdrew his objection, but it was renewed by Mr. HUNTER; and the bill was passed over.

ANTHONY G. WILLIS.

The bill from the House of Representatives, for the relief of the heirs of Anthony G. Willis, deceased, reported from the Committee on Claims, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to pay $251 to the executors and administrators of Anthony G. Willis, deceased, as compensation for the use, by the United States, of a wagon and team, during the last war with Great Britain.

In the year 1814 Willis was the owner of a wagon and team in Kentucky, where he lived; he had one Benjamin T. Rowe employed in driving the team; at Lexington, Kentucky, whither it had been driven with a load of hemp, Captain George Stockton, an officer of the United States Army, being in great need of the means of transportation for his troops, pressed the wagon and team and driver into service; and they were carried beyond Dayton, in Ohio, towards the Canada line, and subsequently back to Nashville, Tennessee, laden with wounded soldiers of the regular Army. They were kept in the active and constant employ of the Government till the services amounted, according to the rates of pay then established and allowed, to $251, and Captain Stockton gave a certificate for that sum; the certificate was sent on to Washington for payment, by Mr. Zane, the Representative in Congress from the district in which Willis lived, and the accounting officer rejected it because it contained an interlineation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

THOMAS SNODGRASS.

The bill for the relief of Thomas Snodgrass, reported from the Committee on Claims, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to appropriate $230 to reimburse to Captain Thomas Snodgrass the expenses incurred by him for a team, and balance for forage and subsistence furnished to his company of volunteers, while employed as a guard or escort for a party of emigrating Cherokees in 1838. But the bill is not to be construed to sanction any claim of the representatives of Washington Smith upon the United States for the amount, or any other sum advanced to Snodgrass.

In June, 1838, Gen. Nat. Smith, then in charge of a party of emigrating Cherokees as emigrating agent, under the escort of Captain Drain, United States Army, found that the Indians had become restless, dissatisfied, and disposed to desert, and otherwise manifested a spirit of mutiny and insubordination, and a disposition to commit depredations upon the country through which they were passing. Finding the escort of Captain Drain insufficient to restrain them, General Smith engaged the memorialist to raise a company of mounted volunteers of thirty men, and promised that, on condition that Captain Snodgrass would look to the United States for the pay of the men, he, General Smith, would defray the other expenses, and risk the chance of their reimbursement. With this understanding the company was raised, and mustered into service for thirty days, to assist Captain Drain, as guard from Bellefonte to Waterloo, in the State of Alabama. In default of Smith, who failed to provide funds, Captain Snodgrass, as he alleges, incurred expenses to the amount of $741 25.

To defray these expenses Captain Snodgrass was compelled to obtain the amount of $625 from W. Smith, a brother of the agent, who took the obligation of Captain Snodgrass for this sum, payable when an appropriation should be made by Congress. He has since been sued upon this obligation, and judgment obtained, 28th November, 1848, for the amount of $1,143 66 and costs, in the district court of the United States for northern Alabama.

He claims other sums arising out of the same transaction.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

OBED HUSSEY.

The next bill was one reported from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, for the relief of Obed Hussey.

Mr. TOOMBS objected to its consideration, and it was passed over.

THOMAS D. JENNINGS.

The bill, reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims, for the relief of Thomas D. Jennings, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to authorize Thomas D. Jennings, of Florida, to enter, at the minimum price of the public lands, a quantity of land not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, comprising the improvement on which his late father, Lawrence D. Jennings, resided before his death, on due proof being presented to the register of the proper land office that he would have been entitled to a preemption but for the removal of the family after the death of the father.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

JUAN M. AND JOSE L. LUCO.

The bill, reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims, for the relief of Juan M. Luco and José L. Luco, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to permit them to file their claim and title to a certain tract of land in California, known as the Ulpines Rancho, before the United States land commissioners to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the State of California, appointed under the act approved March 3, 1851; and to direct those commissioners to take cognizance of and pass upon the claim, in the same manner as if it had been filed prior to the expiration of the time fixed for filing such claims by the act.

The petitioners are owners of a certain tract of land in the State of California, known as "Ulpines Rancho;" they derived their title thereto from one José de la Rosa, who derived his title from the Government of Mexico. De Rosa lived upon and occupied the lands both before and after the grant from the Mexican Government. In 1850 the wife of De Rosa abandoned him and went to Mexico, carrying with her the title papers to the tract of land, and they were not recovered until after the expiration of the time fixed for filing such claims, under the act of 3d of March, 1851.

The petitioners now ask permission to file their claim and title papers before the said commissioners.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

ISAAC L. BATTLE.

The next bill on the Calendar, was one for the relief of the estate of Isaac L. Battle.

It proposes to release the estate of Isaac L. Battle, deceased, late of the county of Jackson, in the State of Florida, from any liability under a judgment heretofore obtained by the Post Office Department against him as guarantor on behalf of Charles Matthews and William King, late of that county and State, as bidders for a contract to carry the United States mail, three times a week each way between Bainbridge, in the State of Georgia, and Pensacola, in the State (then Territory) of Florida, in the year 1842.

In the year 1842, Charles Matthews and William King were the successful bidders for a contract with the Post Office Department to carry the mail three times a week, backward and forward, between Bainbridge, in the State of Georgia, and Pensacola, in Florida, and Isaac L. Battle, the petitioner's intestate, became guarantor in their behalf. Matthews and King failed to execute their contract or to perform any portion thereof, in consequence of which the mail was carried by W. T. Stockton & Co., who had been the contractors previously, from "the 1st of July, 1843, to the 8th of October, 1843," at which time the route was relet at the price stated in their bid. During the time for which Stockton & Co. carried the mail, it was carried at the rate previously paid to them, say $21,000 per annum, and on the 21st of August, 1846, suit was ordered to be brought against King and Matthews, and Isaac L. Battle, their guarantor, to recover $3,125 as the difference between their bid, $3,500 per annum, and the rate paid to Stockton & Co., $21,000. On the 5th of January, 1848, judgment was obtained against Felix G. Long, executor of Charles Matthews, for $3,924 62, and an execution issued to satisfy the judgment, upon which $107 14 was paid over to the Department on the 9th of April, 1849, after deducting for costs $164 86. Process was at the same time issued, but was not served, on King or Battle. The claim from which the petitioner asks to be released is the balance under the above judgment, on the ground that he, as administrator of Isaac L. Battle, had no information that there was such a claim in existence, until he had paid out as administrator all the assets in hand, with the exception of $1,500, which he had reserved for the payment of a debt due from the estate to a widow woman named Lewis, who is poor and must lose the whole of her claim if the debt to Government be paid. A further ground on which the petitioner asks to be released, is the laches on the part of the Government in not prosecuting its claim at the time of the failure on the part of King and Matthews, and when they were able to pay the damage sustained, instead of waiting four years, at the end of which time one of the principals had left the State and the other had died, leaving an estate almost totally inadequate to meet the liability.

Mr. SHIELDS objected, and the bill was passed over.

SOPHIA KIRBY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next bill on the Calendar, is one for the relief of Sophia Kirby, reported from the Committee on Pensions.

It proposes to require the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Sophia Kirby, of Warren county, Kentucky, widow of Joseph Kirby, deceased, upon the pension roll, and to pay her a pension of $100 per annum, to commence on the 17th December, 1852.

The bill was referred to the Commissioner of Pensions, with a view to elicit any information in relation to the case which might be on file in his office. In a letter of date March 3, 1854, he says: "As the bill is unaccompanied by papers of any description, I am at a loss to understand upon what ground the relief proposed is based. It is probable, however, that a mistake has been made in the name of Mrs. Kirby's husband; for I find, on referring to the Kentucky roll of pensioners, that Jesse Kirby, of Warren county, of that State, was pensioned on the 22d of October, 1832, under the act of June 7, 1832, at the rate of $32 22 per annum, which covered all the service claimed to have been rendered by him, viz: nine months and twenty days in the militia of Virginia. It appears that he died on the 17th of December, 1852, from which date his widow, Sophia Kirby, (the name in the bill,) was pensioned under the act of February 2, 1848, at the same rate, and is still inscribed on the roll."

Assuming that the person referred to by the Commissioner is the same for whose relief the bill is intended to provide, and who is now receiving the full amount of pension to which her husband was entitled, the committee do not feel warranted, especially in the absence of all information respecting the case, except that furnished by the Commissioner's letter, in increasing the amount she now receives by an act of special legislation.

Mr. CLAY. The report of the committee is adverse in that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question then will be on the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. BROWN. Oh, no.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill being objected to, it will be passed over.

ELIZA M. EVANS.

The bill reported from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, for the relief of Eliza M. Evans, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Eliza M. Evans, the only child and heir-at-law of Colonel Anthony Walton White, deceased, late a colonel in the revolutionary army, the interest on $3,750 advanced by White to the Continental Congress, for the support of a regiment of light-horse, commanded by him; the interest to be computed from July 4, 1780, to July 7, 1838.

Anthony W. White served in the revolutionary army, with the rank of colonel; prior to the year 1783 he advanced to the United States, for the support of his regiment, the sum of $3,750; from 1788 down to the year 1838, either he or his legal representatives, made continual efforts to obtain a settlement of his accounts and a repayment of the loan; and during this time, both the Secretary of War and the committees of Congress uniformly reported in favor of the justice of the claim; finally, on the 7th July, 1838, an act was approved to refund to his legal representatives the sum.

The claim now made is for the interest upon this sum of $3,750, from the 4th of July, 1780, to the 7th of July, 1838.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

SARAH CRANDALL.

The bill reported from the Committee on Pensions, for the relief of Sarah Crandall, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Sarah Crandall, widow of James Coon, on the list of revolutionary pensioners, and pay her, during her natural life, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence on the 1st of January, 1848.

The petitioner was married to James Coon as early as the year 1790; Coon died in 1799; his widow afterwards married Jasper Crandall, who died a few years since, leaving the petitioner again a widow.

It is claimed by the petitioner that James Coon, her first husband, was a soldier in the revolutionary war, and served in Colonel Warner's regiment, which was raised principally in Connecticut, and that he enlisted for three years, and continued on duty during that time.

The certificate of the comptroller of the State of Connecticut shows that, according to the records in that office, Coon served in the revolutionary war, and in Warner's regiment, twenty-three months and ten days.

The Commissioner of Pensions rejected the petitioner's application for a pension under the general laws, on the ground that the proof was insufficient to identify her husband with the James Coon above mentioned, who was shown by the record to have served nearly two years.

It appears from the records in the comptroller's office that there were two individuals bearing the name of James Coon on the roll of Warner's regiment—one was a lieutenant, and the other was denominated "fifer." The first application of the petitioner to the Pension Office stated that her husband enlisted as a private soldier at Hopkinton, Rhode Island. Her papers were found defective, and it became necessary for her to seek record evidence of the services of her husband. She applied at the office of the comptroller of Connecticut, and received a certificate of the services of James Coon, the lieutenant, which she presented to the Pension Office as proof of the services of her husband. It was subsequently ascertained that the lieutenant was a resident of Salisbury, Connecticut, and not of Hopkinton, Rhode Island, where petitioner's husband resided at the time of his enlistment. She was then notified that there was another James Coon attached to Warner's regiment, who appeared by the rolls to have been a musician. The Commissioner of Pensions required her, in order to prove the identity of her husband with the James Coon last mentioned, to produce the testimony of "two or more witnesses who were themselves in service with him, and whose names were found on the same rolls." This testimony could not be procured. It will be observed that the petitioner was not married to Coon until after the close of his services in the army; that she resided, both before and after the marriage, in the State of New York, at a distance from the place of his enlistment and services; and that he died nearly fifty years ago. It is not surprising, therefore, that she should have supposed that the first certificate of the comptroller related to the services of her husband.

The committee are satisfied of the services of the petitioner's husband in the revolutionary war, and of his identity with the James Coon last mentioned.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

JOHN BRONSON.

Mr. BADGER. I objected, a short time since, to the consideration of the bill for the relief of John Bronson. I am satisfied that it is a very meritorious bill. I therefore withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection being withdrawn, the bill will be considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

WILLIAM DARBY.

The next bill on the Calendar, was one, reported from the Committee on Claims, for the relief of William Darby, which was read a second time.

It proposes to pay to William Darby $1,500 in full compensation for his labor and materials furnished in surveying and making a map of the Territory of Louisiana, in the years 1812 and 1813.

Mr. HUNTER. I should like to hear the report read.

On motion, the Senate adjourned to Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 5, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EDGERTON. I would inquire of the Chair whether the special order takes precedence, this being Friday, over the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The special order covers the entire week. The business first in order before the House is upon the agreement to certain amendments reported to the House from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to certain bills relating to the organized Territories.

Mr. LETCHER. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of resuming territorial business.

Mr. BENSON. I ask the gentleman to waive his motion for a moment, in order to afford me the opportunity to present to the House some resolutions passed by the Legislature of the State of Maine.

Mr. LETCHER. I have no objection to do so.

RESOLUTIONS OF STATE LEGISLATURES.

Mr. BENSON then asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the House, and presented joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Maine, as follows:

1st. In favor of cheap ocean postage.

2d. In relation to certain proposed modifications of the navigation laws of the United States, allowances of bounties to fishing vessels, and reciprocal trade with the North American Colonies.

3d. In relation to the revenue laws of the United States.

4th. In favor of the abolition of spirit rations in the United States Navy.

Which were severally laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WALLEY. Also, by unanimous consent, presented to the House resolutions passed by the Legislature of Massachusetts, in relation to, and in favor of, establishing floating schools for the education of seamen; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CROCKER asked the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution; which was read for information:

Resolved, That on Tuesday next the committees shall be called and have leave to report bills of a private character only, which, on being read a first and second time, shall be referred to the Committee of the Whole House without debate.

Objection being made, the resolution was not introduced.

Mr. LETCHER. I now submit my motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, with a view to resume the consideration of territorial business.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. LILLY. I rise to a question of privilege. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I would inquire of the Chair what number of territorial bills yet remain to be acted upon?

The SPEAKER. Some twelve or thirteen.

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is plenty of time to consider them next week.

Mr. STEPHENS. I think we may as well attend to this business this week.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It is the special order, and let us consider it now.

The yeas and nays were then ordered.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion.

Mr. LILLY. I cannot.

The question was then taken upon Mr. LILLY's motion, and decided in the negative—yeas 57, nays 73; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Ball, Benson, Bugg, Campbell, Chrisman, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Culom, Cutting, Dick, Dickinson, Disney, Thomas D. Eliot, Flagler, Franklin, Green, Harrison, Howe, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Letcher, Lilly, McCulloch, Mace, Matteson, Murray, Norton, Parker, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Riddle, David Ritchie, Sapp, Seward, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, Snodgrass, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, John L. Taylor, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walbridge, Walker, Walley, Walsh, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, and Wheeler—57.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Boyce, Breckinridge, Carpenter, Caskey, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Curtis, John G. Davis, Drum, Dunbar, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, Ellison, Fenton, Gamble, Greenwood, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Henn, Houston, Hughes, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, Kerr, Kurtz, Lane, Lindsay, Macdonald, McDougall, McNaughton, Meacham, Middlewarth, Smith Miller, Milson, Noble, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Furey, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Ruffin, Russell, Seymour, Shower, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Alexander H. Stephens, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Vail, Ellihu B. Washburne, Wells, John Wentworth, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—73.

So the House refused to adjourn over till Monday.

The question was then taken upon Mr. LETCHER's motion; and decided in the affirmative.

So the rules were suspended.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. PHELPS in the chair.)

TERRITORIAL BUSINESS.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee was last in session it had under consideration the bill of the House No. 317, entitled "A bill to establish the office of surveyor general of Utah, to grant donations of lands to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes." The amendments pending were to strike out the last proviso of the third section, and to strike out all after the word "person;" the latter submitted by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER.]

Mr. LETCHER. I will modify my amendment so that, if adopted, the section will read thus:

That the benefits of the second and third sections of this act shall not extend to any person.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, as amended.

Mr. DISNEY. I wish to say a word—

The CHAIRMAN. Further debate is not in order. Debate on the amendment was exhausted on the amendment before the committee rose last evening.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Has the gentleman the right to modify his amendment after debate on it has been exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. He has the right.

Mr. DISNEY. In order to say a word, I shall move an amendment merely as matter of form.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Virginia is one in the second degree.

Mr. DISNEY. Will the Chair allow me to suggest that it is only an amendment in the first degree, because, on a motion to strike out, it is in order to move to amend the part proposed to be stricken out. Now, the original motion here was to strike out the proviso. The motion of the gentleman from Virginia is not an amendment in the second degree, not an amendment to the motion to strike out, but an amendment touching the subject-matter proposed to be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio will proceed. The Chair was too hasty in his decision.

Mr. DISNEY. I move a pro forma amendment. Yesterday I explained, Mr. Chairman, as far as this question was concerned, that I felt little or no interest in it. I stated, that in the bill which I originally submitted to the Committee on Public Lands, there was nothing said in relation to Mormons. I felt it to be my duty to explain yesterday, as did the Delegate from Utah, that, by custom and statutory law of that Territory, polygamy was recognized there.

Mr. LETCHER. Read the law, and let us hear what it is. Members would like to know it.

Mr. DISNEY. It can be read when I have concluded.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of the law, in order that the gentleman's time may not be consumed.

The CHAIRMAN. When the gentleman from Ohio has concluded his remarks, the law will be read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HUNT. We can understand his remarks better if the law be read first.

Mr. LETCHER. The gentleman had better have it read now. We shall be able to understand his remarks better after we have heard the law.

Mr. DISNEY. Well, I will send it to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read the law; which is as follows:

"The homestead, occupied by the wife, or any portion of the family of the deceased at the time of his death, shall in all cases be held free to the use of the wife and family of the deceased, and shall not be liable to any claim or claims against said estate; and if there be other property remaining after the liabilities of the estate are liquidated, then it shall, in the absence of other arrangements by will, descend in equal shares to his children, or their heirs; one share to such heirs through the mother of such children, if she shall survive him, during her natural life, or during her widowhood; or, if he has had more than one wife, who either died, or survived in lawful wedlock, it shall be equally divided between the living and the heirs of those who are dead, such heirs taken by right of representation."

Mr. DISNEY (who was very imperfectly heard, owing to the noise prevailing around the reporters' desks) then said: The committee will observe the peculiar phraseology: "a party who has had more than one wife, who survives him in lawful wedlock."

My object, however, in rising this morning, was to call the attention of the committee to the point involved in the pending question. This bill contains the same provision in relation to the Territory of Utah that has been made in relation to all other Territories. By it Congress practically says to the emigrant: If you remove to this Territory and settle there, we shall esteem it a service, and such a service that we will give you one hundred and sixty acres of land as a consideration for it. As I have already stated, polygamy is recognized by statutory law in this Territory. How far it may be competent for Congress to interfere with regard to the existence of that institution, is not the question now before us. We certainly cannot reach it in this way. It is simply a question of policy, whether we will encourage the emigration of Mormons to this particular Territory. The refusal to make this donation cannot affect the existence of the institution itself.

With regard to the question of the power of Congress, every gentleman can see and examine the arguments on both sides. The only point really involved in this question is, whether Congress will esteem it politic to offer donations of land to induce Mormons to emigrate to this particular Territory, or whether, by a refusal to grant them the same inducement that you hold out to other people, you will interpose a barrier, and, to that extent, discourage the emigration of Mormons into this Territory.

Mr. PERKINS, of New York. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DISNEY.] I think that this clause ought to remain as it is, or except from it the provision that excludes the poor man, if he happens to have but two wives, from having any land. If we are to give Governors, judges, and other Federal officers in that Territory, large salaries, to enable them to support thirty or forty wives, and allow the lords and the high spiritual dignitaries of the Mormon establishment, not only this large number of wives, but salaries of $3,000 or $4,000, I can see no reason for excluding the poor fellow who has been enticed there from enjoying any land, if he happens to have two wives instead of thirty or forty.

I have seen recently in the newspapers a statement declaring that no law shall be cited, except the statutes of the United States, in any court whatever in the Territory of Utah. Then the common law is not recognized there, and the spiritual law is recognized, if this statement in the newspapers is true, which gives the privilege and right to a person there to have as many wives as he can get. It seems to me utterly preposterous, and will be disgraceful to this Congress, to allow the Governors, judges, and other officers appointed by the Government of the United States, to hold their offices, at large salaries, and have just as many wives as they please, as their salaries will enable them to support, and yet prohibit the poor men from enjoying the benefit of land there, if they happen to have only two wives. [Laughter.]

Mr. DISNEY. With the leave of the committee, I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] will be permitted to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. BOYCE. I move to amend by striking out the third section.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BOYCE] would not be in order at this time. An amendment is now pending which must first be entertained and disposed of, before any amendment can be entertained to strike out the section.

Mr. BOYCE. I move, then, to add the following words: "more than one wife; or to be guilty of any irreligious practice."

No one can be more opposed to polygamy than I am. I have no idea of proceeding in any matter blindly. What right has this Government to interfere with the religious relations of the people in this Territory? The whole power which this Government exercises over the Territory is simply that of a constructive character. Where is it derived from? There is no express clause in the Constitution in relation to this matter. The authority which is derived from that clause which prescribes the right of making all needful rules and regulations for the Territories, clearly does not authorize a governmental power. It is said by the best writers on constitutional law, to be derived as an incident to the treaty-making power; they lay down the principle thus: because you have the right to acquire territory, you have also the right to govern it.

Well, Mr. Chairman, the right to govern the Territory is not an unlimited power of Government. It is subject to all the express limitations of the Constitution that may be applicable to the subject; and the subject is liable to all the implied limitations derivable from the nature of this Government. Sir, what is the object of the government of the Territory? The governments of Territories are organized merely for the purpose of protecting the Territories in their infant state, until they are able to become States. The whole power of the Government over the Territories should be confined to that narrow sphere of protecting the rights of persons and things until they are able to become States. It by no means implies that Congress has a right to interfere with the domestic, the social, or the religious relations of the people. Their religious relations, I say, are not to be interfered with. This is a religious subject; and because it is a religious subject, it is one of great magnitude.

But, Mr. Chairman, if there is one thing clear in reference to the power of Congress, it is that it has no right to interfere with the subject of religion. That is the very first of the amendments to the Constitution; it stands at the head of all the amendments. Congress shall pass no law upon this subject. But it may be said that this religion of the Mormons is not a true religion—that it is a false religion. But I do not think that Congress has any right to say that this or that religion is true or false. Who made us judges over this matter? Who appointed us apostles, or bishops, or priests? Why, Mr. Chairman, if there is any one subject which this Congress does not understand practically, I expect it is this very subject of religion.

I ask you, sir, who set us up to be judges of other people's religion? Who gave us authority to legislate for them on the subject of religion? But it may be supposed that it is no great violation of the principles of the Constitution to interfere with the religion of the Mormons; but once you break in upon that principle, once you violate it in any regard, where will you stop? I am opposed to any infraction at all of the Constitution on this point. Let all religions be free. Let every man worship God according to his own heart and conscience.

Well, again, Mr. Chairman, the spirit of this bill is at war with another clause of the Constitution, which says that Congress shall pass no bill of attainder. I know that, legally and technically, the clause applies to the passage of acts of Parliament depriving a man of his life. But the Supreme Court have determined that the term contained in this clause of the Constitution applies to all kinds of legislation by which any pains or penalties are inflicted upon persons. It is to prohibit any kind of legislation by which Congress places itself in the condition of the judiciary to judge, and hear, and determine the cause itself. Now, I ask, what is the bill before us but a bill of pains and penalties against this people, against a whole nation? Why, sir, we have no parallel in our history—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I understood the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Boyce] to admit the constitutional power in Congress to donate these lands absolutely to actual settlers. Now, sir, I want to know from him, and I inquire for the sake of obtaining information, whether, if Congress has the power to make an absolute grant, it has not also the power to affix conditions to the grant?

A MEMBER, (in his seat.) Not if the provisions of the bill are unconstitutional.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I was not inquiring of the honorable gentleman on my left; it was to his colleague [Mr. Boyce] that I propounded the question: "Not if the provisions are unconstitutional?" The honorable gentleman from South Carolina says that we would be interfering with the religious rights of the people of Utah by retaining this provision. Now, Mr. Chairman, I assume the position that if you can give away the land at all, you may affix such conditions to the grant as Congress may regard as wholesome and necessary for the protection of sound morals and the public good. To illustrate my views, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BOYCE, (interrupting.) Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me to make a remark?

Mr. CAMPBELL. In a moment. I wish to put a case to the honorable member from South Carolina.

Suppose that, in the wildness of religious fanaticism in Utah, the Mormons should imagine that they had received a revelation from the prophet Joe Smith which required them to enact an ecclesiastical law to the effect that the eldest born of every woman in that Territory should, when it was one month old, be sacrificed and slaughtered; and suppose, further, that, under such circumstances, that people should come here and ask Congress to make a grant of lands to encourage settlement under a system of that kind; would not the honorable gentleman, acting in the capacity of a guardian, and representing a people having a joint interest with all the rest of the people of this land in that domain, deem it proper and advisable to provide that no person who subscribed to, and practiced upon, the principles of such a religion, or rather fanaticism, should have a grant of land? Now I will yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Boyce] to answer my question.

Mr. BOYCE. I propose to ask the gentleman from Ohio—

Mr. CAMPBELL. I propose that you answer the question, which I have already propounded, first.

Mr. BOYCE. You put an extreme case, and I believe it is customary to answer one question by asking another.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Answer the question first, and then propound yours.

Mr. BOYCE. Then I will say that I would do nothing to recognize such a state of things.

Now, I will ask the gentleman whether Congress has the right to declare, in this bill, that no Presbyterian should have the privilege of taking a portion of this land?

Mr. CAMPBELL. If a Presbyterian church in Utah, actuated by a wild fanaticism, should declare, by an ecclesiastical provision, the allowance of polygamy, or any other crime, as a tenet of its faith, I should say that no person subscribing to such a provision, or practicing under it, should have any portion of the public domain, and that it would clearly be the duty of Congress so to declare.

Mr. BOYCE. If there is no objection, I will withdraw my amendment.

No objection being made, the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I move to amend the proviso under consideration, so that it shall read:

And provided further, That neither the benefits of this or of any other act donating public lands, shall extend to any person who shall now, or at any time hereafter, be the husband of more than one wife.

When I rose to address the Chair, I stated that the views expressed by the gentleman from North Carolina were, that if we pass this restriction, the Mormons will pass out of Utah, and spread all over the vast valley of the interior of this continent. The amendment which I now propose reaches that objection. I do not propose here to discuss the constitutional question. I touch the moral question only. If this Congress, acting as the donors of this land, has the right to prescribe the terms and conditions upon which they shall be given, it has the right to prescribe the condition that no individual who indulges in polygamy shall be entitled to the benefits of this act. If he prefers polygamy, he can leave the Union.

Mr. PECKHAM. If he prefers more than one woman.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. As my friend from New York says, if he prefers more than one woman he may leave the land. If we prescribe conditions, we must make them consistent with the laws of the land. If a single member of this House should take to himself more than one wife, he not only subjects himself to the frowns of the community, but to the penalties prescribed by the law; and he suffers for his crime in the penitentiary. Do you ask, then, that these people shall have the benefits of this law? That your lands shall not be withheld from people guilty of this crime?

Mr. KEITT. Will the gentleman from New York allow me to ask him a single question? If it be unconstitutional to legislate upon the subject of polygamy itself, is it not unconstitutional, in donating the public lands, to impose a restriction which indirectly effects the same thing?

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I stated, at the outset of my remarks, that in what I should now say upon this subject I should waive the constitutional question entirely. I do not propose to say whether it is constitutional or not. I am viewing this as a great moral question; and I say that it is the right and duty of Congress, in making donations of the public lands, to impose such limitations and restrictions as they may think proper, such as would be made in the States.

Such a restriction would not be necessary in the State of South Carolina, because the State itself has made the restriction, by forbidding polygamy. But wherever polygamy exists, the line is distinctly drawn; and I submit that Congress have the right, and that it is their duty, in making donations, to impose restrictions in reference to it. I therefore insist, as I said yesterday, upon retaining this proviso as a moral question, and leave the constitutional question for others to discuss.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, when in order, I propose to offer, as an amendment, that the benefits of the bill shall not be extended to any one guilty of murder, arson, piracy, or robbery.

The objection which I originally urged against the proviso of the bill, it seems to me, has not been answered. It is true, sir, that I have not thought it necessary frequently to obtrude myself upon the House in answer to the several gentlemen who have taken the other side; but my colleague [Mr. COBB] has no right to conclude from my silence, under these circumstances, that I have "backed out"—I believe that was his expression. Sir, when I have nothing to say which can throw additional light upon the subject under consideration, silence appears to me most becoming; and in the most friendly spirit, I suggest the propriety of this course to the grave consideration of my colleague.

The proviso excludes from the benefit of the bill all persons who have more than one wife. Why? Because it is said polygamy is a crime. Then the exclusion operates by way of penalty, and is intended to operate by way of discouraging crime. This, then, as I understand it, is the assertion of a collateral or incidental jurisdiction over the morals of the people of the country, which is inconsistent with the theory of our limited Federal Constitution.

Our only jurisdiction over crimes is to be found in those clauses of the Constitution which authorize Congress to "provide for the punishment of counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States." To define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas, and offenses against the law of nations, "and to declare the punishment of treason."

In addition to this, then, there is a criminal jurisdiction arising out of that clause authorizing Congress to make all laws which may be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the powers conferred by the Constitution. And, sir, even as to these crimes, the mode of punishment is prescribed by the Constitution. The common law rules being preserved in all cases of accusation.

Has Congress the right to say that no man who is a polygamist shall be permitted to purchase the public lands, or be entitled to a preëmtor's right of settlement, or what is the same thing, to share in those grants made in the exercise of the power contained in the Constitution, authorizing "rules and regulations" for the disposal of the public lands?

If, through the exercise of the power "to dispose of" the public lands, Congress is to take this incidental control over this particular crime, why not over every other? And if in this mode, why not in every other mode of disposing of the territory? Why not extend the proviso so as to exclude from the benefit of the act all persons who are guilty of murder, arson, piracy, forgery, and, I might add, theft of slaves, if I were not afraid of shocking the sensibilities of some gentlemen, and thus bring the influence of the Government to bear upon the whole dark catalogue of crime?

Sir, these considerations are not answered by sophomoric declamation as to the heinousness of the offense. That, sir, is not the question, but whether we shall, for the first time in the history of our legislation, link into our acts the discouragement or punishment of crimes which are appropriately referred to the local Legislatures.

If Congress possesses any power, acting as the Legislature of this Territory, then let them exert it in a direct manner, by virtue of that power, and we could then meet the question fairly when it is presented; but let us not smuggle into this bill a jurisdiction not warranted by the clause of the Constitution under which it is framed.

The question was taken on the amendment to the amendment; and it was rejected.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I move to substitute for the words "provisions of this act," in the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, the words "donations of land made by this act."

Mr. Chairman, I had no desire to participate in this discussion, but simply to vote for the proviso as it has been amended; but I cannot pass with silence some of the remarks thrown out in the debate by gentlemen who are in favor of striking out this proviso. It seems to me they go aside from the fact, that by the bill to organize the Territory of Utah, which passed September, 1850, all the laws of that Territory passed by the Legislative Assembly and Governor are to be submitted to the Congress of the United States; and that, if disapproved, they are to be null and of no effect. I have the law before me.

Now, is it a fact that there are laws in Utah which establish the crime of polygamy, as asserted by gentlemen? My friend and colleague over the way, [Mr. DIXON], referred this morning to a law which he said countenanced, or established polygamy in that Territory. I had no opportunity to examine it. My friend from Alabama [Mr. PHILLIPS] said that we might as well insert a provision here to exclude any man guilty of murder, perjury, or any other crime. I understand that the Territorial Legislature of Utah denounce those crimes, and hold them to be crimes as they do in the States of this Union, whereas they tolerate the other crime, that of polygamy.

And here we have a beautiful specimen of this squatter sovereignty, so ably advocated by gentlemen in Congress; the leaving of the Territories to do as they please; the Territorial Legislatures to do what they please; establish any crime they choose. Whether we approve or not, we are to pass the laws unnoticed.

If I had the time, I would read from the law organizing the Territory of Utah, a law for which I take this occasion to say I did not vote. I felt indisposed to give the people of Utah, whom I conceived at that time to be a set of strolling squatters, who had seized the public land, and defied the authority of the United States. I was indisposed to give the people of that Territory, a territory twelve times as large, I am told, as that of New York, the power to set up and justify a crime in defiance of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. BOYCE. I am opposed to this wholesale legislation against a whole community. It reminds me of our revolutionary struggle. Sir, I well recollect what Burke said, when Lord North and his servile majority attempted to proscribe a whole province. He said, "I do not know how to draw up an indictment against a whole nation." And so with me. I do not know how to draw up an indictment against this whole people. I am for letting them alone.

It seems to me that this proviso is at war with that provision of the Constitution which says that no man shall be bound to answer for any criminal offense unless upon the presentment of a grand jury. Here you require this whole people to answer for a criminal offense, and on what presentment? The presentment of the Congress of the United States. Is that in consonance with the Constitution? Again: Every man has a right to a trial by jury when he is charged with crime. Do you give the people of Utah this right? No, you do not. To whom do you give the power to decide this question? You give it to this surveyor general

When a Mormon applies for a tract of land under the provisions of this bill, the surveyor general will say to him, "You shall not have it." "Why?" "Because you have more wives than one." Who is to decide that question? This surveyor general. He is to decide whether the man has been guilty of this crime or not. Is that consistent with the Constitution? However good our motives may be, let us not trample the Constitution and this great provision of liberty under foot. Sir, these people are entitled to our sympathy and pity. Look at their history. It is a history of misfortune and persecution, of disaster and suffering. They have never been permitted to live in peace and security in any community. They were driven from Missouri and from Illinois. Their beautiful city of Nauvoo was devastated, and they were compelled, with bleeding hearts, to bid adieu to the graves of their people and to their beautiful temple. Their prophet was taken and placed in jail in Carthage, and while there, was brutally murdered by assassins. They were then driven into the wilderness. They went up on the western side of Iowa, and there at mid-winter, whilst they were in the midst of suffering, the United States called upon them to go and fight the battles of the country. And how did they respond to that call? They responded to it better than the people of many parts of the United States. They sent almost their whole military force; and that people rallied around the star-spangled banner, and went out to fight the battles of our country. And yet you will not now permit those men to enjoy a home in that wilderness which they have rescued from barbarism and from the Indians.

The question was then taken on Mr. TAYLOR's amendment; and it was rejected.

Mr. RICHARDSON obtained the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair being unwilling to call gentlemen to order in debate, has, perhaps, permitted the rule to be violated to some extent; but in the further debate upon this bill he will attempt rigidly to enforce the rule.

Mr. COBB. I am very sorry the Chair is only going to adopt that course now. My colleague [Mr. PHILLIPS] has been heard, and I want an opportunity to reply.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is out of order.

I will read so much of the 34th rule as is necessary to show its application:

"Where debate is closed by order of the House, any member shall be allowed, in committee, five minutes to explain any amendment he may offer; after which any member who shall first obtain the floor shall be allowed to speak five minutes in opposition to it, and there shall be no further debate on the amendment."

Mr. SEWARD. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to propound a question to the Chair, with a view of facilitating the business. I wish to know if it will be in order to lay aside this bill, and take up and dispose of other territorial bills that are before the committee, to which there may be no objection? We can then return to a consideration of this bill, and spend upon it whatever may be left of the time of the special order.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, the committee can lay aside this bill, and proceed to the consideration of other bills.

Mr. SEWARD. I rise to a point of order. I insist that the motion submitted by me was in order. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] had the floor, but simply for the purpose of making a suggestion, as I understood.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to make a motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The floor was assigned by the Chair to the gentleman from Illinois. While he was occupying it, the gentleman from Georgia, nor any other gentleman, had no right to make any motion whatever.

Mr. SEWARD. Then I call the gentleman from Illinois to order, on the ground that he is not discussing the question before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. According to the understanding of the Chair, the gentleman from Illinois rose to a point of order. If the Chair was misinformed, he would like to be corrected.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rose to make an inquiry, upon which I desired to base a motion. I submit my motion now, and the Chair can decide whether I am in order or not.

Mr. SEWARD. If the gentleman submits a motion, he is in order; but if he make an inquiry merely, he is not in order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to lay aside this bill. The object I have in view, if the motion be agreed to, is to enable the committee to proceed to the consideration, and dispose of the other territorial bills.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is that motion debatable?

Mr. KEITT. I make this point of order. The committee rose, went into the House, and then a resolution was passed directing that the debate should be closed—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is not entitled to the floor. The gentleman from Georgia submits the motion that the committee rise.

The question was then taken upon Mr. SEWARD's motion; and it was decided in the negative. So the committee refused to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois submits the motion that this bill be laid aside.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I desire to know if that motion is debatable?

Mr. KEITT. I rise to a point of order. The House passed a resolution to close debate, to vote upon the amendments, and report the bill to the House. Having done that, I now ask whether that order can be set aside or disregarded by the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. A resolution was introduced, and passed by the House, in the usual form, closing debate on this bill, and directing the committee to proceed with its consideration, and report the bill and amendments to the House. Therefore the motion of the gentleman from Illinois cannot be entertained.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I desire to inquire of the Chair under what rule it has decided that the proposition to lay aside this bill is not debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is not in order.

Mr. ORR. There is an express rule, Mr. Chairman, that a motion for priority of business is not debatable.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Territories [Mr. RICHARDSON] will withdraw his motion to set aside the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion has been ruled out of order. There is no motion pending, except the amendments offered to the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, very well. That will do. I am perfectly satisfied with that.

Mr. LETCHER. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment, by inserting after the word "persons" the additional words "male or female."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the gentleman from Virginia cannot amend his own amendment.

Mr. LETCHER. But can I not modify it?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can modify it, but cannot speak upon that modification.

Mr. KERR. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make the motion to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] by inserting the words indicated by him, "male or female."

Mr. LETCHER. Mr. Chairman, which side of the proposition am I to take? Am I to speak for or against it?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia will have to speak against it.

Mr. LETCHER. Very well, it does not matter much. I can say as much on the one side as on the other. [Laughter.]

All that I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, is in reference to a point which has been made in the progress of this debate, and that by the gentleman from Alabama. He desired to know whether any member of this committee would undertake to discriminate—in the donation of land—against murderers, or against pirates, or against any other characters who were the subjects of crime. Now, sir, there is a very distinct answer to this question. I think there is a very conclusive answer to this view of the case. Neither the State of Virginia, nor the State of Alabama, nor the State of Georgia, nor any other civilized or well established community that I know of, in the United States, recognizes these crimes as part of their social system. But in the Territory of Utah polygamy is a system, a regularly recognized system—neither more nor less—adopted under the ecclesiastical law, recognized under the legislative law, and, in every way, and with every sanction that can be given to it, either by the clergy or by the legislative authority, recognized as an immutable, an unchangeable institution.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow me to make a remark?

Mr. LETCHER. Not just now; wait a moment. If the government of the Territory of Utah had recognized murder, or had recognized piracy, or had recognized any other species of crime as a legal system, then, sir, I say, we could here, in making donations of this sort, express on the part of Congress an unqualified hostility to any system of the kind.

Sir, what are we doing here? These people come and ask for special privileges under the law, and it is for us to say whether, while they have such a system among them, we will tolerate that institution, and encourage these people, by giving to them the very benefits and privileges that they ask. Now, Mr. Chairman, if we can do this, it seems to me that we are perfectly powerless, that we have no authority of any sort. It seems that, no matter what crime springs up in the country, when the professors of it get into a Territory, and ask for land, we must make donations to them, because we have made donations to others, and have no right to make a discrimination.

Now, sir, as to the view of my friend from South Carolina, [Mr. BOYCE.] He says that this is a matter of religion. Why, sir, it is exactly the reverse. If these people had a decent religion, they would not have polygamy there. It is not a matter of religion. It is a matter of vice; and whenever this House undertakes to make these donations, it is paying a tribute to, and encouraging vice, infamy, and iniquity.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no further amendment in order; and no further debate can be had on the amendment pending.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rise to a privileged question. I move that the committee rise. I will state, if the committee will permit me, the object I have in submitting the motion. It is to get rid of this bill, in order to proceed to other business.

Mr. BOYCE. I object to it.

The question was then put; and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman [Mr. PHELPS] reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly bills relating to territorial business, and more particularly House bill No. 317, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now move to reconsider the vote by which debate was terminated upon House bill No. 317. I will state the object which I have in view in making this motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not debatable, the gentleman will recollect.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I hope, by common consent, the gentleman will be permitted to proceed, and make his explanation.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the gentleman will proceed.

No objection was made.

Mr. RICHARDSON. My object is to remove the order terminating debate, and then to go into Committee of the Whole, move to lay aside this bill, and take up and endeavor to pass other territorial bills, and thereby get through this special order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then I hope the motion will not prevail.

Mr. HAMILTON. I call for tellers upon the motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HARRIS and VAIL were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 66, noes 61.

So the motion to reconsider prevailed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the resolution be laid upon the table.

The question was taken; and the resolution was laid upon the table.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was put; and the motion agreed to. The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. PHELPS in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill (No. 317) to establish the office of surveyor general in Utah, to grant donations to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to lay aside this bill, not for the purpose of reporting it to the House, but merely to pass it over and take up the next bill.

Mr. DISNEY. I wish merely to state a fact to the committee for its information. I have some days hesitated whether it was my duty to announce the fact to the House; but, upon consideration, I think it due to the House to be advised of it. What I desire to state is, that, among other matters, African slavery is recognized and established by law in the Territory of Utah.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to pass this bill by, which motion is not debatable.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I know of no reason for not disposing of this bill now, after it has been discussed for two days.

Mr. LETCHER. I propose to amend the motion of the gentleman from Illinois. I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it be rejected.

Mr. ORR. Is that in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Illinois is merely to pass the bill by, and the motion of the gentleman from Virginia is not, in the opinion of the Chair, in order as an amendment to that motion.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will withdraw my motion, if the gentleman from Virginia desires to submit his. My object is to have the bill disposed of in some way.

Mr. LETCHER. Then I submit my motion, that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do not pass.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois has been withdrawn.

Mr. JONES. My point of order is still applicable. I submit that there is nothing before the committee. The territorial business was made the special order; and I hold that no one case has precedence of any other, but that it is in order to move to take up any bill. The bill which you had before you at the last sitting does not come up as a matter of course at the next session of the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish to say a single word of reply to the gentleman from Tennessee. What he has said may be true. If true, I would deem it right and proper to determine what bills the committee ought to take up. They must determine that question for themselves. It is right and proper that they should do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have not withdrawn my motion, and I do not withdraw it.

Mr. LETCHER. Then the Chair decides my motion to be out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw his motion. As he has not done so, the motion of the gentleman from Virginia is not in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is there any question pending?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir; one of priority of business; a motion to lay the bill aside.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I demand tellers on the motion to lay the bill aside.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HARRIS, of Alabama, and WHEELER, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 65.

So the committee refused to lay the bill aside.

Mr. HAMILTON. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing the debate upon this bill, and on that motion I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL and PARKER were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 41; noes not counted.

So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. I regret deeply that this bill has consumed so much of the time of the House. I regret that it has ever been introduced.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. What question is before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill and the various amendments. The House has reconsidered the vote by which the debate was closed.

Mr. TAYLOR. I should like to ask the Chair, what is the present position of the bill, for I really do not understand it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the proposition now pending in committee. It is bill No. 317, which has been under discussion yesterday and to-day. On yesterday, the House adopted a resolution closing debate in five minutes after the House should resume the consideration of the bill. A few minutes since, in the House, the vote by which that resolution was adopted, was reconsidered, and the resolution closing debate was laid upon the table. General debate upon the bill has, therefore, been reopened by the action of the House. The amendments pending are to the third section of the bill, and with reference to the last proviso. The pending propositions are the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] and an amendment to that amendment, offered by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. KERR.]

Mr. LETCHER. Is it in order now to submit a motion that the committee rise and report the bill to the House, with a recommendation that it do not pass?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order. The gentleman from Oregon is upon the floor, and no motion can be submitted while he is upon the floor.

Mr. LANE. If that motion could be made and adopted, I would yield the floor most cheerfully. My object is to ask the committee to make some disposition of this bill. We have before us many important territorial bills that deeply interest the people. This bill has been discussed for two days, when there is no prospect of its ever receiving the favorable consideration of the committee. One week has been set apart for the consideration of territorial business, and we have now only one day of that week left, and there is some doubt whether the House will sit to-morrow, although I hope it will. If further time is spent on this bill, it must be apparent to everybody, that all the other territorial business must lie over perhaps to the next Congress. Is there any prospect that the House will give us another week? If not, measures which are dearer to me than life itself must be postponed, and cannot be acted on during this Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will report the titles of the bills which are still undisposed of, and which have not yet been acted upon.

Mr. TAYLOR. This is a very important bill, quite as much so as any bill touching the Territories of the United States. It proposes to extend the land system over that Territory.

Mr. LANE. Two days have been already spent upon it, and I would like to know by what mode of reasoning the gentleman from Ohio can undertake to say that this bill can be passed in five, ten, or fifteen minutes, as I know gentlemen who are prepared to speak upon it for two or three hours. If we continue to discuss it, this day will be consumed, and the bill will still be undisposed of.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I agree with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] that the principles of this bill are very important, but we all know that there is a general disposition in the House always to provide for the Territories, and give them sufficient time here in which to have their business transacted. I always vote to allow territorial matters sufficient time; and if this day and the next are not enough to legislate intelligently upon all the bills which are necessary for the welfare of the Territories, I pledge the honorable gentleman that I shall be one of the most active in efforts to give them another week if necessary. I prefer to do that than to have bills driven through in hot haste, involving as important principles as are contained in some of these bills.

I agree with the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS,] that there are principles involved in this bill, upon which a great deal might be said upon either side; and we ought to understand what we are doing, before we are called upon to vote. I desire to state to the honorable gentleman from Oregon, that there can be no difficulty about this matter whatever; and that I am ready to do all in my power towards attending to the business of the Territories.

Mr. LANE. I am under many obligations to the gentleman from Ohio, and every gentleman who has been willing to grant sufficient time for the consideration of territorial business. The Territories are entirely dependent upon Congress. They have, it is true, the privilege of sending representatives here, but these representatives have not the privilege of voting. It has always been painful to me to consume one minute of the time of the House, and I would be glad if the business relating to the Territory of Oregon could be presented upon its merits, and a vote taken directly upon it without the necessity of any explanation upon my part. But I should be very unwilling, and should feel very much grieved, if the necessary legislation was defeated for want of time in which to consider it. If the House will say that other days shall be set apart for the consideration of territorial business, then I have not a word to say against whatever course the committee may pursue in regard to the continuance of the discussion.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I understand that we are to continue with this territorial business until it is entirely disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is mistaken in regard to the order of the House. The order of the House appropriates the first week of the month of May, commencing with the first Monday of the month, to the consideration of territorial business. This is the special order on the Journal of the House.

Mr. KERR. There can be more time assigned for the conclusion of this business.

Mr. LANE. But is there any certainty that we can get any other time for that purpose? If this bill be laid aside, and if at any other time leave be given for the consideration of territorial business, it can be taken up first, and the committee can now act upon bills which may meet their approval, consider and pass them; and postpone the consideration of such other bills as may not meet their approval. I hope the committee will do so.

Mr. KERR. Will the gentleman from Oregon yield me the floor for a moment?

Mr. LANE. Certainly.

Mr. KERR. I would be very sorry, Mr. Chairman, to present here even the appearance of desiring to obstruct needful legislation in regard to the Territories. I, however, am in favor of a full and free discussion of the important questions presented by the bill now before the committee. I think these questions very grave in their character. I think they ought to be discussed and well considered before they are acted upon. But then I will deal frankly in what I have to say in reference to my course upon these questions. Gentlemen insist here upon having time set apart with a view of transacting mere territorial business. Now if they will offer territorial business of a purely local character, I will aid them; but if it be any part of the understanding to bring up these territorial railroad bills, then I am for taking any legitimate course, according to the usages of Parliament, in order to prevent their consideration.

Mr. LANE. I desire to say to my friend from North Carolina, and to every other member of the committee, that we ask no railroad bill for the Territory of Oregon.

Mr. KERR. I know that; but there is one for the Territory of Minnesota.

Mr. LANE. We ask for nothing but that which is strictly local, and which relates solely to the interests of the people there. Nor will I favor any railroad bill for any Territory, to interfere with the legitimate territorial legislation.

Mr. KERR. Then I will just ask my friend from Oregon to apply to the chairman of the Committee on Territories, and ascertain whether it is the purpose of that committee to give us a Minnesota railroad bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I state to the gentleman from North Carolina that the Committee on Territories have no such bill to present.

Mr. KERR. I beg pardon. I spoke inadvertently; I meant to say the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, I am very willing to give the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands the opportunity of answering the inquiry of the gentleman from North Carolina; and I yield the floor for that purpose.

No reply was made.

Mr. LANE. I will only say to the committee now, that if they will lay aside this bill that has been under discussion, and take up bills relative to Oregon and other Territories, which are strictly local; and if the committee do not decide that they are so strictly local in their objects, I, so far as I am concerned, will ask them to be laid aside and not acted favorably upon. But, with a view of obtaining legislation upon matters of deep interest to the Territories, I will ask the committee now—I will appeal to members on behalf of the people whom I represent—to lay aside this bill and take up the Oregon bills, that they may be considered and acted upon.

Mr. LETCHER. Mr. Chairman, will you have the Calendar read, and let us see what bills are on it for our action?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will, by general consent, read the Calendar.

The list of bills remaining on the Calendar—numbering some nine or ten—was read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state, in reference to Senate bill (No. 220) to establish the office of surveyor general of New Mexico, to grant donations to actual settlers therein, that the committee have already acted upon a House bill providing for the same object. There is also another bill, which was informally laid aside yesterday. That was a bill in relation to the payment of the civil officers employed in the Territory of New Mexico while under military government.

Mr. KERR. These are all the bills upon the Calendar; but, as I understand it, the Committee on Public Lands can report any bill they please, at any time, in reference to territorial business.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to ask of the Chair a question, in order to bring a fact to the attention of the committee. The question is, whether, if we lay aside this bill, it is not in the power of any member of this committee to have a contest whenever any other bill comes up? For instance, if we lay aside this bill and take up the next one to it, and dispose of it, the committee can, if they desire, resume the consideration of this same bill; and hence it will be impossible for those gentlemen who want to get in railroad bills, to get them in ahead of the bills which are upon the Calendar. I desire to know of the Chair if that is not so?

The CHAIRMAN. Although debate is not strictly in order, the Chair will state, in reply to the interrogatories of the gentleman, with the permission of the committee, that if this bill is laid aside, the Chair will proceed to call the bills upon the Calendar in the order in which they stand. If, in doing so, objection is made to the consideration of any particular bill, it will be for the committee to decide the question.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. A short time since I was in favor of postponing this bill, and of laying it aside. But seeing that the House is not proceeding any faster under that motion than before, I change my opinion, and I suppose we may as well act upon this bill now as at any other time. And if we desire to get through with the territorial business, let us set all night, and to-morrow night. That is the way to accomplish the thing.

Gentleman say there are important principles involved in this bill. I suppose there is not a principle in it upon which the mind of every member is not already made up. If gentlemen want to speak, let them speak, and let us set them out.

Mr. WALLEY. The matter which we are now engaged upon is highly important. There are other matters and bills which are no less so. This bill is as important to the gentleman from Utah, as the others are to those who represent the other Territories. Why, then, lay this bill aside, and take up others, for no other reason than because other gentlemen wish to press their immediate consideration? My suggestion to the committee is this: that if we are not prepared to act upon this bill now, we should continue the discussion; but if we are, we should vote upon it without further delay. But it is worse than useless to lay aside one bill which has reference to local business, without definite action, for the purpose of taking up others which have no prior or superior claim to our present consideration.

The time already occupied in discussing the question of laying aside this bill without any decision of the committee—

Here Mr. WALLEY gave way to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. LANE, who said: I will say to the gentleman over the way, [Mr. WALLEY,] that for the purpose of ending the debate upon this bill, I will withdraw my motion, and submit the motion that the committee rise, for the purpose of terminating the debate upon it.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I will suggest to the gentleman from Oregon that that will protract the debate longer. If anybody wants to discuss the bill let them; and I assure the gentleman that one or two hour speeches will do away with these five-minute speeches.

Mr. LANE. Very well, I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. PERKINS, of New York. Is it in order to move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House, with an commendation that it be rejected?

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is in order.

Mr. PERKINS. I will move that it be laid aside, and be reported to the House with that recommendation.

Mr. WHEELER. Upon that motion I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL and KEITT appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes eighty-four; a further count not being required.

So the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House.

The bill of the House No. 335, entitled "A bill to extend the right of preemption over unsurveyed lands in Minnesota, and for other purposes," was next taken up for consideration, and read by the Clerk, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the provisions of the preemption act of 4th September, 1841, and the acts amendatory thereof, shall be extended to the lands in Minnesota Territory, whether surveyed or not; but in all cases where preemption is claimed on unsurveyed lands, the settler shall file his declaratory statement within three months after the survey has been made and returned, and make proof and payment before the day appointed by the President's proclamation for the commencement of the sale of the lands, including the tract claimed: Provided, however, That if, when said lands are surveyed, it is found that two or more persons have settled upon the same quarter-section, each shall be permitted to enter his improvement, as near as may be, by legal subdivisions.

Mr. LETCHER. I should like to inquire why it is proposed to extend the rights of preemption to the unsurveyed as well as the surveyed lands?

Mr. RICE. I will answer the gentleman from Virginia. A tract of twenty-eight millions of acres was purchased by the Government; a survey was authorized, and a portion of the lands surveyed. The preemption laws extend to the surveyed lands, but settlements have been made upon those unsurveyed; and the object is to prevent speculators from coming in and depriving the honest settler of his improvements. They pay their $1 25 per acre as soon as the land is offered for sale.

A portion of the lands on the west side of the Mississippi was ordered to be surveyed. A portion was surveyed. Citizens went there and settled on the land; but some of the surveys proved to be incorrect, and they were recalled. Now, under the preemption laws, those who settled there prior to the surveys are not entitled to the right of preemption. The object is merely to extend the preemption right to the first settlers.

Mr. LETCHER. Is the bill intended to be confined to the erroneous surveys, or unlimited?

Mr. RICE. It is applicable to all lands not reserved for other purposes.

Mr. LETCHER. The whole territory is to be opened to preemption?

Mr. RICE. Yes, sir.

Mr. LETCHER. You do not propose to apply the bill to the erroneous surveys?

Mr. RICE. It applies to all. Settlers in Minnesota think that it is very hard that they shall not be afforded the privilege of paying $1 25 per acre for the public land, without unnecessary restrictions, when settlers in the other Territories have granted them one hundred and sixty acres each. Minnesota has not had granted her one foot of land for any purpose whatever—for internal improvements, schools, or for any other purpose. She is paying thousands of dollars daily into your Treasury. All we want is, that the settlers who have gone there, and made their improvements, shall be protected against speculators. Such is the object of the bill. The right asked has been extended to California, and to Oregon, and the other Territories.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The next bill on the Calendar for consideration is a bill to authorize the President of the United States to cause to be surveyed the tract of land in the Territory of Minnesota belonging to the half-breeds, or mixed bloods of the Dacotah, or Sioux nation of Indians, and for other purposes.

The bill was read through.

The first section was then read for amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I desire to briefly state the object of the bill. It will be observed by the committee, that under the treaty of Prairie du Chien, of the 15th July, 1830, on the application of the Sioux tribes or bands of Indians to the Government, a certain tract of country, designated as lying at the head of navigation on the west side of the Mississippi river, on Lake Pepin, within the limits of Minnesota Territory, embracing in length about thirty-two miles, and in width about fifteen miles, should be set apart for the half-breeds of their tribe. There was a further provision, that they should hold said lands or reservation under the same title that all other Indian lands were held. There was still another condition in the tenth article of the treaty, which authorized the President of the United States, at any future time, to set apart to any of the said half-breeds, to be held in fee-simple, a section of land, but no more. Under the provisions of that treaty, the half-breeds, many of whom are enlightened, some engaged in mercantile pursuits, and some in farming, have applied repeatedly to the Government to have the provisions of that treaty carried into effect. Hitherto nothing has been done in reference to it. This bill contemplates carrying into effect the provisions of the treaty, so as to secure to the half-breeds the interests that were intended to be secured to them under the treaty.

The first provision of the bill, it will be observed, authorizes scrip to be issued to the half-breeds who were entitled to it under the treaty of Prairie du Chien, of July 15th, 1830, upon condition that they make a relinquishment to the Government of the United States, under such form as may be prescribed, of all the interest they possess in that reservation. It will also be observed by the committee, that there is no power under the bill to dispose of that scrip. The object of the Committee on Indian Affairs in reference to that, was to prevent the half-breeds from being imposed upon in the disposition of their land. The committee was fully aware, that the moment the patent issues, the power of disposal attaches. The bill also secures to the half-breeds the right of preemption. This we thought proper, in order to secure the interests that were intended to be conferred on the half-breeds of the Sioux tribe of Indians.

The other two provisions of the bill are short and simple, providing for the survey of the land within the limits of the reservation, and the taking of the census.

I have thought it proper to say this much in reference to the bill. Let me say further, that this reservation embraces within its limits some of the most fertile lands in the Territory of Minnesota, stretching to the head waters of navigation upon the Mississippi river, so as utterly to preclude any communication by the inhabitants of Minnesota with the Mississippi river; for every member of the committee well understands the fact that under our laws and regulations concerning the Indian tribes, that no citizens of the United States are authorized to pass within the limits of their territory without authority from the Government. Not only so, but they have no authority even to clear a road. They have no authority within the limits of that Territory to build a school house or erect a church. Hence this bill is not only important to the interests of the half-breeds of the Sioux tribe of Indians, but it is of tenfold greater interest to every citizen of the Territory of Minnesota. I believe that the bill, as framed, will meet the objects contemplated. Some gentlemen might be disposed to think that the objects of the treaty could be carried into effect without legislation; but this, in my opinion, cannot be done. As late as 1852, a treaty was sent to the Senate of the United States, proposing to dispose of this tract or reservation of land for the sum of $150,000; but that body refused to ratify the treaty, and upon proper principles.

The half-breeds are not a tribe of Indians in the sense in which we use the term "Indian tribes," and hence there was no power in this Government to enter into a treaty with them. Nor can we reach the object desired by treating with the Sioux band of Indians, for the very reason that they have parted with the interest they possessed within that reservation. It is then perfectly apparent that the objects we have in view can only be attained by the legislation of Congress; and I think that such objects can be attained by the passage of the bill now under consideration. I hope that it may receive the favorable consideration of the committee, and that they will report it to the House, with the recommendation that it pass. A friend near me has suggested that perhaps I ought to state the quantum of land for which provision is made in this bill. It is about three hundred and eighty thousand acres. I will state that the bill makes provision for such half-breeds as do not reside in said reservation, but have moved beyond its limits, and who under the treaty were entitled to participate in its benefits, and that a census shall be taken so as to enable the Government to ascertain who are and who are not entitled to its benefits. Let me say here, in addition to what I have already stated, according to the best information I have been enabled to obtain in reference to this matter, that there are about two hundred half-breeds who are entitled to receive the benefits of this bill.

Mr. HAVEN. I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Mississippi who has just taken his seat. Very likely he may have explained the matter sufficiently, but I was endeavoring to learn from the bill what I desired to know, and did not hear all his remarks. The bill seems to be, from a hasty reading of it, imperfect. It authorizes the President to exchange certain things; and I wish the gentleman from Mississippi would inform us, as the bill, I think, does not, what it is to be exchanged, and for what the exchange is to be made. It seems to me that the language of the bill is not very clear and explicit upon this point.

Mr. WRIGHT. I regret very much that my friend from New York [Mr. HAVEN] has not been enabled to discover what the exchange is to be. Most assuredly he has not read the bill, or else his optics would have been keen enough to discover that it was an exchange of the half-breed reservation for scrip. But let me explain the matter, in reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from New York. Why is an exchange of land made for scrip? For the reason that you can only obtain the objects contemplated in the treaty by such a provision. They are those who have moved beyond the limits of Minnesota, who occupy their farms, who are cultivating them, and are not residents within the limits of Minnesota Territory. The object of this bill is to give these half-breeds scrip, so that they can avail themselves of the benefits of their own labor by securing the lands upon which they have settled. Nor does this ultimate in injury to the United States, for the reason that, under the provisions of this treaty, as will be observed, none will receive scrip who are not entitled.

In addition to this, I would say, that this will open up the reservation for settlement by white citizens within its limits. And, for the information of the committee, I will say, that it is only the most civilized of the half-breeds who have remained there. Those who have preferred uncivilized life and Indian habits have gone beyond the limits of the reservation. They are, however, entitled to the benefits secured, or intended to be. Hence the provision in the bill authorizing them secured to them under the treaty of Prairie du Chien, to receive scrip. But in order to induce them to take care of their rights, the bill provides that they cannot dispose of their scrip until they have located it; and, as I stated before, when the patent is issued to them, then they shall have the power of disposing of their land, and of receiving the benefits to which they are entitled.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. As I understand it, this is a block of land on the Mississippi river, containing some three hundred and eighty thousand acres. That land cannot be approached, or, at any rate, it cannot be crossed by any of the inhabitants of the United States. It is important that it should be brought into market. It is important that it should be opened for transit, opened for ways, or highways, or railroads. It is important that it should be opened for the purposes of communication between the country beyond and the Mississippi river. It seems to me this is an object which it is desirable should be attained. The Indians, or the half-breeds, hold this land in community; it is in the one block; and this bill, as I understand it, provides that they shall give up their interest in this land for scrip—the scrip corresponding with the number of acres to which they may be respectively entitled. If they have their scrip, they may locate their lands where they choose. They may locate it in this territory, or anywhere else upon the surveyed or unsurveyed lands of the United States. It thus exchanges land for land—this land for other. It seems to me that this will be to the advantage of the Indians. The effect of the bill will be to open up this territory, which lies in the way of all improvement, to the people of the United States. And this will be a great advantage to the people of the Territories, and to the general interests of the country. I see no objection that there can be against this bill.

There being no proposition to amend,

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved that the bill be laid aside and reported to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be laid aside to be reported, unless amendments be proposed to it.

Mr. HENN. Before the bill be laid aside, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WRIGHT] to that portion of the bill embraced within the twentieth to the twenty-eighth lines, to see if there is not a contradiction or inconsistency of terms there.

Mr. WASHBURNE. That section has been perfected, and no amendment is in order.

Mr. HENN. I do not propose any amendment. I merely wish to ask the member from Mississippi if there is not a contradiction in terms from the twentieth to the twenty-eighth line.

Mr. WASHBURNE. I do not know whether even that is in order or not.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment is not in order.

Mr. HENN. I have made the suggestion because I dislike to see a bill which has no sense in it pass through this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read that portion of the bill which the gentleman from Iowa has referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

—“which said certificates or scrip may be located upon any of the lands within said reservation not now occupied by actual and bona fide settlers of the half breeds or mixed bloods, or such other persons as have gone into said Territory by authority of law, or upon any other unoccupied lands subject to preemption or private sale, or upon any other unsurveyed lands, not reserved by Government, upon which they have respectively made improvements.”

Mr. HENN. I understand that the provision was intended for the benefit of those half-breed Indians who have gone out of this reserve. In my opinion, the last line which was read cuts them off from locating upon their own improvements.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Mississippi. I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that, under the common preemption law, the right attaches.

The bill was then laid aside, to be reported to the House.

The next bill in order upon the Calendar which came up for consideration was House bill (No. 119) to provide for the continuation of the military road from Myrtle creek to Scottsburg, in Oregon.

The bill was read in extenso, and no amendment being offered thereto, it was laid aside, to be reported to the House.

The next bill upon the Calendar which came up for consideration in order, was House bill (No. 339) to authorize the Secretary of War to settle and adjust the expenses of the Rogue River Indian war.

The bill was read in extenso.

The Clerk then read the first section.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, the duty devolves upon me, I imagine, to give an explanation of the object of this bill, and of the circumstances which make its passage necessary. If I knew that it would pass without anything being said by me, I would say nothing; and it would gratify me very much. But, for fear that it might not be so, I avail myself of the opportunity to make a brief statement.

In the Rogue river valley there are two great tribes of Indians, the Umpquas and Shastas, all known as the Rogue River Indians. These Indians, for the last twelve months, have been preparing for war. They were enabled to provide themselves with the implements of war, and with everything necessary to commence a deadly hostility, and to make every arrangement necessary for carrying out their purpose, by means of appearing friendly to the whites, in hunting for them, and selling the proceeds of the chase for guns, powder, balls, &c.

In that vicinity there are rich mines, and many American citizens had rushed in there for the purpose of digging for gold. Many persons from the States who had no intention of becoming citizens of that Territory, and who did not become citizens, went there in search of gold. It is the habit of miners, and it is the habit of American citizens who are in search of gold, to take with them a rifle and other weapons which they regard as necessary for their personal safety and protection.

The Indians in that valley, who are a superior race, remarkable for their intelligence, availed themselves of the great number of miners, who purchased of them the game that they could kill, and which was very plenty in that portion of Oregon, to realize a considerable sum of money, which they took care to invest in rifles, pistols, powder, lead, and percussion caps, and everything else necessary to commence a war of extermination; in this way all they had received in twelve months past had been invested. At that time the white people in the vicinity, among whom were many families, believed they were as safe as the people of the city of Washington now consider themselves. The massacre commenced the first day by a scattering band of Indians; and Edwards, Wills, and Nolen, all of them American citizens, were massacred. Only these three were murdered the first day. This was, however, only a beginning of the execution of a scheme which had been matured for sweeping off every white man, woman, and child in that country. This tribe had formed an alliance with other tribes. The Klamath Indians, numbering some five hundred warriors, within seventy-five miles, and Tiasoe Tyee's band, within twenty-five miles, had agreed to join them in the massacre; and, as soon as the war commenced, they were all to rush in, and sweep from the face of the earth every man, woman, and child. And, Mr. Chairman, their designs would have been accomplished, but for the prompt and efficient aid of Captain Alden, who is now in this city, crippled for life, in consequence of a wound he received in that war. I say that but for his aid they would have been swept from the country, every man, woman, and child. The Indians were well armed; and it is a fact, strange as it may seem, that the white people were mostly without arms. They had no apprehensions from these Indians. They had lived with them for many months in peace. They had sold their arms to the Indians, and believed them to be perfectly harmless in their intentions.

When the massacre commenced Captain Alden was one hundred miles off. The intelligence was received, and he, with a company of ten men, his whole available force, immediately started in the night, and rushed to the rescue. They succeeded in checking the Indians for the time being. In the mean time two companies of Californians, under Captains Goodall and Rhodes, turned out and joined Captain Alden. All the people, or nearly all in Rogue river valley, capable of bearing arms, were organized into companies, two under Captains Miller and Lamerick for active service, and one under Captain Fowler, for the protection of the town of Jacksonville. The two companies under Captains Miller and Lamerick, were organized into a battalion, and placed under the command of Colonel Ross. I take occasion here to say that too much praise cannot be given to Captain Alden for his prompt organization of these troops, or to the troops themselves for their gallantry and good conduct.

Soon after the battle with the Indians, Captain Nesmith, who had been ordered out by the Governor, joined me with a large company of volunteers; also, Captain Smith, with a company of United States dragoons; Captains Martin, Applegate, and Terry, each with a small company, promptly repaired to the theater of hostilities. To all these officers, and the men under their command, I take pleasure in saying that great praise is due for their gallant and soldier-like bearing. I also take pleasure in saying that I am indebted to Major Alvord, of the United States Army, for much valuable assistance in negotiating a treaty with the Indians, as well as Superintendent Palmer. Mr. Culver, Indian agent, threw down the shovel, the pick, and other mining implements, and rushed to the rescue. By this timely movement the progress of the massacre was checked, and but for it every white inhabitant of that country must have been stricken down. He divided his forces at night, so as to prevent the Indians from coming upon the settlements, and in that way managed to hold them in check. Many skirmishes, however, ensued, and John R. Hardin, Dr. Rose, and others, were killed. On the morning of the 16th of August, I received notice at my residence, which is one hundred miles north of that point, that the Indians had commenced a general slaughter of the white people of that country. This intelligence was brought to me by Mr. Ellinger and Mr. Nichol, who had ridden the whole distance in a day and night. In a few minutes after its arrival, I was on the road to the Rogue River valley.

I mention these facts to show the committee my knowledge of the transactions there. It is necessary that I should allude to them.

On the 15th day of August, Captain Armstrong, a valued and respected citizen of Oregon, passed my house on his way to California, through the Rogue River valley. Then the rumor was indefinite—that there was trouble in that quarter—but we did not know to what extent. It had been my lot to have been thrown into the company of Captain Armstrong in 1851, during a war with the same Indians. I found him a gallant and valuable gentleman. I mentioned that I was unwilling to see him go in the direction in which he was going without a rifle. He had none with him. “What,” he replied, “was the matter?” I told him the rumor had reached us that there was trouble of some kind in the valley; that his life was too valuable to be incautiously trusted there; and that he had better take my rifle. He did so. In the course of that night he met the express going for me, and waited until I overtook him, when we traveled together. We arrived in Rogue River valley 19th of August. We found Captain Alden, with his usual gallantry and efficiency, in command, and affording protection to our citizens. His force, in my judgment, was sufficient to make a movement against the enemy, which he had already contemplated. A few days before, a portion of his command under Lieutenant Ely had been sent to make a reconnaissance. He fell into an ambuscade, and nearly half his command were killed. The other half would have shared the same fate but for the timely arrival of a reinforcement. Although I came as a volunteer, Captain Alden insisted that I should take the command of the troops. At his urgent request I did so. Sunday afternoon order was given to be ready to move on Monday morning at four o'clock. At the appointed time every foot was in the stirrup. Wednesday morning we overtook the Indians, and brought them to battle. Captain Alden was shot down. Captain Armstrong received a shot at about the same moment, and just had time to say that they had given him a dead center shot. The conflict led to a peace. Notwithstanding the screams, yells, and war-whoops of the Indians for four hours, and notwithstanding we had failed to dislodge them, they agreed to make peace. They asked for peace. They wanted to know who commanded the troops. I heard them. I know their language well, having had a good deal to do with them, and knew most of them personally. They called out for me to come in, as they wanted a talk. They were tired of fighting, and desired peace. Well, I had been a little hurt myself, and I said to them and to the command that I would rather fight forty battles than talk about one peace. But after a good deal of time had been lost, and after a great deal of persuasion, I went among them. The preliminaries of a peace were made on the battle-ground. We camped on the battle-ground for two nights. The Indians were so well satisfied that there would be a peace that they assisted in removing our wounded men on litters across the country, which, by the by, is the worst country I ever traveled over. Well, a peace was made, and it has been maintained until this time, and I think it always will be maintained, for the Government has purchased their lands. A treaty was made with them directly after the war for their territory, and that treaty has been ratified.

I have given this history of the war from its commencement to its termination, for the purpose of satisfying the committee that the volunteers who turned out on that occasion ought to be paid for their services. I ask that the Secretary of War may be authorized to pay them. Many lost their lives. The Indians killed nearly as many of us as we killed of them. We only ask that those volunteers who turned out and assisted in putting down an Indian war that would otherwise have lasted for years, and cost the Government millions of dollars, and hundreds of lives—and, as it was, did cost us the lives of many valuable citizens—may be paid for their services. The troops were disbanded as soon as it was thought safe to do so. I kept them with me but a few days after the peace was made, and remained near the Indians for several weeks myself for two reasons; one was, that I was not very well able to get away from them, and the other was, that I knew that by remaining there until the hot blood had somewhat cooled, I could prevent a renewal of hostilities between the Indians and the whites. We only ask that the volunteers shall be paid for the time which they actually served, and the necessary expenses of subsistence, ammunition, forage, and so forth. The accounts were all carefully kept. Captain Alden had appointed quartermasters and commissaries, and the accounts were as accurate and correct as I have ever seen them in the Army. I hope this explanation will satisfy the committee that the bill ought to pass.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I should like to ask the gentleman from Oregon a question. Will the gentleman state about how much the expenditures will amount to?

Mr. LANE. My opinion is that they will amount to about $150,000; perhaps a little over or a little under. I cannot, however, say exactly.

Mr. WASHBURN. The language of the bill is rather wide. It provides for appropriating money for the expenditures for all necessary and proper supplies. Now, would it not be well enough to have some limitation as to the full amount?

Mr. LANE. I am very willing to say that it shall not exceed $175,000, if the committee desire that there shall be a restriction. But I have confidence in the Secretary of War. I have confidence in his ability, integrity, and honesty, and in his capacity to judge from the papers what allowances are reasonable. He will allow nothing wrong, and we ask nothing but what is right. Let me say here that, so far as I was concerned, I settled my accounts on the spot. I went out as a volunteer, but I received while there a commission as brigadier general from the acting Governor of the Territory. As soon as I could ride down from the portion of the country where the war took place, I returned the commission with a note on it that I charged nothing for my services; that I would not receive anything for them then, or at any future time, nor will I.

But that was not the case with others. Many persons left their business and hurried to the rescue of the people there, when the Indians were about to tomahawk men, women, and children; and this would have been done, had it not been for the noble conduct of Captain Alden and those brave men who volunteered in their defense. All I ask is that these men shall be paid, and that the actual and necessary expenses of the war shall also be paid. I hope no further explanations will be necessary.

Mr. COBB. It might be well for me to take the advice of my sage colleague from the Mobile district, [Mr. PHILLIPS,] and preserve silence.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order. He can only proceed in the discussion of the bill.

Mr. COBB. I am afraid the Chair is about to interrupt me. [Laughter.] I hope the committee will give me three minutes to reply to my colleague.

[Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"]

My reply, as the committee has given me the privilege, shall be directly to the remark that fell from my honorable colleague—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is under the necessity of calling the gentleman from Alabama to order.

Mr. COBB. Will not the committee give me a few minutes for an explanation?

[Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"]

I will occupy but five minutes' time. My worthy colleague intimated to me this morning—in fact, advised me sagely—that silence might become me, his worthy colleague. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not in order in referring to his colleague.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I desire to say a word by way of explanation.

Mr. COBB. Perhaps the explanation may prove satisfactory, and then there will be no occasion for my making any remarks.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I understood the gentleman in his printed remarks on yesterday to say that I had backed out from the position I set out with in the discussion of this bill. I said, this morning, in reply to that remark, that I had not thought it necessary to obtrude myself frequently during the debate to answer every one who chose to make a remark upon the other side of this question, and that I did not feel it necessary to occupy the time of this House for the mere purpose of speaking, when I had nothing really to say which could throw additional light upon the subject; and that, under those circumstances, silence appeared to me the most becoming, which was the course I would recommend my colleague to take.

Mr. COBB. The explanation is worse than the original remark. I desire to make only a brief explanation, and then I shall be done. I should not reply to the remark of my colleague, were it not made a matter of record, which will go to the country, and from which they will infer that, in all probability, I obtruded myself upon the time of this House unnecessarily, and made speeches such as ought not to be made here. I appeal to gentlemen if they have ever known me to occupy the floor unless I had been discussing questions directly connected with the duties assigned me as a member of an important committee, or such as are directly connected with the interests of the people I represent. I ask members of this House to respond. If there be a gentleman here who thinks I have occupied the floor unnecessarily, let him now rise and say so.

No one rises. [Laughter.] There is one thing, sir, which I desire to say, and it is this, that while the gentleman—my honorable colleague—can, in all probability, present to the country forty-two pages of speeches, delivered by him during this Congress, the humble person that addresses you, if he could pile up every word that he has uttered, it would not fill more than four pages. How often, I ask, have I been on the floor speaking on questions that were not absolutely before the House? And if I have at any time advocated a measure here, I had confidence in it; and I know that a majority of the House, in almost every instance, have sustained the position that I assumed.

That is a consolation to me. And let my constituency know it by the same record through which they will read the advice which my colleague chose to give me to keep silence. Let them know that I have not spoken at any time unnecessarily on this floor. Let them take the record. Let them take what I have said, and pile it all together. And then let them take the forty-two pages of speeches which my colleague has made to this House, and let them see whether or not his speeches have been upon questions before this House, and whether or not I have spoken on questions directly before this House or not. I will say, moreover, sir, that I was inseparably connected with the matters in the discussion of which I participated. The bills or reports on which I spoke had originated in the committee of which I have the honor to be an humble member. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COBB. One minute yet, Mr. Chairman. When you take the laughing matter out I will have still some of my five minutes left.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House, unless objection be made.

There being no objection, the bill was accordingly laid aside to be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The next bill on the Calendar is bill No. 340, being a bill to provide for the construction of a military road in the Territory of Utah.

The bill was reported in extenso by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill is subject to amendments. If no amendment be proposed, the bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House.

The bill was so laid aside to be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The next bill on the Calendar is bill No. 341, being a bill to refund to the Territory of Utah the expenses incurred by said Territory in suppressing Indian hostilities. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read in extenso by the Clerk; and, there being no amendment proposed to it, it was laid aside to be reported to the House.

Mr. HENN. Mr. Chairman, the next bill on the Calendar is Senate bill—

The CHAIRMAN, (interrupting.) The Chair was about to announce, what I presume the gentleman from Iowa was about to state, that the committee have already reported a bill embracing the subject-matter of this bill.

Mr. HENN. I propose that we shall report the House bill as a substitute for the Senate bill. The Senate bill is exactly as the House bill was before it was amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Senate bill is an act to establish the office of surveyor general of New Mexico, to grant donations to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes. The gentleman from Iowa, if I understand him, submits a motion to amend the Senate bill by striking out all after the enacting clause, and substituting in lieu thereof that which the committee have recommended to the House when it had under consideration a bill of a similar kind.

Mr. HAVEN. There is a bill reported from the committee with an amendment. I suppose the one to be substituted is the one which we have acted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa proposes an amendment similar to that which the committee have adopted. The Committee of the Whole had under consideration a bill to establish the office of surveyor general of New Mexico, granting donations to actual settlers, and for other purposes. The committee, in considering that bill, adopted amendments to it, and recommended that the bill be adopted by the House. The gentleman proposes to amend the Senate bill by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting that which the Committee of the Whole have adopted.

Mr. HAVEN. With the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. With the amendment.

The question was then taken upon the motion; and it was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered to the bill, it was laid aside to be reported to the House.

The next bill which came up for consideration in order upon the Calendar was House bill (No. 332) to enable the people of Oregon Territory to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of such State into the Union.

The bill was read in extenso by the Clerk.

The first and second sections were reported and passed by without amendment.

The third section was then reported.

Mr. SEWARD. I move to amend that section in the fifth line, by inserting after the words "United States" the following:

—except the eighth section of the act known as the Missouri compromise.

The clause would then read:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That from and after the admission of the State of Oregon into the Union in pursuance of this act, the laws of the United States, which are not locally inapplicable, shall have the same force and effect within the State of Oregon as elsewhere within the United States, except the eighth section of the act known as the Missouri compromise.

Mr. KERR. What is the gentleman's object?

Mr. SEWARD. My object is to repeal the restriction on that Territory.

Mr. KERR. Congress expressly refused to apply the Missouri compromise to that Territory.

Mr. SEWARD. It is embraced in the act.

Mr. KERR. The Wilmot proviso was embraced.

Mr. SEWARD. I withdraw the amendment, as it may give rise to some trouble.

There was no objection, and the amendment was withdrawn.

The fifth section was read, as follows:

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the district judge, attorney, clerk, and marshal, contemplated by this act, shall each be allowed the same compensation and fees that are severally allowed to the same officers in the State of California by act of Congress, to be paid in the same manner.

Mr. PARKER. I think that section ought to be amended. There are two districts in California. The judge of one is allowed an annual salary of $5,000, and the judge of the other $3,000. After the word "judge" I move to add the words "shall be allowed an annual salary of $3,000, and the."

Mr. LANE. I am willing to accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. HAVEN. Let me suggest that the words "to be paid quarterly" be added to the amendment.

Mr. PARKER. I accept the modification of my amendment. There is a general law to that effect, and there is really no necessity for the modification.

The amendment was so modified.

The question was taken; and the amendment, as modified, was adopted.

Mr. LETCHER. There ought to be another amendment to that section in regard to the attorney, clerk, and marshal.

Mr. CUTTING. Such an amendment I was about to suggest to the gentleman from Oregon. As I understand, the clerk, marshal, and attorney of the district of California, receive double the compensation now allowed to the same officers in the district of New York. Now, considering the difference of expenses of living in California, and also that the gentleman from Oregon places the district judge on the same footing as the district judge for the southern district of New York, it seems to me that the marshal, clerk, and attorney should also be restricted to the same fees which are received under the present fee bill of New York.

Mr. LANE. That they shall be allowed the same amount as is now received by the same officers in the southern district of New York?

Mr. CUTTING. Yes, sir.

Mr. LANE. I consent to the restriction.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is, in lieu of the words "in the State of California" to substitute the words "in the southern district of New York."

The question was then taken on Mr. LETCHER's amendment; and it was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It seems to me that the provisions of this bill are rather premature. This bill is merely preparatory to the admission of the State. All after the first section should, in my opinion, be stricken out, and there should be a proviso of some sort attached to the first section, prescribing something about the number of their population; and, if they shall make a constitution, and come here and ask to be admitted, then will be the time to extend these laws, and give them the benefit of judges, attorneys, marshals, and so forth. I would ask the Committee on Territories if it is proposed, by this bill, to authorize the people of Oregon to form a constitution and organize a State government, and supersede the territorial government, without regard to the amount of population which may be included within the Territory? Are they to be organized into a State, and admitted under this bill, and not come back here again for their constitution to pass under the revision of those who are to admit them, in order that it may be determined whether it is republican or not? I think this is all premature.

I have no objection to the passage of a law authorizing the people of Oregon, if they have sufficient population, to form a constitution, and submit that constitution to Congress for admission. When they do that, I think it will be time enough for all the other provisions in this bill to be enacted into a law of Congress.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. This bill was introduced by myself, referred to the Committee on Territories, and by that committee reported back to this House. The bill is an exact copy, as near as it could be, except in reference to the boundaries, and other local matters, of the bill authorizing the people of Wisconsin to form a constitution and State government. Now, allow me to say to the committee, that it would be impossible for any census to be taken that would satisfy this House what the population of Oregon is. They have cities, and towns, and many counties organized and well settled by an honest, industrious, and intelligent population. They have, by resolves of their Legislative Assembly, asked Congress to allow them the privilege of forming a State constitution. Out of twenty-four members of the two Houses of the Assembly there was but one solitary vote against the memorial that has been forwarded to Congress. I will venture to say that Oregon has, at this day, a population of twenty thousand more than Illinois had when she was admitted into the Union, or than Florida had when she was admitted.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I should have no kind of objection to passing a bill at this time, giving the assent of this Government to the formation of a constitution by the people there, to be submitted to Congress. I merely suggested that the details of the bill seemed to be premature at this time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to the first section of the bill. A sufficient answer will be found there, I think, for his objections to the bill, provided he is in favor of the people of that Territory forming a State constitution. The first section reads as follows:

"That the people of the Territory of Oregon be, and they are hereby, authorized to form a constitution and State government, for the purpose of being admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever, by the name of the State of Oregon."

The object is not to authorize the formation of a constitution which is not to be submitted to Congress. The bill itself is such as has been usually reported where Territories have been authorized to form constitutions preliminary to being admitted as States. There is no doubt about the fact stated by the gentleman from Tennessee, that some States have been admitted into the Union without any authority from Congress to form constitutions. This was the case in California, in Michigan, and, I believe, in Ohio.

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir, Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In the case of other States Congress authorized them to form a constitution. The gentleman from Tennessee may be correct in his statement that, with the exception of the first section, the bill is mere surplusage, and that all of these details are of no use. In one particular, however, they are of some use, for they prescribe boundaries beyond which she cannot go.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to ask the honorable chairman of the Committee on Territories a question. I wish to know what will be the effect of the third, fourth, and fifth sections? Upon the principle that the constitution, when formed, shall become valid and operative, will not these sections be of permanent effect; so that Congress cannot change, repeal, or modify the organization of the courts? Would it not be better to add a further section, saying that Congress, at any time, may alter, repeal, or modify these three sections? As they stand at present, will they not become a part of the contract?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will reply to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SIMMONS.] If Oregon comes here with her constitution, and Congress admits her, she is then a State, with all the rights and privileges of New York, Illinois, or any other State.

Mr. SIMMONS. But will not these three sections become a part of the contract, and be unalterable?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I suppose not.

Mr. SIMMONS. It seems to me that they will.

Mr. MILLSON. I scarcely know any business in which Congress can be engaged more important than the admission of a new member into our Confederacy. And yet, strange to say, until within the last five or ten minutes there seemed hardly to be a dozen gentlemen in the House who appeared to be even aware that such a measure was now under consideration. Certainly, Mr. Chairman, there is no occasion where there is greater necessity for the House to proceed with caution, than in the introduction of a new party to our constitutional compact—the admission of a new sovereign into this community of States.

Now, sir, I do not know what may be, at this time, the population of the Territory of Oregon, but I say that, according to the census of 1850, there were then only about fifteen thousand persons in the whole Territory; and since that time the Territory of Washington has been carved out of that of Oregon, thus diminishing the number of its inhabitants to a proportionate extent. What may have been the increase of the population in the last four years I am not informed.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. Will the gentleman allow me—

Mr. MILLSON. I was about to call upon the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LANE] to state whether any census has been taken of the population of Oregon since 1850?

Mr. LANE. I was going to make some remarks in reference to the suggestion made by my excellent friend from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] about the population of Oregon; but I sat down without doing so, and I now avail myself of the opportunity offered by my friend from Virginia, to make the remark which I intended. It is true, as the gentleman from Virginia states, that the census returns of 1850 showed the population to be about the number he mentioned. I arrived in the Territory one year before, on the 2d of March, 1849. I caused the census to be taken directly. The whole population of Oregon then was only a few thousand. I do not recollect the exact number. At their first election, held in June of that year, they cast about nine hundred votes. Since that time, as my friend from Virginia says, Washington Territory has been stricken off from Oregon. A territorial government has been organized there, and that Territory during this year cast between twelve and fifteen hundred votes.

Mr. Chairman, the settlements in Oregon Territory have spread out hundreds of miles since 1850. At that time, with a view of going outside of settlements, and of taking a claim which would suit my own convenience and my taste of location, I took a claim some thirty or forty miles outside of any considerable settlement. But, after I returned from this place last spring—now a year ago—I found the whole country taken up and occupied, and now I am afraid I will have to move again. [Laughter.]

Well, sir, I say this further to my friend from Virginia: that, in the Rogue River valley—where we had the Indian troubles in 1850 and 1853; the very valley I have been talking about to-day, and where the gallant Captain Stuart, of the Army, was killed—there was not, at that time, a white settler living; not a white man lived within fifty miles of it, save the keeper of a ferry. At the last June election—twenty months afterwards—there were about eighteen hundred votes cast there. The population of Oregon has increased, within the last twelve months over twenty-five thousand. We have cities there now containing almost as large a population as Oregon had in 1847. The whole country is being settled, and it has to-day a population, as before stated, of thirty thousand more than the State of Illinois had when she asked for admission into the Union.

Mr. MILLSON. What is the whole population?

Mr. LANE. Oregon has some sixty thousand inhabitants in all.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the people of Oregon Territory are tired of their dependence upon Congress, and desire a State government. They will not mind the expense of a State government, as expressed by the memorial which has been sent to Congress. They want to be placed upon an equal footing with the people of the States of the Union. They want the restrictions under which they now act removed, that they may be thrown upon their own resources; that they may have the privileges which the citizens of the States enjoy. They ask that they may have the privilege of forming a constitution and a State government, in order that they may better develop the resources of the country, and bring into requisition the energies of the people. They are as true American citizens as can be found in this Union. They are a moral, industrious, patriotic, and, I will say, chaste people, as that matter has been referred to by my friend on the left; for no man out there would have two wives; and if a man should go there with two wives, he would do so, not only in violation of the laws, but some other man would claim the privilege of having one of them, for some of them now have none at all.

But there is very good reason why the people of the Territory of Oregon should have the privilege of holding a convention for forming a constitution, and of applying for admission into the Union upon an equal footing with the other States. If they were not in every respect as worthy as other people, I would not ask that privilege of this House. But they are so dependent, they have to rely so entirely upon the action of Congress to regulate their internal affairs, that they want to attend to their domestic affairs themselves.

Mr. BOYCE. I desire to ask the Delegate from Oregon one question. I perceive, by the census returns, that the population of Oregon was thirteen thousand in 1850. What is the population now?

Mr. LANE. The statement which I have just made answers that question. I think it is about sixty thousand.

Mr. MILLSON. I ask the gentleman if that is a mere conjectural statement, or whether a census has been taken since 1850?

Mr. LANE. I will say to my friend from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON,] and to my friend from South Carolina, [Mr. Boyce,] that no census of Oregon can be taken that can be relied upon for one month. You may take the census of Oregon, and send up the returns here as rapidly as possible, and there will be five thousand added to the population before the returns will reach Washington. Such is the rapidity with which the country is settled. Immigration is pouring into that country. You have passed a law donating to the settlers in Oregon a certain quantity of land. You have imposed a limit to the operation of it. It expires with the immigration which goes there next year; and the people, to avail themselves of it, are flowing in across the country, while thousands of miners who have gone to California and Oregon, fall back upon the privilege, and avail themselves of the benefits of the act, and become permanent settlers there. How can you, then, say what the population of Oregon is? It is probably upwards of sixty thousand to-day, but three months hence it will be five thousand more. At the last election our citizens gave about eight or nine thousand votes. I myself was elected by some sixteen hundred majority.

Mr. SEWARD. I would inquire of the Chair what the question under consideration now is?

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition now pending is that part of the bill which regulates the fees to be paid to the Governor, attorney, marshal, &c. But so far as debate is concerned, the whole bill is under consideration.

Mr. MILLSON. I rose partly for the purpose of making these inquiries of the gentleman from Oregon, and for a further purpose, which I shall indicate presently.

Upon so grave and important a proposition as this the committee cannot now be prepared to vote. There should be some opportunity given for consulting precedents. There should be some time for reflection; and, as the hour is now late, and the House have determined to sit to-morrow, I wish to afford an opportunity for deliberation and investigation better than we can possibly have at this time. There is much force in the suggestion made just now by my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES.] I do not wish the House to commit itself. I do not wish Congress to commit itself by taking hasty steps, or by inserting into this bill provisions which may hereafter be ascertained to be improper. In my opinion, the best plan will be, if we find, upon examination, that Oregon is entitled to form a State constitution, simply to pass a bill, containing a single provision, authorizing the people of that Territory to form a State constitution, and not to adopt any provision which will in any manner commit Congress to its admission as a State, should subsequent disclosures render such admission improper and impolitic.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. If the gentleman from Virginia will allow me, I will suggest to the gentleman from Oregon, that it may be better to strike out the third, fourth, and fifth sections of this bill. It will then conform, as I understand it, to the wishes of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MILLSON. My desire is, that the committee should do nothing now in reference to the matter at all, but that we should take time to reflect; that we should allow ourselves the opportunity to consult precedents, and ascertain what ought to be done.

It may be inferred from the quarter from which these seeming objections come, that there may be opposition to the admission of Oregon into the Union as a State, in consequence of the peculiar relations existing between certain members of the Confederation.

Mr. Chairman, although I deem myself at liberty to scrutinize the pretensions of this new candidate for admission into the Union—although, indeed, it is my duty to do so—yet I take this opportunity of saying that, if I find that this application of the Territory of Oregon is founded upon such considerations as have been respected heretofore—if I find they are such as have been deemed sufficient for the admission of other Territories, North and South—I shall most cheerfully vote for its reception. I shall not be deterred from giving that vote by any considerations in reference to a balance of power between the two great divisions of the Confederacy.

I do not, however, disguise the fact that, in view of possible, I will not say probable, results, I look with some alarm upon the multiplication of free States in this Union. I will not conceal my fear, that, in process of time, the accession of a disproportionate number of free States may even lead to important changes in our Federal Constitution, by securing the majority which that instrument at this time requires for that purpose. I will not disguise my apprehension that there may be mischief in prospect which it will be desirable to avert.

But, sir, I am not one who believes that it is lawful to do evil that good may come. I will not refuse to do justice, although it may be attended with disadvantageous consequences; and I therefore repeat the declaration, that if I shall find, after deliberate examination, that the people of Oregon Territory are in a condition which entitles them, equally with those heretofore received, to come into the Union, I shall vote to admit them.

But, I confess that I felt a little mortified, as well as surprised, at the apathy which seemed to prevail here this morning, when this very important question was presented to the consideration of the committee, and when, almost without a word, we were about to pass a bill involving consequences so important as those which I have described. Let us have some opportunity for reflection. Let us know whether it is proper to admit a new member into the Confederacy without some reliable information as to the number of her inhabitants; and when I say reliable information, I do not mean in the least to disparage the accuracy of the statements made by my honorable friend from Oregon.

Mr. HENN. I would ask the gentleman from Virginia, whether he thinks that this bill proposes to admit Oregon as a State into the Union?

Mr. MILLSON. I will reply to the gentleman, that the very object of my rising was to suggest that we should take time for reflection on this subject, and that we should not commit ourselves even by an expression of opinion as to the effect of this bill.

Mr. HENN. Does not the gentleman know that it takes two or three years before people can form a constitution and be admitted?

Mr. MILLSON. Certainly; I know there must be delay.

Mr. HENN. Then there may be more than three hundred thousand or four hundred thousand inhabitants there.

Mr. MILLSON. I have said nothing which commits me either to opposition or support of this bill; and it has been sedulously my object to avoid any such committal. I desire that we shall proceed with due deliberation. I wish opportunity for consulting precedents, that we may know what it is Congress ought to do. I have formed no opinion on this subject at all. It may be that the gentleman from Iowa is right, and that we may not be committed to the reception of Oregon by passing this bill. I say not one word against it; but we ought to take time to consider. That is all I desire. I was about to observe, when interrupted by the gentleman from Iowa, that among the inquiries to which it may be well for the House to turn its attention, it may be necessary to consider whether it is proper, in any case of the application of a Territory for admission into the Union, it should be admitted in the absence of official and authentic information as to its population.

Now, I have already said that I do not in the least question the accuracy or sincerity of the statements made by my friend from Oregon. But I wish to consider whether in every such case as the introduction of a new State, it is not becoming and proper that we should have authentic and official information as to the population of the Territory. I know that we had no such information in regard to California. That case stands out an exception to all rules, a solecism in the legislation of the country, and is not to be used as a precedent for anything. In order that we may have an opportunity to make these inquiries, and come to the consideration of the subject calmly and intelligently, I would now move that the committee rise, but for the request of my friend from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] who desires first to make a suggestion.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to submit a motion, and then I will move that the committee rise, in order that gentlemen may have an opportunity of investigating this matter.

Mr. SEWARD. Will the gentleman allow me to offer an amendment?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to offer an amendment myself.

Mr. LETCHER. Let them both be presented and read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will indicate my amendment, and then yield to the gentleman from Georgia. I move to strike out the third, fourth, and fifth sections of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The third and fourth sections have been passed over by the committee; but if there be no objection, the Chair will entertain the proposition to go back and strike out those sections.

No objection was made.

Mr. SEWARD. I offer what I send to the Clerk's desk as an additional section. I do not wish to press it now, but I present it for the consideration of members.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That all restrictions against the admission of slavery into said Territory be and the same are hereby removed, it being the true intent and meaning of this act not to establish or prohibit slavery; but the people, when they adopt their constitution, shall be free to regulate their own domestic institutions.

[Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regards these as merely indications that gentlemen will propose such amendments to-morrow.

Mr. GOODRICH. I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. I have something in the nature of a personal appeal to make to the committee, and I therefore ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to withdraw his motion for a few moments.

Mr. GOODRICH. I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. I desire to present to the committee, informally, a bill which was passed over yesterday, providing for the "payment of the civil officers employed in the Territory of New Mexico while under military government," and to make an appeal to the committee, in behalf of the absent Delegate from New Mexico, to act on the bill. It was passed over informally on yesterday. The gentleman who reported the bill [Mr. FAULKNER] is not in the city, and the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. BISSELL] is absent. I desire therefore to make a brief explanation, if the committee will take up the bill, by which I think all objection to it will be removed.

By unanimous consent the bill was taken up for consideration.

Mr. PHELPS here vacated the chair, having called Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, thereto.

Mr. PHELPS. When this bill was last before the committee for consideration, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] objected to any compensation being paid to the officers of the Army who were employed in New Mexico, even if they discharged the duties of any civil offices. I think myself it is wrong, and I therefore propose the following as an amendment to the first section:

Provided, That under the provisions of this act no compensation shall be made to any officer of the Army of the United States for discharging the duties of any civil office in the Territory of New Mexico.

The provisional territorial government disbursed a certain amount in the payment of the salaries of these civil officers, but that amount of money had been collected by military contributions. I think it would be wrong to reimburse that to the Territory of New Mexico, and I shall therefore move to strike out the second section.

Mr. HOUSTON. There is a motion pending to strike out the second section.

The question was then taken; and the proviso was agreed to.

The question then recurring on striking out the second section, it was put; and the motion was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. PHELPS, the bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. GOODRICH. I now renew my motion that the committee rise.

The question was then taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman then reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the special order relating to the business in the organized Territories, and had directed him to report sundry bills to the House, some with and some without amendments; had also directed him to report bill No. 317, "being a bill to establish the office of surveyor general of Utah, to grant donations to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes," to the House, with a recommendation that it do not pass; but upon bill No. 332, "being a bill to enable the people of Oregon Territory to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of such State into the Union," they had come to no conclusion.

Mr. HUNT. I move that when this House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 59, nays 54; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Ball, Benson, Brooks, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cullom, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dick, Dickinson, Edmands, Thomas D. Eliot, Flagler, Franklin, Giddings, Goodrich, Sampson W. Harris, Harrison, Haven, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kittredge, Knox, Letcher, Lilly, McCulloch, Matteson, Meacham, Middlen, Murray, Norton, Parker, Pennington, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Sapp, Seward, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, Snodgrass, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Upham, Vail, Wade, Walley, Walsh, Israel Washburn, and Tappan Wentworth—59.

NAYS—Messrs. Banks, Barksdale, Boyce, Breckinridge, Caskie, Clark, Cobb, John G. Davis, Disney, Drum, Eddy, Edgerton, Ellison, English, Florence, Gamble, Green, Greenwood, Henn, Hibbard, Houston, Johnson, George W. Jones, Lindsley, McDougall, McNair, Macy, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Millson, Noble, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Puryear, Richardson, Ruffin, Seymour, Shaw, George W. Smyth, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Elihu B. Washburne, Wells, John Wentworth, Daniel B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—54.

No quorum voting.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SEWARD. I rise to a point of order. Does not the motion to adjourn over take precedence?

The SPEAKER. It is not competent for less than a majority of a quorum to adjourn over.

Mr. SEWARD. So I understand; but the motion to adjourn over is not disposed of, and I ask if it does not take precedence of any other motion?

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn takes precedence.

Mr. SEWARD. I move that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again state that the motion to adjourn takes precedence of any other motion; and, of course, it takes precedence of a motion for a call of the House.

The question was then taken on Mr. RICHARDSON's motion; and it was decided in the negative.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire to have an opportunity of saying a word, and I hope the motion to adjourn will be withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent alone can the gentleman from New York make an explanation.

Mr. HAVEN. I only desire to say I have been informed that a good many gentlemen to-day have voted to adjourn over, who have usually voted against adjourning over. It seems useless to remain in session to-morrow, when gentlemen will not come up here in sufficient numbers to make a quorum; and I do not think it is necessary to fatigue the House by taking the yeas and nays.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I suggest that we get a full House, and see if we cannot adjourn over. Many members have business to transact at the Departments, which will occupy their whole time to-morrow.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. They have all the morning of every day until twelve o'clock to do their business.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the motion that the House adjourn, upon which the yeas and nays are demanded.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Business having intervened, the motion to adjourn over is in order.

The SPEAKER. But the motion to adjourn takes precedence of any other motion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LETCHER. Mr. Chairman—

The SPEAKER. There is a pending question that the House do now adjourn, and that is not debatable.

Mr. LETCHER. I propose to offer a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. There is no motion that can supersede the motion made to adjourn.

Mr. LILLY. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] has asked for the yeas and nays.

The question was put; and the yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk commenced calling the roll—

Mr. LETCHER. Do I understand the Chair to decide that the motion to adjourn over does not take precedence of the motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has made no such decision. The Chair decides that less than a majority cannot adjourn over, if any question is raised with respect to a quorum being present.

Mr. LETCHER. I imagine that there is a quorum present, and I will submit a motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will then ascertain, under the rule, whether there is a quorum present.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask the Chair if the gentleman from Virginia was not too late in attempting to make his motion—there having been two names called?

The SPEAKER. No; there have been no responses.

Mr. JONES. But the first and second names on the roll were called.

The SPEAKER counted the House, and announced that there were but 113 members present—not a quorum.

The yeas and nays were then called on the motion to adjourn; and there were—yeas 46, nays 59; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Banks, Barksdale, Boyce, Breckinridge, Clark, Cobb, John G. Davis, Drum, Eddy, Edgerton, Eliot, Everhart, Florence, Gamble, Green, Greenwood, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Henn, Houston, Hughes, Johnson, George W. Jones, Lindsley, McNair, Macy, May, Smith Miller, Millson, Noble, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Richardson, Seymour, Shaw, George W. Smyth, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, Thurston, and Walker—46.

NAYS—Messrs. Ball, Benson, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Caskie, Chandler, Cox, Crocker, Cullom, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dick, Dickinson, Edmands, Thomas D. Eliot, Flagler, Franklin, Giddings, Goodrich, Haven, Howe, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kittredge, Knox, Letcher, Lilly, McCulloch, Matteson, Middlen, Murray, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Preston, Puryear, David Ritchie, Ruffin, Sapp, Seward, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, Snodgrass, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trout, Upham, Vail, Wade, Walley, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, and Zollicoffer—59.

No quorum voting.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I move a call of the House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Is it in order, Mr. Speaker, to move an adjournment now?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order. No motion is in order when the House is in the act of dividing. But, at all events, it is not in order to make a motion to adjourn immediately on the House having refused to agree to the like motion.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Then I ask for tellers on the motion for a call of the House.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Now that business has been transacted since the vote last taken, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the motion to adjourn was agreed to.

The House thereupon, at a quarter past four o'clock, p. m., adjourned till to-morrow, at twelve o'clock, m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 6, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock m.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is on agreeing to the amendments proposed by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to the bill for increasing the salaries of the executive and judicial officers of the Territories of Oregon and New Mexico.

RESOLUTIONS FROM THE STATE OF MAINE.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I have received two resolutions, adopted by the Legislature of the State of Maine; which I now ask leave to present, that they may be read, laid upon the table, and printed.

The first resolution requests the Representatives to procure the passage of a law to satisfy the claims of citizens of the United States for lands taken under the treaty of Washington.

The second resolution requests the Representatives to procure the passage of the bill providing for the payment of the claims for spoliation committed by the French prior to 1800.

The resolutions were ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

RAILROAD IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. STEVENS, of Michigan. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, of which I am a member, to report to this House a bill to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad; which bill I propose to have put upon its passage.

The bill provides for the construction of a road from the southern line of that Territory, beginning between ranges nine and seventeen, running thence by way of St. Paul, by the most feasible route, to the eastern line of said Territory, in the direction of Lake Superior, towards the southeast boundary of said Territory.

Mr. HAMILTON. I desire to raise a question of order, that it may be now decided before we proceed any further. I want to know whether this day is to be consumed in the consideration of bills of this kind. My point of order is, that the committee at this time cannot make a report without the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. With the permission of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. HAMILTON,] I will say, in relation to the point of order which he has raised, that I presume no committee would have a right to report, unless the report should relate to territorial business. The question of order, which I think properly arises, is, whether a bill which proposes to grant alternate sections of land for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a railroad, though the road may be in a Territory, is such territorial business as would come within the order setting apart this week for the consideration of territorial business? It seems to me that such a bill is one of a general character.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I would inquire of the Chair, if such a bill was not reported when territorial business was under consideration, at a former day?

The SPEAKER. Such a bill was reported some time since.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Was that bill reported from the Committee on Territories?

The SPEAKER. It was reported from that committee. But the point of order which the gentleman from Tennessee makes is, that under the order of the House, making territorial business the special order for this week, this report cannot be considered as coming within that class of business. The Chair does not see upon what principle it can be excluded.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Upon the principle that making grants of alternate sections of public lands to aid in the construction of a railroad is general legislation.

Mr. HAMILTON. I insist, Mr. Speaker, upon my point of order. We have appropriated this week to the consideration of territorial business which shall be reported from the Committee on Territories.

Mr. FLORENCE. There is no doubt of that.

Mr. HAMILTON. We have appropriated this week for the purpose of acting upon bills already reported from that committee.

The SPEAKER. With the permission of the gentleman from Maryland, the Chair would say that the language of the resolution sets apart this week for the consideration of business relating to the organized Territories, and under it the Chair has ruled that it is in order, at any time during the morning hour, at all events, to report that description of business during this week. The Chair has acted upon that principle.

Mr. WASHBURN. I would ask the Chair whether, at a former time, when the territorial business was under consideration, a report was not received from this same Committee on Public Lands?

The SPEAKER. The Chair recollects that such a report was received.

Mr. HAMILTON. But there was no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order raised by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. HAMILTON.]

Mr. HAVEN. I desire to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair. I do not know what will be the opinion of the House in reference to it; but I would like to have the decision of the House upon the subject. I do not think the decision is a very violent one, one way or the other. We have, however, set aside a week for the consideration of territorial business, some time ago, and that whole week was taken up with a railroad bill. We then set aside another week, as I understood it, with the understanding that it should be devoted to the legitimate business of the Territories. At least I desire to have the sense of the House upon the subject.

The SPEAKER. The resolution setting aside this business as a special order will be read.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to inquire if this bill does not appropriate lands to construct the same roads as the one we had before us some time since?

Mr. STEPHENS, of Michigan. No, sir.

Mr. JONES. Is it not for the same line of roads?

Mr. STEPHENS. Not precisely. It is confined exclusively to the Territory. The other went out into a State.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I do not know that this appeal is debatable. I suppose it is not. I will therefore, being satisfied that the decision of the Chair is right, move to lay the appeal upon the table. If it were debatable, I might have a word or two to say upon the subject.

Mr. ORR. I suppose the appeal is debatable.

Mr. HAVEN. I have no objection to the appeal being debated. I desire, however, to ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I will ask the Chair whether the appeal will be debatable if I withdraw the motion to lay it upon the table?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would be debatable.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Then I will withdraw the motion for the purpose of making a single suggestion myself, and for the purpose of allowing other gentlemen to express their opinions if they wish to do so. This week was set apart for the consideration of business in the organized Territories. Measures for the construction of roads in the Territories, whether military roads or railroads, are, it seems to me, as legitimately business of the organized Territories, as any other class of money or land appropriations that can be made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks the gentleman to allow him to have the special order read.

It was read, as follows:

"On motion by Mr. RICHARDSON, by unanimous consent,

"Ordered, That the week beginning with the first Monday in May next, be set apart for the consideration of business relating to the organized Territories."

The SPEAKER. In this connection the Chair begs leave simply to remark that he cannot see any distinction between the bill proposed by the gentleman from Michigan and any other territorial measure. The Chair decides that it is clearly territorial business within the meaning of the order of the House; that it is clearly in order for committees to report territorial bills during the morning hour; and this is the morning hour. He has no objection to the appeal being discussed and decided by the House; but he will venture to express the hope that the House will not make any decisive question in reference to the bill itself, upon a proposition to overrule the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I withdraw the motion to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have no disposition to renew the motion to lay the appeal upon the table; nor do I want to discuss it. Some gentlemen around me, however, seem to think that I stated, when I made the motion to set apart this week for the consideration of business relating to the organized Territories, that it was to be confined to the business already reported. Such is not the fact—gentlemen are mistaken. I made no such statement. I did state distinctly that I proposed to set apart this week for the consideration of business relating to the organized Territories.

During the entire week the Committee on Territories has been reporting its business. It had not matured it until the last week. I believe that the Committee on Indian Affairs reported a bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Committee on the Public Lands, and every other committee which had any territorial business before it, have reported that business during this week. And it cannot be that gentlemen understood me to say that the week was to be devoted alone to territorial business other than that in reference to railroads. If they did, they misunderstood what I said, what I meant, and what the resolution expressed.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen who have served here a single session, those who have served longer, will especially recollect that it has been the uniform practice to receive reports on territorial business during the week set apart for the consideration of that business. I have not been here a session during which certain days have not been set apart for territorial business, and the practice we are now following has not been pursued by the House.

Mr. HAVEN. I do not know that I exactly understand the terms of the resolution by which this time was set apart for the consideration of territorial business.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will again be read.

Mr. HAVEN. After a while. I have acted, however, in what I have undertaken to do on what I knew, what I believed, at least, to have been the fair spirit and understanding of the House, when this week was set apart for the consideration of this particular business. The House will well remember that we devoted a week, which had been set aside for the consideration of territorial business, to action in reference to a railroad, which, I suppose—though not officially informed of the fact, because the bill has not yet been received—is substantially the object of this bill. I think that I am not mistaken in supposing that the House was desirous of avoiding all further action in reference to that railroad. If the question had been then put to the House, I am of the belief that it would have refused to set apart any portion of time for the consideration of that road.

Believing that to have been the fair understanding and spirit of the House—I do not know whether it is embodied in the resolution or not—I did appeal from the decision of the Chair. I took occasion to say, when I made the appeal, that, in the wording of the resolution, it may have been what may be denominated a frontier question; but I am quite sure that it is not within the fair meaning and spirit of the order on the part of the House, setting aside this week for the consideration of the territorial business.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I would ask the gentleman from New York whether he is not slightly mistaken in his statement of the time set apart before for the consideration of territorial business? Three days were set apart then for the consideration of territorial business, and less than two days were occupied in the consideration of this railroad bill.

Mr. HAVEN. I may be wrong in reference to the amount of time; but time, it is known, is immaterial in most cases. What I do mean to say is, that the great bulk of the time set apart for the consideration of legitimate and proper territorial business, was consumed in the endeavor to grant away the public land to corporations.

Mr. LETCHER. Is it in order to move that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

Mr. STEVENS, of Michigan. I claim that I am entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the floor; and it cannot be taken from him, unless by a question of order.

Mr. LETCHER. An appeal has been taken from the decision of the Chair and, I believe that it is debatable.

The SPEAKER. That is so.

Mr. EDGERTON. I wish to submit the motion that the appeal do lie on the table.

Mr. LETCHER. Do you mean to lay the bill or the appeal on the table? [Laughter.]

Mr. EDGERTON. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan was on the floor, and in the act of introducing a bill. It was denied that he had the right, under the special order, to do so. The Chair decided that he had the right; and from that decision the gentleman from New York has taken an appeal. The question of order alone, the Chair thinks, can take the floor from the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. EDGERTON. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. HAVEN. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SEWARD. I ask for the reading of the title of the bill, that we may see its application to territorial business.

The Clerk read the title of the bill as follows:

A bill to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad therein.

Mr. FLAGLER. I move that the House do now adjourn, and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 60, nays 86; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Bennett, Benson, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Corwin, Crocker, Cullom, Curtis, Dickinson, Drum, Thomas D. Elliot, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Goode, Hamilton, Harrison, Haven, Howe, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Knox, Letcher, Lilly, Lyon, Matteson, Middlewarth, Murray, Norton, Parker, Peckham, Preston, Puryear, Ready, David Ritchie, Ruffin, Sapp, Seward, Shaw, Simmons, Snodgrass, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Tracy, Tweed, Vail, Wade, Walley, Walsh, Israel Washburne, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—60.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, David J. Bailey, Banks, Barksdale, Boyce, Breckinridge, Caskey, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Cox, Cutting, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Disney, Dunbar, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmunds, John M. Elliott, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Everhart, Florence, Gamble, Giddings, Green, Greenwood, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hubbard, Houston, Hughes, Ingersoll, Johnson, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lane, Linsley, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Macy, Mayall, Meacham, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Millson, Noble, Oids, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Richardson, Riddle, Russell, Sabin, Seymour, Shower, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Upham, Warren, Elihu B. Washburne, Wells, and John Wentworth—86.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question recurred on the motion to lay on the table the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HAVEN. I heard the title of the bill read. Has it been received?

The SPEAKER. The bill was not received, because there was objection made to its reception. The Chair decided that it was in order to receive it. An appeal is taken from the decision of the Chair, which involves the question of reception.

Mr. HAVEN. Well, I will withdraw my appeal.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. There is another

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

TUESDAY, MAY 9, 1854.

NEW SERIES....No. 71.

question of order, which I should like the Chair to decide. A bill passed the Senate to aid in constructing a railroad in Minnesota. It came to this House, and was laid upon the table; which, under the decision of the Chair, and the vote of the House, is held to be a rejection. This bill, I take it, is substantially the same as that one. The 13th joint rule of the two Houses, provides that when a bill or resolution, which has been passed in one House, shall be rejected in the other, it shall not be brought in during the same session without a notice of ten days, and the leave of two thirds of that House, in which it shall be renewed. Now, if the mere changing of a few words in a bill take it without that rule, the rule is a blank, and might as well be stricken out at once.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Is this not the bill which has come from the other House?

Mr. JONES. I believe it is identical with the one rejected.

The SPEAKER. The decision of the Chair was based upon the declaration of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STEVENS,] who distinctly stated that the bill which he desired to introduce, was not identically the same.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I ask that the bill be read.

Mr. STEVENS, of Michigan. I was about to say I had sent the bill to the Clerk's desk, for the purpose of having it read, that the House might be well satisfied that the statements I had made were true, and that the bill I desire to introduce is not identical with the bill that came down from the Senate, and which has been before the House.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not care about the bill being read, if the gentleman from Michigan, who reports it, will state to the House in what material point it differs from the bill which came from the Senate.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I ask for the reading of the bill.

Mr. OLDS. I would like to ask the Speaker a question.

The SPEAKER. In response to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] the Chair would say, that in the first place he differs with that gentleman in regard to the vote upon the Senate bill to which he refers. The laying of a bill upon the table is not, in parliamentary law, a rejection of the bill.

Mr. JONES. I was aware of that. I stated that the decision of the Chair, sustained by a vote of the House, settled the principle that laying a bill upon the table insured its rejection.

Mr. OLDS. I would ask the Chair if the House did not lay the deficiency bill upon the table, and if it was not again reported and acted upon in this House?

Mr. HAVEN. Upon the motion of the gentleman from the St. Lawrence district in my State, the whole subject was referred back to the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STEVENS] states upon his responsibility that this bill differs materially from the Senate bill referred to; and even though the bill from the Senate had been rejected, and though the vote of the House was taken upon it, the Chair decides that the bill now proposed to be introduced is not out of order; and it is very clear that the laying of the Senate bill upon the table is not, according to parliamentary law, a rejection of the bill. Therefore, the objection raised by the gentleman from Tennessee cannot hold, even if it were the identical bill which came from the Senate. That is certainly the law of this House, and it is competent for the House to decide what course they will take in regard to this bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I now ask that the bill be read the first and second time, and then I wish to make some explanations.

Mr. HAMILTON. Is it now in order to move a rejection of the bill?

The SPEAKER. Such a motion would be in order after the first reading of the bill.

The bill was then read the first time by its title, as follows:

A bill to aid the Territory of Minnesota in constructing a railroad therein.

Mr. KEITT. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

The SPEAKER. Will gentlemen allow the Chair to state, that upon the first reading of a bill, the question shall be, if it is then raised, "Shall it be received, or shall it be rejected?"

Mr. STEVENS. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STEVENS] allow the Chair to make a brief statement? The Chair recollects precisely such a case as has now arisen under his own administration during the last Congress. A rejection of a bill was moved, and the Chair decided that it was not debatable. The House acquiesced in it, and the Chair is not aware of any rule that would vary that practice.

Mr. STEVENS. I wish to say only a few words. Many appeals have been made to me this morning not to urge the consideration of this bill at this time. It was suggested to me that I was taking the House by surprise, and bringing up a bill which legitimately had no place here.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I protest against any charge of this kind made against my present course. I am the last member of this House to do anything that is unfair. I would not have introduced this bill if it did not legitimately belong here. I would not take gentlemen by surprise, and by that means effect the passage of a bill. God knows I would not be guilty of doing such a thing as that.

But I have been instructed by the committee, of which I am a member, to report this bill. Gentlemen who have an interest in the matter—gentlemen from the Territory of Minnesota—have urged and requested me to report this bill. This morning I gave these gentlemen my word that I would do so, and as a man and a gentleman, I am now fulfilling my promise to them.

Mr. Speaker, I have no personal interest in this bill. It does not at all affect my personal interests. It does, however, affect the interests of my district, and those of the United States at large. It is one of those bills, I think, which should, perhaps, be passed in preference to any other. The interests involved in it are not confined solely to the Territory of Minnesota. But providing, as the bill does, for the road starting from the southern boundary of Minnesota, running steadily in the direction of Lake Superior, it is calculated—when the chain, of which this is but a single link, shall be completed—it is calculated, I say, to give, and will give, steam communication from the Gulf of Mexico to the Gulf of the St. Lawrence, by way of the extreme line of water communication from the heads of the Mississippi to the Fond du Lac of Lake Superior.

Let this bill be passed, Mr. Speaker, and you enable men, who are now unable to do it, through their personal enterprise, to construct this great road. Pass this bill, and the citizens of this Republic will be able to pass, for pleasure or for business, from the Gulf of the St. Lawrence, by way of the river St. Lawrence, the head of Lake Superior, and the Straits of St. Marie, to the Gulf of Mexico. You may pass from that Gulf to the Atlantic, by the way of the Erie canal, and by various other means of communication. This is a national, not a merely local matter.

The benefits of its operation will not be confined to the citizens of the Territory of Minnesota. It is not a matter to operate to the personal interests of one or two States merely, but to those of every State in the Union. It is national—as I said—in its objects; and if I understand the true theory and principles on this subject, that theory is, that works like this, which are national, which are extensive, and which are not confined merely to some particular portion of the Union, deserve and should receive the patronage and care of the General Government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am requested to explain the difference between this bill and the other one. On this point, it is perhaps enough for me to say to gentlemen here that, while the other bill applied a portion of it to Iowa, a portion to Minnesota, and a portion to Wisconsin, this bill is confined to the Territory of Minnesota alone—the road beginning at the southern boundary of the Territory, and running to St. Paul, a distance of about a hundred miles, and from thence in the most feasible route, and in the direction of Lake Superior to the eastern boundary of the Territory, a distance of perhaps thirty-five miles. Besides this bill provides for the granting of only five hundred and twenty-seven thousand acres of land, while the other bill provided for double that quantity.

Sir, that is the difference between the two bills. This one is a territorial bill. It has nothing to do with other States. And now, if gentlemen permit me, I would say that I desire to take no unfair advantage of this House in the introduction of the bill. I have presented it in accordance with the wishes of the friends of the bill. And in my character as a citizen of this great Republic, as a citizen of Michigan, I wish the bill to pass, because it will contribute to the general benefit of all.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question upon the motion of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. HAMILTON.]

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield me the floor a moment, before he makes that demand.

Mr. STEVENS. I cannot. I insist upon my demand.

Mr. LANE. I then move that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. MEACHAM. I rise to a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. Two privileged motions are now pending.

Mr. MEACHAM. My motion will take precedence of both. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That motion will take precedence of the others, and is the first to be put to the House.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put; and there were—yeas 77, nays 78; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Bennett, Benson, Brooks, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Chrisman, Colquitt, Corwin, Craig, Crocker, Cutliss, Cutting, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Etheridge, Everhart, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Giddings, Goode, Goodrich, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Harrison, Haven, Howe, Hunt, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Knox, Kurtz, Leitcher, Lilly, Lyon, Meacham, Middlesworth, Murray, Norton, Parker, Peckham, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Riddle, David Ritchie, Rufin, Sapp, Seward, Shaw, Simmons, Snodgrass, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Tracy, Trout, Tweed, Upham, Wade, Walley, Walsh, Israel Washburn, Wheeler, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—77.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, David J. Bailey, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Boyce, Breckinridge, Caskie, Churchill, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Cox, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Ellison, English, Florence, Gamble, Green, Greenwood, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Houston, Hughes, Johnson, Roland Jones, Kidwell, Lane, Lindsley, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Macy, Matteson, Mayall, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milson, Noble, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Richardson, Russell, Seymour, Shower, Singleon, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William K. Smith, George W. Smyth, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, David Stuart, Thurston, Vail, Warren, Ellihu B. Washburne, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Daniel B. Wright—78.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. STEVENS, of Michigan. Is not the question upon the demand for the previous question next in order?

The SPEAKER. The motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union takes precedence of the demand for the previous question.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. I appeal to the House to take into consideration the fact that this is the last day set aside for the consideration of territorial business, and I hope the House will therefore go into the Committee of the Whole, and resume the consideration of bills in reference to Territories which are properly upon the Calendar.

Mr. LETCHER. Is it in order to move now that the House adjourn?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. LETCHER. Then I make that motion.

Mr. WHEELER. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLEN, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order. I understand that the last vote taken was upon a motion to adjourn. If so, this motion is not now in order.

The SPEAKER. Since that vote was taken business has been transacted. The House has ordered the yeas and nays upon a motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I wish to ask the Chair a question for the purpose of information. If the House should now adjourn, will this bill come up for consideration on Monday morning?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would not come up, unless other morning business should first be disposed of. The Chair is not very clear as to what its position will be. He will decide that question when it arises.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. If the House should adjourn now, what will be the condition of the territorial business which has been reported from the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. If the House will indulge the Chair—for the motion to adjourn strictly cuts off all this conversation—he will say that he does not recollect what has been the practice in such cases. They do not often occur. He is, however, of the opinion that this business would be in order during the morning hour.

The question was then taken upon the motion to adjourn; and decided in the affirmative—yeas, 88, nays 69; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bull, Bennett, Benson, Brooks, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Chrisman, Colquitt, Corwin, Craig, Crocker, Cullom, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dick, Dickinson, Disney, Drum, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Etheridge, Everhart, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Giddings, Goodrich, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Harrison, Haven, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kerr, Kidwell, Kittredge, Knox, Kurtz, Letcher, Lilly, Lyon, Meacham, Middlewarth, Murray, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peckham, Bishop Perkins, Powell, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Ruffin, Sabin, Sapp, Seward, Shaw, Shower, Simmons, William Smith, Snodgrass, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Tweed, Uppham, Wade, Walley, Walsh, Warren, Wheeler, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollieoffer—88.

NAYS—Messrs. Abernethy, James C. Allen, David J. Bailey, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Boyce, Breckinridge, Caskey, Churchwell, Clark, Cobb, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, John M. Elliott, Ellison, English, Florence, Gaubie, Green, Greenwood, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Houston, Johnson, Roland Jones, Keitt, Lane, Lindsley, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Macey, Matson, Mayall, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milston, Noble, Olds, Montcalm Oliver, Orr, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Richardson, Russell, Seymour, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, David Stuart, Vail, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Daniel B. Wright—69.

So the motion was agreed to; and thereupon, at half-past one o'clock, the House adjourned until Monday next, at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, May 8, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

THE NEBRASKA-KANSAS BILL.

Mr. DOUGLAS presented a remonstrance signed by five hundred and four clergymen of the northwestern States against the passage of the Nebraska-Kansas bill. He commented at some length upon the language of the remonstrance, and upon the proceedings of a meeting of clergymen at Chicago, held on the 27th day of March. He responded to the reply of one of those clergymen to his letter in answer to their proceedings, and commented on a sermon of Rev. Dr. Richardson, of Chicago, delivered on the 5th of March. [The speech will be found in the Appendix.]

The memorial was ordered to lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting, in compliance with the resolution of the Senate of the 12th of January last, a report from the Secretary of State, communicating copies of the correspondence between the legation of the United States and the Government of Chili, in relation to the impressment or forcible abduction of four seamen from the United States whaler-ship Addison.

A SENATOR. Let it be printed.

Mr. GWIN. I move that the communication be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. They can see whether it ought to be printed or not.

Mr. BELL. Is it not unusual to print such communications?

Mr. GWIN. It may be unnecessary to print it. It is a very large document, and it can be printed hereafter, if the Committee on Foreign Relations think it ought to be printed.

Mr. BELL. The communication is in response to a resolution which I offered. Of course my object was to have it published; but let it go. I will hereafter make the motion to print, if it be necessary.

The communication was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, a statement of the amount of bonds and other securities of the United States, redeemed since the 3d March, 1853; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Also, a message from the President of the United States, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, copies of the correspondence in relation to the arrest, at Bremen, of Conrad Schmidt, a naturalized citizen of the United States, and the arrest at Heidelberg of E. T. Dana, and other citizens of the United States. Also, copies of the correspondence with the King of Prussia, on the subject of religious toleration; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. I am requested to present to the Senate a memorial of the President and Directors of the Hannibal and St. Joseph's Railroad Company, praying the passage of a bill granting them the right of way for the construction of a railroad from a point opposite St. Joseph's to the Pacific ocean. They ask no grant of exclusive privileges, no land, no assistance from the Government. It will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FISH. I present a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce, of New York, setting forth that they regard the present time as peculiarly favorable for the formation of treaties, with the great Powers of Europe, by which the rights of neutrals shall be recognized and established, and for the suppression of privateering. The memorial is one of considerable interest, and I beg to commend it to the especial consideration of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I move, therefore, that it be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FISH also presented four remonstrances signed by citizens of New York, against the passage of the Nebraska bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FOOT presented resolutions, passed at a meeting of the citizens of Springfield, Vermont, remonstrating against the repeal of the Missouri compromise; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Also, additional evidence in support of the claim of Leonard Proctor; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a petition of citizens of Castleton, Connecticut, praying the reduction of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. GWIN presented the petition of Dr. S. J. Anderson, agent of D. M. Wilson & Co., merchants, of New York, praying that they may be indemnified for the loss of a certificate held by them in the Trinity Land Company for $10,000; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, presented the petition of Catherine Dickerson, widow of John Dickerson, a revolutionary soldier, praying a pension under the act of 1838; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BRODHEAD presented the memorial of Maria Jones, widow of Andrew A. Jones, deceased, praying compensation for extra services rendered by her late husband as inspector of the customs at New York; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. NORRIS presented the petition of T. J. Fox Alden, a citizen of Pennsylvania, praying the aid of Congress, by subscription or otherwise, to aid in the publication of "An Index to the Decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States;" which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TOUCEY presented a memorial of the inhabitants of the town of Berlin, Connecticut, praying a reduction in the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. ALLEN presented three memorials of citizens of the State of Rhode Island, praying a reduction in the rates of ocean postage; which were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. CASS presented four memorials of citizens of New York, praying that measures may be taken to secure to American citizens traveling or residing abroad, the rights of religious freedom; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Also, a petition of citizens of the United States residing in New York, professing the Jewish religion, praying that measures may be adopted to secure to them civil and religious rights when traveling in foreign countries; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. STUART presented a petition of citizens of Detroit, Michigan, praying that a certain lot in that city, now owned by the Government, may be designated as a site for a custom-house; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, it was Ordered, That Jean Deplaigne have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

GOVERNOR RAMSAY.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. A few days ago, I asked leave to withdraw certain papers in reference to the investigation into the official conduct of Governor Ramsay, of Minnesota. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. STUART] at that time objected to the withdrawal, but I believe he is now satisfied that it is proper that they should be withdrawn. I therefore renew the motion that they be withdrawn.

The motion was agreed to; and it was Ordered, That certain papers, in reference to the case of Governor Ramsay, of Minnesota, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, in order to be presented at the Treasury Department.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM ABROAD.

Mr. CASS. I wish to take this opportunity of saying, that some time since—some four or five weeks ago, I do not exactly recollect the day—the Senate, on my motion, were good enough to assign a day, which has passed, for the consideration of the motion submitted by me, to refer to the Committee on Foreign Relations a report made by Mr. Underwood at the last session, in reference to the rights of American citizens to religious freedom abroad. Circumstances prevented me from taking advantage of the kindness of the Senate on that occasion, and I desire now to have a day assigned, on which I can state my views to the Senate. It is immaterial to me what day be fixed. I would rather it should not be very late; but I do not wish to interfere with other business.

Several SENATORS. Say next Monday.

Mr. CASS. I shall be very happy if the Senate can hear me on the subject next Monday. I move, therefore, for the purpose which I have indicated, that the Senate now take up my proposition.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CASS. I now move that the further consideration of the subject be postponed, and be made the special order of the day for next Monday.

The motion was agreed to.

BOOKS FOR NEW MEMBERS.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, from the Committee on Pensions, submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the joint resolution of the 24th of February, 1854, for supplying new members of the present Congress with all such books of a public character in the same proportion as were furnished to members of either House at the last Congress, embraces Mayo and Moulton's edition of the pension and bounty land laws, &c., in the proportion of eight copies to each of the said new members, and that the Secretary of the Senate shall so understand and execute the said resolution.

COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. NORRIS, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, offered the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee for the District of Columbia be authorized to employ a clerk.

RAMSAY INVESTIGATION.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its consideration now:

Resolved, That the report of the commissioners appointed by the President of the United States to investigate the official conduct of Alexander Ramsay, late Governor of Minnesota Territory, be printed for the use of the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. STUART. I ask the Senator from Arkansas to modify his resolution so as to embrace the testimony in the case.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The commissioners reported the testimony to us, and that is really what we are anxious to get at.

Mr. STUART. I think it would be better to add "and testimony."

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I accept the modification. The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. WEBSTER, his Secretary, announcing that he had, on the 3d instant, approved and signed the joint resolution to extend an existing contract to carry the mail in Alabama.

ORDER OF BUSINESS—INDIGENT INSANE.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, I believe that to-day was specially assigned for the consideration of the bill returned by the President with his objections. I hope that it will be taken up, and disposed of as soon as possible.

Mr. WALKER. I believe there is a prior special order, which I, for one, shall insist upon being taken up.

The PRESIDENT. The bill referred to by the Senator from California is not a special order; but its consideration was postponed until to-day.

Mr. WALKER. Then I object to proceeding to its consideration now, and insist on taking up the special order—the homestead bill.

Mr. FOOT. I desire to remark that I had expected, after the Senate had gone through the ordinary morning business, to call up the message of the President, containing his objections to the bill making a grant of the public lands to the several States of the Union for the benefit of indigent insane persons, which was postponed until this morning. But upon inquiry of several Senators who desire to be heard upon this question, some upon the one side and some upon the other, I learn that they are not ready or disposed to go on with the debate upon it this morning.

If, however, there is any Senator who desires to address the Senate on that question this morning, certainly it is my desire that he shall have the opportunity, and that the bill shall be taken up for that purpose. But I have been unable, myself, to learn of any Senator who desires, at this time, to be heard upon it. Certainly, it is not my purpose to address the Senate upon the subject, if at all, until the close of the debate. Unless some intimation of the sort alluded to be given by some Senator expressing a desire to proceed with the discussion of that question this morning, I take it, of course, that it will not be pressed for consideration.

Mr. GWIN. I do not see why there is any necessity for discussion about that bill. I think we can vote on it very soon. The question will come up in a more enlarged form on the discussion of the homestead bill, and the graduation bill, and the substitute offered for both by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER.] They will afford basis enough for all the speeches that may be made in the Senate, in reference to the disposition of the public lands. I hope that this message of the President will be taken up, and the bill voted upon now. It is only one branch of an extended system of measures before the Senate; and I think we can vote upon this. There is not a member of this body, in my opinion, who is not ready to vote upon it. I hope that it will be taken up, and disposed of to-day. If there is nobody ready to speak, I doubt not we are all ready to vote. I hope there will be no objection to taking up the message, and voting upon the bill which the President has returned to us with his objections.

The motion of Mr. GWIN was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate for reconsideration.

Mr. GWIN. I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. BADGER. The Constitution requires that the question shall be taken by yeas and nays. The PRESIDENT. Certainly; it must be taken by yeas and nays. The question is, shall the bill pass, the President's veto to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. STUART. I move to postpone the consideration of the question until Thursday.

Mr. WALKER. I hope the Senator will say a week from next Monday.

Mr. STUART. I will take any day which the Senate wish.

Mr. PETTIT, and others. Take the vote to-day.

The motion to postpone until Thursday was not agreed to.

Mr. BADGER. I now move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until Monday next. This is a question of very great importance, and we should, if possible, have a full Senate here during our action upon it. I wish to say a few words upon the message myself before I vote upon it, and I am not prepared to do it now. I think it is due to the Senate, to the President, and to the country, that the message should be maturely considered. I therefore move that it be postponed until Monday next. If that should be any interference with the Senator from Michigan, the day can be given to him. I have no objection to that. I will then be willing to take it up, discuss it, and vote upon it, without laying it down again; but I think a great deal of allowance ought to be made for Senators, as the veto message has only been laid upon our tables this morning.

Mr. HUNTER. I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina whether it would not do to postpone it until Wednesday, so that we might take up the Indian appropriation bill to-day and to-morrow, and dispose of it.

Mr. BADGER. I am perfectly willing to consult the wishes of the Senate, and to say Wednesday next.

Mr. GWIN. If we postpone it at all, I hope it will be until Monday next, so that we can do something in the intervening time besides acting on the Indian appropriation bill. I hope we may have time enough to dispose of another bill, and therefore I desire the Senator to adhere to his original motion. We have just voted down a motion to postpone until Thursday next, and now the motion is to postpone until Wednesday.

Mr. BADGER. I should like to get a day to suit the Senate, and I named Monday at first, and afterwards altered it. I am willing to do almost anything for the sake of compromise.

Mr. CASS. I wish to say that the Senate has already decided to take up the subject on which I desire to address the body, and hear me on Monday next. An hour and a half on Monday will be all that I shall desire.

Mr. BADGER. Then I say to-morrow week.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina moves to postpone the consideration of the subject until to-morrow week.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope that will not be done. If we postpone it until to-morrow week, another movement will be made to give precedence to some favorite measure having a majority of the body in its favor. I think it but respectful to the President, I think it is due to him, and to the subject, that we should proceed to discuss and dispose at once of the bill which, it seems to me, is before the Senate, according to the Constitution, at least. If the honorable Senator from North Carolina will say that he is not prepared now to discuss the measure, I am sure that he could be prepared on the next day after to-morrow. I can see no occasion for this long postponement, and I wish to vote upon the measure. The bill has come back, and it is now upon your table; and it seems to me that it is one which directly addresses itself to the Senate now. I would not, however, require any gentleman to go on if he says he is not prepared. I wish to submit some remarks myself upon the subject, and especially do I wish to vote upon the bill. It may be that if it is postponed until Monday, I shall not have an opportunity to give a vote. I am perfectly willing to postpone for another day its consideration, but beyond that I can see no occasion for postponing it.

Mr. BADGER. It is inconceivable to me how the immediate reconsideration of the bill which has been returned to us can be urged upon the ground that respect to the President requires it. Now, Mr. President, we have had the printed copies of the President's message only just laid upon our tables this morning. It is sent here for our consideration; the bill is to be reconsidered in connection with the President's objections, and these objections ought to be met. Those of us who may not agree with the President ought to have an opportunity, and it is respectful to him, to examine these objections carefully, and see how far they are supported by the past history and opinions of the eminent statesmen of the Republic. It is due to us and to him that we should thus be enabled to investigate the grounds of his objections. The President's message places us in the position of having voted for an unconstitutional measure, and we should, therefore, certainly have an opportunity to give a full consideration to his reasons for objecting to it. However, sir, I have no sort of objection to any day that may suit the Senate. I yielded, in the first place, to Monday, on the suggestion of the Senator from California, and I varied it to Tuesday at the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan. The matter rests with the Senate.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the postponement of the consideration of the subject until to-morrow week.

Mr. CLAYTON. I was one of those who thought we should proceed to the consideration of this bill at as early a period as practicable; but when a Senator rises in his place upon this floor, and desires time for consideration that he may prepare for the debate, that alters the case entirely. I have never known an application of the sort rejected. It is always given to a Senator in such a case. The honorable Senator from North Carolina says that he desires to submit some remarks to the Senate, and he desires a little longer time to prepare himself. There are other Senators who also desire to speak on the subject. This being the case, I think the consideration of the subject ought to be postponed. While I am for proceeding with the consideration of the message with all reasonable dispatch, I cannot agree to deny any Senator ample opportunity to prepare himself. It is a highly important subject, and I shall be extremely happy to hear the argument of the Senator of North Carolina upon it. I trust, sir, that we will not withhold that mark of respect which is due to the Senator and to all Senators. We should hear their reasons, though I admit that we should not overslaugh it for other purposes. Sir, I maintain that we are considering the subject, and are paying all due respect to the President, when Senators are preparing themselves to discuss the message. I shall now vote for the longest time—Tuesday week. I see nothing unreasonable in that.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood the Senator from North Carolina distinctly to indicate, in the first instance, until suggestions came from other sources, that he was perfectly prepared to go on on Monday next, or the day after to-morrow; and I have no doubt, from the consideration which he has given to the subject, and the consideration which he can give it within the next two days, with his promptness and with his habitual manner of deliberation upon matters of this kind, the Senator would give the subject as full a consideration the day after to-morrow as he would two months from this time. I would not deny to him, or to any Senator who asks it, anything like a courtesy; but I may be permitted to say to the honorable Senator from Delaware, that, in some measure, my views upon this subject are influenced by the suggestion made by him the other day; for I understood from him that he thought usage and propriety required that we should at once, as far as Senators could do so with propriety, go into the consideration of the message; and now I understand, upon the suggestion, not of the Senator from North Carolina, but—

Mr. CLAYTON. Will the Senator allow me to say that the idea which I expressed was that when the message came in we should proceed to the consideration of it; not, as I said, in hot haste, but that we should consider ourselves obliged to go into the consideration of it with reasonable dispatch; and I submit to my friend from South Carolina whether there is anything now unreasonable in postponing the question when a Senator on this floor announces that he desires time to prepare himself to address the Senate upon it? I repeat, that while he and other Senators are actually studying the subject and preparing themselves to address the Senate, the Senate is considering the subject all the time, and we should yield to them what they now ask.

Mr. BADGER. I desire to say one word in reply to my friend from South Carolina. I could, as he says, go on on Wednesday, but I should not have that opportunity for preparation which I desire. That is what I meant to intimate.

The motion to postpone the consideration of the subject until Tuesday week was lost, by a vote on a division—ayes 19, noes 22.

Mr. DAWSON. Now postpone it until Wednesday.

The PRESIDENT. The question is now on postponing the consideration of the subject until Wednesday.

Mr. DODGE. I trust that that motion will be agreed to by common consent. The Senator from North Carolina is the last Senator to whom I would deny a courtesy. He has announced that he wishes some time to prepare himself to address the Senate. Courtesy, then, I think, requires that we should give him that time, which I think is reasonable.

Mr. BUTLER. I will yield to my friend from North Carolina as much as to any other gentleman. If he wishes to speak, and is prepared to speak on Wednesday, he can go on. If I have anything to say, I would as soon say it on that day as on any other, though I would prefer to hear what others have to say first. I know that there are others who are perfectly prepared to speak on the subject; so that, so far as regards that, my friend from North Carolina, if he desires, can have the opportunity to speak then, or he can postpone his remarks for eight or ten days. If he is not then prepared, perhaps some other Senator can then speak.

The motion to postpone until Wednesday was agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROAD BILL.

Mr. GWIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Pacific railroad bill.

Mr. WALKER. That will be taking up that bill out of its order on the Calendar, because the homestead bill is the first special order; and I feel bound to insist upon the consideration of that special order.

Mr. GWIN. A majority of the Senate, I suppose, can determine upon the order of business.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from California moves to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up for consideration the Pacific railroad bill.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope that the Senate will take up the Indian appropriation bill, and let us finish it. Wednesday next has been fixed for the reconsideration of the bill which has been vetoed. It is impossible that we can dispose either of the homestead bill or of the Pacific railroad bill by that time, but I believe we can dispose of the Indian appropriation bill. I hope the Senate will take it up.

Mr. GWIN. I appeal to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, [Mr. SEBASTIAN,] whether there is any prospect of getting through with the Indian appropriation bill to-morrow? I have no doubt that there are to be four or five days' debate on that bill yet; and this other measure presents a much more important question, and deserves some consideration. I hope that the motion which I have made will prevail. The Indian appropriation bill is not pressing for immediate action.

Mr. STUART. If the Senator from California is correct, that the Indian appropriation bill will consume the whole of two days, it certainly must follow that the Pacific railroad bill will consume a great deal more than that; and inasmuch as I hold the consideration of the homestead bill paramount to either of them, or both of them, I shall vote against each proposition. If his argument is true, I will vote against proceeding to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, or of the Pacific railroad bill, and will vote to take up the first special order, which is the homestead bill.

Now, Mr. President, I think the homestead bill has been scarcely fairly treated by the Senate. It was the first bill which was made a special order for consideration a long time ago, and it has been postponed from time to time to suit the convenience of one thing and another until it has almost become an habitual motion, as a matter of course, to postpone it. I am perfectly willing, so far as I can by my action, to consult the wishes and convenience of every Senator who desires to address the Senate upon any topic; but if it is a mere question between measures, while I desire to sustain both these propositions, so far as I can, I hold the homestead bill paramount to both of them for the present.

Mr. BROWN. I shall vote to give precedence to the homestead bill over all others; and my principal reason for doing so is, that I conceive it to be intimately connected in principle with the bill which has been vetoed by the President; and while we are considering the one, we are necessarily considering the other. All the main principles involved in the one bill are involved in the other. You cannot discuss the homestead bill without discussing the principles involved in the veto message. Nor can you discuss the veto message without discussing the principles involved in the homestead bill. Every argument which gentlemen have employed this morning to show that we ought to take up the veto message at once goes to convince me that we ought to take up the homestead bill. It is not so much that we shall consider the message itself as that we shall consider the principles involved in the message, the principles put forth in it; and if the principles involved in the message shall be sustained by the Senate, then, as a matter of course, the homestead bill must go by the board. If those principles are not sustained, we may yet pass the homestead bill. My respect for the President, among other things, induces me to say that I shall prefer the taking up of the homestead bill to all other things; and while considering that, we may consider the principles laid down in the message of the President.

Mr. HUNTER. I suppose the question will be taken on the propositions in the order in which they are made. Have the yeas and nays been called for?

The PRESIDENT. They have not.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senate will vote down the proposition made by the Senator from California, and take up the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. GWIN. If my proposition is voted down, the homestead bill should come up of course. Every Senator knows that I am in favor of the homestead bill, but I regard the Pacific railroad bill as one of great importance, and I have it especially committed to my charge. I do not think there is any necessary conflict between the friends of the Pacific railroad and the friends of the homestead bill. Some of the best friends of the one are the friends of the other. I have not been instrumental in postponing the homestead bill on any occasion. I am very anxious that there should be action upon it. I introduced a homestead bill into the Senate at a very early day in the session, and desire to have action upon the subject. But the Pacific railroad bill has also been pending from an early day, and I am very anxious to get it acted upon. I ask for the yeas and nays upon my motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CASS. I shall be compelled to vote against the motion of the Senator from California. I have voted at all times to bring his measure on; but I think that under the circumstances the homestead bill is the most important. I therefore shall prefer, as far as my vote goes, to bring that up. We have attempted it session after session. Session after session it seems to pass by the Senate without our getting at it. I agree with those who are in favor of it, that now is the time to bring it forward, and I may be allowed to express the regret that I feel, in common with many others, at the loss which this country experiences in the absence of the eminent statesman from Massachusetts. If he were here this day, he would be as warm an advocate of this bill as any other person upon this floor. He would be one of those who would strongly urge the consideration of this bill—its consideration as one of the utmost importance.

In regard to the veto message, I am desirous of voting upon the reconsideration of that bill; but I concur fully with others, that there is no disrespect in postponing it for a few days, for the purpose of giving Senators an opportunity of preparing themselves for its consideration. I have no question about the veto; none at all. I voted against the bill from the commencement. As to the reasoning of the veto message, I have not yet been able to form an opinion upon it. I have not read it. I understand it has been laid upon our tables only this morning. I am not, therefore, prepared to say anything upon the reasons that are given for the veto; but, so far as respects the measure, I fully support and approve of the veto, and am ready to vote upon it. Under the circumstances, however, I shall now vote for taking up the homestead bill.

Mr. DAWSON. I shall vote for taking up the Pacific railroad bill, for this reason: I find that the Senator from Michigan, and the Senator from California, and other Senators, who have this morning entered into a vindication of the homestead bill, say that that bill does not come within the principle of the veto. If it does not, then, of course, it would be up for discussion, and perhaps a very wide discussion. If it does come within the principle laid down by the veto, as I observed the other day, there can be no necessity for discussing that measure until we discuss the veto; and, if the veto shall be sustained by the majority of this body, of course, if the homestead bill is within its principle, it would go down; but, as it does not, in the opinion of gentlemen—

Mr. CASS. If the Senator will allow me, I have not expressed any opinion as to whether it comes within the veto or not. I have not read the veto message, and therefore cannot say whether it comes within it or not. I cannot pass any opinion upon the principles contained in it; but so far as the application of the veto to the bill making a grant of public lands to the lunatic asylums is concerned, I think I can support it.

Mr. DAWSON. The other Senators made no explanation of that kind; and I had thought that, if the veto did cover the homestead bill, it was an unnecessary consumption of time on the part of the Senate to discuss that measure too.

Mr. BROWN. If my friend from Georgia will allow me, I think the only way to settle that difficulty would be to pass the homestead bill, and then send it to the President, and see whether he will apply the same reasoning to it.

Mr. DAWSON. Of course, as the Senator from Mississippi believes, that the homestead bill falls within the principles of the veto, he would not consume the time of the country by discussing that bill.

Mr. BROWN. I may vote for the bill. If I should vote against it, it will certainly not be on constitutional ground.

Mr. DAWSON. Then, as the Senators have expressed their opinion as to this bill coming within the principles of the veto message, I shall vote for the motion of the honorable Senator from California.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, on Mr. Gwin's motion, resulted—yeas 13, nays 24—as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Brodhead, Dawson, Gwin, James, Morton, Norris, Sebastian, Stidell, Thompson of Kentucky, Toney, Weller, and Williams—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Brown, Butler, Cass, Chase, Clay, Clayton, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Peacer, Pettit, Stuart, Sumner, Toombs, Wade, and Walker—24.

So the motion was lost.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. WALKER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the homestead bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. STUART in the chair.) That is the first special order.

Mr. HUNTER. Does it come up without a motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that it does, unless a motion is made to postpone it.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to postpone that special order until to-morrow week.

Mr. BROWN. I beg leave respectfully to say that I hope such a motion will not prevail. The homestead bill has been postponed from day to day, from time to time, until it seems to me that the Senate does not mean to act upon it at all. I respectfully appeal to honorable gentlemen if this is treating with fairness a bill to which the country certainly looks with some degree of interest? If we intend to defeat the bill, let us come up to it and defeat it like men, and not kill it by postponing it, first for a week, then for two weeks, then for three weeks, and thus get clear of it under various pretexts. This is no measure that is suddenly sprung upon us. It has been before Congress, in some shape, for the last ten or fifteen years, and we cannot disguise from ourselves, if we would, that a very large portion of the American people take a very deep interest in it, and they are looking with very great anxiety to the action of the Senate upon the question, seeing that the bill has twice passed the House, and now only needs the ratification of the Senate to become a law. They will expect us to act upon it in some way; and I know of no better time than now to come square up and meet the question responsibly. Either pass the bill or reject it, and let the country know where we stand. I am as well prepared now as I shall be at any other time either to express my views or to give a vote upon it. The anxiety which prevails all around manifests to us in no mistakable terms that gentlemen are prepared to vote or speak upon it. I would not precipitate a final vote upon it until gentlemen have expressed their views. But why postpone it? The Senator from Virginia assigns no reason for doing so. If this were the first application to postpone it, I would say, very well; let it be postponed. But it is neither the first, second, nor third application. Every time it comes up, there is something more important than it in the way. I want the bill acted upon, and I want a final vote of the Senate upon it, so that we may either pass it, or reject it; and I shall steadfastly, from this time forward, vote against postponing it, unless there should be some sufficient reason assigned why it should be postponed.

Mr. BROADHEAD. The honorable Senator from Georgia [Mr. Dawson] made a statement from which it may be inferred that gentlemen on this side of the Chamber do not think that the homestead bill falls within the principle and the reasoning of the veto. For one, sir, I think it does fall within that reasoning, and is liable to the objections stated by the President in his veto. Admitting that there is a difference of opinion on this point, it is obviously proper that we should consider both measures at the same time. Therefore, I will vote for the postponement. If a portion of the reasoning in the veto message is good against the insane bill, it is also good against the homestead bill; therefore, I think that the discussion in regard to our land system, which we must have, and for which gentlemen are preparing themselves, had better be all at once on the veto message; and I shall therefore vote for the postponement.

Mr. GWIN. I hope that the homestead bill will be taken up. I think there is a great deal of profession in favor of that measure in this body without much practice, and I call for the yeas and nays upon the postponement. It is well known that the motion to postpone is made for the purpose of bringing up the Indian appropriation bill, a measure that is not pressing. It may be passed two months hence, and that will be time enough for the public service. Every individual who votes for the postponement I shall look upon as an enemy to the homestead bill, and as being in direct opposition to the consideration of that question. I want to know whether or not we are going to consider it. If the homestead bill has as many friends as there are professions in this body, we can pass the House bill as it came to us; and I intend to vote for it in that form, and against every amendment. I do not believe it comes within the veto message sent to us by the President. It is an entirely different measure, and, whether it is or not, I shall vote on the measure as my judgment dictates.

Now, Mr. President, I hope the homestead bill will be taken up, and I hope that an adroit minority cannot defeat two great measures—the Pacific railroad and the homestead bills—by fighting one against the other. I hope that the friends of these two bills will not have any collision. I know that there is a majority of the body in favor of each; and now I am in favor of taking up the homestead bill, and considering it. If a majority are in favor of it, the Senate can pass it. If not, the sooner we know it the better.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator from California hopes the friends of these bills will not come in collision with each other. I am not at present among that number; but my honorable friend from California—and I never use the term friend consciously without feeling it sincerely—says that a great many professions of friendship are made in this body for the homestead bill. His remarks convey an implication of condemnation, of censure, and worse, of suspicion of the sincerity of Senators, and their declarations in regard to this measure. That is the construction which his language bears.

Mr. GWIN. That is not the impression which I wanted to convey. I said this, that if the homestead bill had as many friends on this floor as we had seen public professions for it, we can take it up, and we can pass it; and if we do not take it up, certainly there is more strength in profession than in practice.

Mr. JOHNSON. Exactly. Still the declaration of the gentleman goes to the country conveying the idea as I have embodied it; and that idea bears with it unquestionably a reflection upon the sincerity and truthfulness of gentlemen upon this floor in their declarations—not with an intention or will to do so offensively, I grant and know; but the reports, when they are made, must show that to be the only rational conclusion to be drawn from his remarks.

The Senator says, further, that he is opposed to this kind of delay any longer. He is not willing to permit an adroit minority any longer to defeat the bill. What is an adroit minority, taken in connection with his remarks? An insincere body of men, inferior in number and in strength, attempting, by parliamentary maneuvers, to control and destroy the action of the deliberative body of which they are members. I appeal to every gentleman upon this floor if this is not the manifest construction that will be put upon his language?

Mr. GWIN. I spoke of an adroit minority fighting one measure against another, and fighting with skill; fighting the Pacific railroad and the homestead bill against each other—and I think that, if by a vote to postpone, the minority can postpone this bill and get up such a collision, they would be exceedingly adroit. That is the amount of it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Sir, whenever I am for a measure I shall contend for it strongly, and whenever I am opposed to it it is my right to resist it by all the legitimate and authorized rules that are made to secure just and wise legislation. I suppose that to be the feeling and the will of every man who is a member of this body. It is such, so far, at least, as I am concerned; and if it is not with every one, then the dissenting member has rights here which he either does not understand or does not choose to exercise.

Now, sir, to pass from that—there is a good deal of assumption here, I think, in regard to the homestead bill, upon the part of its especial advocates; at this moment a good deal of arrogance, if I may use that word—a good deal of arrogating to themselves as the particular friends of the measure, and as to the rights of this particular bill; and my honorable friend again, (for I have yet another, I think,) from Mississippi, [Mr. Brown,] says that you do not deal fairly by it, but you postpone it to-day and to-morrow, and next week, and the week after, and will postpone it to death, and thus it has been always, whilst all that remains to be done is a vote of the Senate to take it up, and a vote to pass it, and the signature of the President, and then it will become a law. Well, sir, it never had much more to do at the outset. [Laughter.] A vote in the House of Representatives constitutes the residue of any legislative action.

But, sir, what right has my honorable friend to complain so bitterly at extraordinary delay, and to introduce the last week, and another week, and the week before, and the declaration that he does not know how long it will continue to be delayed, or by whom or what? By fairness? Oh; no. It is all unfair to the country. This is a matter about which there is a vast deal of interest, forsooth. It is a matter, forsooth, which must override everything else. Sir, is there nothing else of interest before this body but the homestead bill? Sir, the Indian appropriation bill is a measure that is called for, to be passed in the regular progress of the business of this Government. The day is near at hand when that call becomes imperative. Our treaty obligations are suffering, our treaty stipulations must be fulfilled, and our guarantees to the Indians already call for the passage of this bill.

There is no question about this. Then, here is the President's veto, alleged to involve many of the same questions which are involved in the homestead bill. Those gentlemen who wish to discuss these several matters, and others of equally great importance, may just as well cry out against the extraordinary delay, and declaim against the adroitness used in defeating their judgment, and their wishes in matters that they consider of equal or much greater importance. All this talk about the peculiar claims on the part of the homestead bill to a prompt, and, if needs be, a prolonged consideration in preference to everything else, is mere stuff, and is the veriest stuff so far as it goes to the establishment of any supremacy for the homestead bill to the right of immediate consideration over every and all other measures before this body.

There are not only the measures I have enumerated now depending before this body; there is also the measure which the Senator from California has himself in charge; and, by the way, I never was before aware that that gentleman was an advocate, so very strenuous and impatient, for the homestead bill.

Mr. GWIN. I introduced it at a very early day of the session.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let the honor of it, then, be to him. I have no objection. Now, sir, in regard to the homestead bill, I was for it myself sincerely. I supported it, and have supported it for several years; but in the present phase of things, I am not prepared to go on with it at all, or to say that I will support it. Because, if it was forced upon me to-day, I should vote against it. Why? Because just at this time it is tintured, to a degree, from its inevitable effects, and under the peculiar circumstances, so strongly with abolitionism, that I cannot, for one, bring myself, as a representative on this floor from the South, for one moment to think of permitting it to pass this body, and become a law. Why? Very succinctly to state it, there is evidence palpable each day that this bill is being pressed through with unusual anxiety, and as if for life and death. The bill has been six or eight years in Congress, and a large part of this anxiety is unquestionably new-born.

Here are the facts as I find them. The Government is extinguishing titles to lands that lie west of Missouri and Iowa. When the rights of the Indians are extinguished, and they are removed, all that country becomes open to settlement, and the people will remove into it with or without an organized government. Yet it is a fact that the Missouri restriction exists there at this time, and that our southern people cannot go there for that reason, even if they desired to do so. If you pass the homestead bill in the face of these facts, you bid a premium to all the balance of the world to fill up and settle that country, only excluding my constituency. If then you reject or delay the passage of the territorial bills for two, or three years, you settle the question involved in those territorial bills practically, and by a law which has a higher force than the enactment of the Wilmot proviso itself.

In regard to what I shall constitute adroitness and fairness, I must say, that to delay the territorial bills for some years, but at the same time and in hot haste, to enact the homestead law, would exhibit extraordinary adroitness, and prove a most detestable specimen of fairness.

I do not consider, or believe, that any man who is from the South, can conscientiously come forward and support that measure; at least, until the Kansas and Nebraska bills shall have been passed, and the whole country shall have become open to settlement by the whole people of the United States. Am I right, or am I wrong? You are wrong, may say the man who wishes to exclude every southerner; but you are right; I think would say every candid man, if you shall ever wish to go to those Territories on equal terms under the laws of your country. This is a very adroit way by which we may be excluded from these Territories. Not that all, or many, of the old advocates of the homestead bill have in view such a result as this—by no means; but there are many of its present advocates that rejoice in the bill for this very feature; and if those advocates shall secure its passage now, and can successfully resist the territorial bills, even by adroitness and unfairness, which it is openly proclaimed will and shall be used, so as to defeat, or at any rate to delay, the same for two or three years, they will, practically and effectually; and they feel and know it, have effected their great and most highly cherished object. It is absurd, and I think it even pitiful, to ask any member of this Congress who represents a southern constituency to do a thing like this. I do not think it even conveys a consideration of passing respect for his intelligence or his honesty to his own people, to attempt to argue him to a step like this. Now, sir, if gentlemen wish to give their votes on the homestead bill so anxiously, and that purely with a desire to give homes to the homeless, and not with a wish to use the measure as a political engine, let them bear with this thing with a little patience, and allow us to know what is to be the course of events affecting our rights in collateral matters. And I ask that gentlemen will not get up, and assume at once that it is adroitness (by which I ever understand that there is something of concealment) that is going to do this thing; or get up and assume that the bill has rights of precedence in this body which no other bill can have in comparison with it. I have presented, I think, but a fair view of the matter, a view which certainly will not be classed among the movements adroit. The bill has no right here better or greater than any other bill whatever; and I shall simply cast my vote in reference to it, and to collateral matters in accordance with my own judgment of my duty to my own people.

Mr. GWIN. The argument of the Senator from Arkansas in contrasting the homestead with the Nebraska bill seems to me to be adroit, and I use the term with perfect respect to him. I want it understood in advance, that I intend to press the homestead bill in every parliamentary manner that I can, from this time forward. I intend to do it with perfect respect to every member of this body; and with the determination, so far as I am concerned, to pass the bill. Now, sir, the Senator has made an appeal to the whole southern Senators against this measure, because, he says, until the Nebraska bill shall be passed, the inhabitants of the southern States will have none of the privileges of settlement in the Nebraska Territory, under the homestead bill. If the Senator had only read the homestead bill, he would have ascertained one important fact that knocks his argument in the head. The homestead bill applies to no other lands than those that are subject to sale at private entry. Now there is not one foot of land surveyed in Nebraska or Kansas; nor will there be for many years to come.

Mr. JOHNSON. There was not a foot surveyed in California, and yet the State settled up.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, the State of California has had the privilege of preemption on unsurveyed lands extended to her citizens. The homestead bill applies only to public lands subject to sale at private entry. Those are the words of the bill. We all know that to be the language of the bill. We know there is not a foot of land surveyed in Nebraska or Kansas, and there is no prospect, for years to come, of any of the lands there being subject to sale at private entry; and, therefore, they are not open to the provisions of the homestead bill.

Now, in regard to the consideration of this bill, in reference to other questions, I do not think it ought to have a bearing upon the Senate. Let it be examined on its merits. If it is a proper bill to pass, let us pass it. If there be a majority of the body in favor of it, let that majority take it up. If there be a majority in favor of passing the House bill, of course we can pass it, and we will do so. If there be a majority in favor of a substitute, of course that substitute will be properly considered and passed. All that I ask is, that it may come up, and be acted upon either favorably or otherwise. I shall submit to the will of the Senate.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I think the honorable Senator from California is entirely correct in the assumption that those who vote against taking up the homestead bill are opposed to it; and I will vote against taking up the bill for that very reason. We had an intimation a few days ago, that the presidential veto had afforded us the best opportunity which has occurred of late years, for discussing our entire policy with reference to the public lands; and it is intimated that we are to have that discussion. I, for one, am unwilling to have it indirectly, when we may have it directly. If we take up the homestead bill, I see not when we are to reach that discussion. And, Mr. President, I cannot recognize the idea that this bill possesses any peculiar claim to the consideration of the Senate above all other bills now before us. Why, sir, an entire review of your judiciary system, demanded by every portion of this country, and every man in it, has been had by the Judiciary Committee, and their bill was made the special order for last Monday, but it has not yet been considered. Has the homestead bill any peculiar claims over that judiciary question, when your Supreme Court judges, under the existing system, are worked to death, and with all their powers strained, are unable to attend to the wants of the country?

While I am up, sir, I will say that there is a prospect before us of getting a wise and judicious bill for the graduation of the price of the public lands. There are lands in my State, which have been in the market ever since they were first surveyed, which will not now bring twelve and a half cents per acre; still those lands are held up at the Government price without the remotest chance of settlement, a dead weight to the prosperity of the State; and I shall cheerfully vote at any time to give preference to any of these graduation bills, whether they come from the House, or are introduced here, before the homestead bill is taken up.

Mr. RUSK. I will vote against taking up the homestead bill now; but protest against the rule laid down that the friends of it must rally, take it up at any time and at all times, whether there be any other business before the Senate or not. I stand, perhaps, in a different position from others. I do not like to force a good thing on others, whether they will or not, before they have had time to consider it; but I shall vote, for a very substantial reason, against taking up that bill this morning. I do not want to be misunderstood. I am in favor of the principle of a homestead bill. I have not examined the one which is before us thoroughly, to see whether it commends itself to my judgment. But, at the same time, we have the Indian appropriation bill before us. It is partly concluded. We have gone on with it for some time; and if we take up an entirely new subject, what we have done upon the Indian appropriation bill will pass as having been done for almost nothing.

The manner in which we have usually passed the general appropriation bills is familiar to every member of the Senate. Nearly all of them have been thrown into the last nights of the session, and the result has been that they have always passed defectively. Then, what is the first thing that comes up, upon the assembling of a new session of Congress here? It is a deficiency bill. And what is the reason of that? It is because there has not been sufficient consideration given to the annual appropriation bills. The Indian appropriation bill is now here before us in time; we can act upon it. It will take but a day or two longer to complete it. The principal part of it has been done, and we can soon finish it. I think it is a bill that demands our attention. However friendly I may be to the homestead bill, I think there is ample justification for me when I vote to give to the Indian appropriation bill the preference over any other measure. I believe that that bill contains provisions for Indians in my State, as well as for some in California; and within a few days the mail has brought us the intelligence of a murder having been committed within less than twenty miles of a city of Texas, containing eight thousand inhabitants.

Mr. GWIN. I will ask the Senator from Texas if a dollar of the money appropriated by that bill can be used until the first of July, if the bill should pass to-morrow?

Mr. RUSK. I will answer that by stating what I believe. If you take up the homestead bill, if you take up the Pacific railroad bill, and the President's veto, and discuss them, that bill will not be reached until the first of July; but as soon as it is disposed of then there is a rival, a very formidable rival to these other measures, out of their way. We have gone half way through with it, and I shall vote to take it up and proceed with it, until we get through with it. I do it against a favorite measure of mine. I stand, as I said before, in perhaps a different position from others. My State cannot be affected by the provisions of the homestead bill. I do not avow my hostility to that bill. I have no particular interest to press it before any other business; but I am willing to give it a fair opportunity. I feel favorably disposed towards the principle of it; but it seems to me that as we have the Indian appropriation bill before us, we ought to get clear of it, as it is matter of importance to carry it through. It is necessary to carry out treaty stipulations. It is a matter of importance, so far as my State is concerned, because the action taken under it, as soon as it passes, will, in my judgment, give us peace on the frontier.

Mr. BELL. If the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance [Mr. HUNTER] will state to the Senate that it is important that the Indian appropriation bill should be passed immediately, I will vote against the proposition to take up the homestead bill. But unless that be the fact, unless it be all-important to the public interests that it be taken up immediately, I shall vote to take up the homestead bill. I have deliberated somewhat in my own mind whether, under the circumstances, it is the proper time to take up that bill; but I confess, from what I have heard from honorable members this morning, that I cannot repress my curiosity to hear what Senators will say upon the homestead bill. One of the most experienced Senators in the body this morning announced that, although he concurred with the President in the doctrines of the veto message on the bill granting lands for the benefit of the indigent insane, yet he has no idea that the principle of that veto applies to the homestead bill.

I wish to have the subject taken up, so that honorable Senators may have the opportunity to express themselves upon it. I wish to hear their views for my own benefit and instruction. I wish to know what is the new process of reasoning, or what are the new inventions in regard to the construction of the Constitution of the United States, which have got hold of the minds of honorable Senators, by which they are enabled to discriminate between the principle of the veto message as applicable to the bill granting lands for the indigent insane, and as applicable to the ground on which the homestead bill rests. I wish to know on what ground they pretend, or say, I will not use the word pretend, because they are, no doubt, honest,—that one is constitutional, and the other clearly not.

I think that, upon another ground, there is a propriety in taking up the homestead bill, unless it be important that the Indian appropriation bill should be passed immediately. Necessarily the arguments applicable to the veto message will be urged, particularly by those gentlemen who are opposed to the homestead bill, against that bill. It will be, in effect, taking up this morning the consideration of the doctrines involved in that veto message; and it will be taking them up in a way which, I think, will be advantageous to the Senate and to the country. We cannot proceed to the consideration of those questions too soon. Many Senators cannot—I know that I cannot, for one—receive light and information too early upon the subject. Discussion will necessarily go on, to some extent, upon the constitutionality of the homestead bill, according to the principles of the veto message; and, in effect, it will be taking up the veto message this morning. We want all the light on that subject that we can get. I did design, myself, to say something upon the veto message at the proper time. I confess that the most desirable preparatory step with me would be, to hear the arguments of honorable, distinguished, and able Senators, who may attempt to discriminate, on the principles of that message, between the two bills—who shall attempt to show that the indigent insane bill is unconstitutional, and the homestead bill constitutional. Therefore, unless the honorable Senator from Virginia will say that he considers it of great public importance that the Indian appropriation bill should be passed immediately, I shall vote to take up the homestead bill.

Mr. HUNTER. I think the Indian appropriation bill ought to be acted upon now. It ought to be passed immediately. There are appropriations in it to which provisos are attached, which allow the Secretary of the Interior to expend the money during the present fiscal year; for instance, the following item is contained in the bill:

"For the expense of making presents of agricultural implements to the bands of Pueblo Indians, in the Territory of New Mexico, $10,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, if, in his discretion, the public interests require it, be authorized to use any part of the appropriations herein made for making treaties in Oregon, Washington, Utah, and New Mexico, and for holding councils at Fort Benton prior to the commencement of the next fiscal year."

Here is another item:

"For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Washington Territory, for six months, ending June 30, 1854, $5,000."

There are others of the same character. They were introduced under the apprehension that the deficiency bill might be very late in passing the House of Representatives, or that it might so happen that it would not pass at all. In view of all the difficulties which attend that measure, some of the most indispensable provisions were introduced into the Indian bill, and to these provisions was attached a proviso giving authority to the Secretary of the Interior to expend any portion of them during the present fiscal year. I think, therefore, that it is a matter of importance. Besides, we know that that bill is to be returned to the House of Representatives with a great many amendments attached to it by the Senate, and we know it will be subject to many delays there. I believe the experience of the Government has shown that the appropriation bills ought to be called, taken up, and acted on earlier, and with more promptitude, than we have heretofore shown in regard to them.

For all these reasons, it is my opinion that the Indian bill ought to be taken up and acted on. I do not know how long it may take. I do not know all that the Committee on Indian Affairs may have to offer by way of amendment; but I do hope that we shall dispose of it during to-day and to-morrow; at any rate we ought to make what progress we can in order to get rid of it as soon as we can.

Mr. GWIN. The chairman of the Committee on Finance has, within a very short time, reported a deficiency bill; and he crowded that bill with items for deficiencies for the Indian department. Now, it seems, he has come up with another deficiency bill for the Indian department. Sir, I think there should be but one deficiency bill during a session. We have acted upon that. We have sent it to the House, and there it is likely to remain for a good while. We have already put amendments on the Indian bill that will be very apt to make it a law about the day on which we adjourn. I fear we shall find that the general appropriation bills will be passed at this session as heretofore—about the day of adjournment; let that be sooner or later. We know there is no pressing necessity for action on the bill now; for if we act on it now, it may be delayed in the House for a month or two, or three, or four, or five months; and probably on the day of adjournment we shall pass it like all other appropriation bills. There is no necessity for acting upon it now.

Mr. TOUCEY. Mr. President, I fear we spend too much time in discussing questions as to the mere priority of business, instead of deliberating upon the measures before us themselves. We have postponed until Wednesday next the consideration of a bill that has been returned by the President with his veto. It is a bill, with that message, involving more of importance to the legislation of the country, and to the perpetuity of our institutions, than any other measure pending before Congress. It involves also the question or questions which are embraced in other bills, and among others the homestead bill.

Now, sir I am unwilling, for one, to go into the discussion of the homestead bill until we shall have considered the message of the President and the bill which it accompanies. I prefer as a member of this body, to go on now with the Indian appropriation bill, in which we have already made great progress, and dispose of it, if possible, between this and Wednesday. If we cannot do that, I hope that the Senate will go to the discussion of the constitutional questions that are brought up here, and will dispose of them before they take up this bill or any other.

Mr. BUTLER. I have been reminded that I have been remiss in my duty, in not indicating, at least, the propriety of taking up the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee; but, I am aware, Mr. President, from my experience in this body, and the temper which I have seen manifested in it, that it would be a very futile task upon my part to offer to take it up; for it does not depend—I assert it here upon my responsibility as a Senator—upon the relative merits of the bills, as to which shall take precedence. The honorable Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Brown] has said that it is a matter of urgent necessity to take up the homestead bill. Why, sir, we have owned some of these lands, at least, and they have been surveyed, for fifty years, and we have done all that time without this homestead bill; and we could do without it for many years to come. Sir, I say it is not the urgency, it is not the merit of the measure, that gives it its importance in this body.

I would willingly have called up the judiciary bill. I might very well call it up, for I think it has more merits than any of the measures indicated, so far as it regards immediate action upon it, with the exception, perhaps, of the appropriation bill. I will say to the honorable Senator from Tennessee that I am no parliamentary tactician; but I think I may assume to myself this much of parliamentary tactics, to say that the taking up of this homestead bill will be but making a masked battery, from which gentlemen intend to assail the veto of the President. If they intend to meet the doctrines involved in that veto message, let them do it fairly, and let the Senate have the authority of the vote; but if you take up the homestead bill, it is not obvious to the whole Senate that, through the discussion of it the veto message will be assailed, and that that message will not have what may be called a fair parliamentary chance in this body?

I think we ought to take up the bill indicated by the chairman of the Committee on Finance; for if we take up the homestead bill, is it not obvious to all the members of the body that it will be under consideration on Wednesday; and the gentleman will say that being under consideration it ought not to be set aside for the purpose of taking up the veto message? That will be the result. If I were to urge it upon my friend from Virginia now to press that the measure which is under consideration ought to have a preference, they would say that would be no guide for them. But if they had the homestead bill under consideration, by force of votes they would give it the preference. There is a good deal in the force of votes; and if gentlemen get the homestead bill under consideration, and the majority of the body are in favor of it, they will give it the preference over all other measures, and the measure which is set apart for Wednesday next will not be taken up.

Mr. BROWN. Suppose it should not, no harm will be done.

Mr. BUTLER. You have urged it, as I understand, as one of the requirements for the immediate consideration of the homestead bill, that it is looked upon with great interest throughout the country, and that, therefore, it ought to pass now; yet we have been fifty years without such a system.

Mr. BROWN. That is no reason why we should not now do right.

Mr. BUTLER. It is very urgent now, we are told, when no such system has ever been in operation, I believe, in this country, and, so far as my vote goes, never shall be. But that is beyond the question now under consideration. Gentlemen say it is urgent. They know the appropriation bill is more urgent. But I have said that the purpose in taking up the homestead bill, is with a view to make it a masked battery from which to assail the doctrines in the veto message.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Mr. President, whatever motives may be ascribed to other Senators, or whatever intimations may be thrown out as to the views and purposes of some who may wish to use the homestead bill as "a masked battery," from which to assail the President, I am sure does not apply to me, nor do I believe it is so intended. I am sure that was directed at Senators who occupy a very different, and much more distinguished position in this body and in the country, than I do; for Senators having different political views from those I entertain; and for others who stand in a peculiar relation to the bill which has been returned to us from the President. As I stated on a previous occasion, I believe that the President has done right in vetoing the indigent insane bill. For that, sir, I am prepared to sustain him; but, sir, at the same time, I am a friend of the homestead bill, and I am so whether the President is or not. I shall therefore vote to take it up on all occasions, and to urge it to its final passage. Whether it will be vetoed or not, is, however, a matter which I am not called upon to decide. Let the President speak for himself. I am in favor of passing the homestead bill to-day, and thus affording to the President the opportunity of exercising his constitutional authority, either to veto or approve it to-morrow, as he may think proper. He has his duty to discharge as Chief Magistrate of the United States. He acts under the solemnity of his oath, and has his duties and obligations to perform as to him shall seem proper. I act under mine. Each Senator does the same, and decides, as far as his veto (vote) can do, the constitutionality and expediency of all the measures which come before us. Why, then, should we condemn, or find fault with, the President, for doing the same thing?

Mr. President, as a general thing, I am usually for sustaining my friend from Virginia [Mr. Hunter] in pressing the appropriation bills, because I think a preference should generally be given to them. I would now do so over any other than the homestead bill. The Senator from Wisconsin, I think, but discharges his duty by insisting on the special order, and I am for sustaining him. I voted against the proposition of the Senator from California, because I preferred the homestead bill.

I regretted to hear my friend from Arkansas [Mr. Johnson] announce to-day his intention to vote against the homestead bill, giving as a reason therefor that there was a tinge of abolitionism about that bill which had driven him from its support. I regretted it the more, because that Senator had heretofore voted for the bill in the other House, and was, as I thought, its champion. Now, sir, I am one of those who have seen with the deepest regret the attempt to connect this matter of disposing of the public lands with the question of slavery in any of its shapes or forms. The Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. Adams,] who is not now here, when discussing the homestead bill upon a previous occasion, referred to the burning in effigy of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Douglas] by the miserable fanatics in Chicago and other portions of the country; and he did me the honor to refer to me and to intimate that because of my position on the side of the Senator from Illinois on the Nebraska question, that I might receive like treatment at the hands of some of these people, to whom I referred in kindly terms as the countrymen of Montgomery, and Lafayette, and others.

Sir, as a friend of the South, a supporter of the Constitution, and an advocate for the performance of each and every duty which one State owes to another under the provisions of that sacred instrument, there are few things which I so much deplore as that the South, the minority section of the Union, should engage in a war against that foreign born population, of whom, in the days of Jefferson, and of the alien and sedition laws, and since, they were the friends and supporters. Such, too, was of Jackson and the founders of the Democratic party generally. I am sorry to see those manifestations of discontent to which I have referred. I fear it will make enemies of those who had else been friends. I intended to say to my friend from Mississippi that if the Senator from Illinois has been burnt in effigy by some small squads of foreigners, let it be remembered that they were excited to it by Abolition fanatics, upon ex parte misrepresentations of facts. For one, so far as the burning in effigy is concerned, I attach no importance to it. It is a manifestation of spite and ill-will, with which many of the most meritorious and distinguished public men of our country have been visited, and not by foreigners, but by their own countrymen. Washington was burnt in effigy for his approval of Jay's treaty, in many portions of the United States. Tyler, for his veto on the Bank of the United States, was burnt in effigy. He was even insulted in the White House for withholding his assent, as the President of the United States, to the establishment of the fifty millions of dollars monster bank, to coil around and destroy the liberties of the country. No exhibitions of this sort should ever have the least influence in determining the course of a public man, much less to influence his vote upon a great question of public policy.

But, sir, my friend from Arkansas intimates that there is a desire on the part of one section to get the advantage over the other. I know that he did not intend that for me; because, Mr. President, as you know, I am one of those who were, and am, willing to open Kansas and Nebraska Territories to the citizens of all the States of this Union, to go there with all the property which they own, of every kind; and if the institutions under which I live, and to which I am attached, cannot triumph in the settlement of those Territories, and in shaping their domestic institutions, over those of my friend's State and others, I am willing to abide the decision, and believe the minority ought to be. The people, the Constitution, and the judiciary—it is strange to me that any republican should think of shrinking from such tribunals as these.

Mr. President, in regard to the various bills which are before us, I apprehend that the fact is this: If a bill has a majority of friends in this body, they will take it up and pass it; and if its friends are in a minority, it will be voted down. Now the question of adherence to the special order is made, I am most anxious it should succeed. I was willing to proceed to consider and to vote upon the President's message to-day; but, as an act of courtesy, we have extended the time over to Wednesday, and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] has the floor upon it. If for no other reason, I think we should proceed to consider the homestead bill in deference to that large and triumphant majority by which it has been twice passed by the other House—by the people's Representatives.

Mr. WELLER. This discussion has now extended almost to the usual hour of adjournment. It is not the first time on which I have seen the whole day consumed in discussing the question whether we should do anything or not. We have been engaged the whole of this day in discussing the question of the priority of business, which is simply a question whether we shall do anything. I have voted from the beginning, in favor of proceeding at once to the consideration of the Executive message. I have given that vote because that message involves principles which, in my judgment, are directly involved in other questions upon which the Senate are called to act. I shall be compelled to vote to-day against the motion made by my friend from Wisconsin, because I see in advance that the whole question of the power of this Government over the public lands must be discussed either upon the bill, or upon the Executive message. In my judgment, sir, the time has arrived when this Government ought to settle, in some definite, decided manner, what power does exist in the legislative department of the Government over the public domain. There are many Senators upon this floor who claim that the power of the Federal Government is unlimited in the disposition of the public domain. There are others again, who say that the same restrictions and the same limitations that are imposed by the Constitution upon the disposition of the public money apply, in like manner, to the disposition of the public land.

Now, Mr. President, this question must be fully met. In my judgment, there are principles asserted as sound constitutional law by the President, in his veto message, which, if carried out, must operate inevitably to defeat the homestead bill. I belong to that class of Senators who read that veto message in such a way as to deny to the Federal Government the power to donate the public lands in the manner prescribed in that bill. Why not, therefore, suffer this question, which has been delayed for many a long year, as my friend from South Carolina has said, and of which delay the people have not complained, to be postponed until we can have a full, fair, and ample discussion of the principles which are involved in its passage and in the veto message? There must be a general discussion; and I infinitely prefer that that discussion shall be had upon the veto message rather than upon the homestead bill. So far as that bill is concerned, if I am compelled to vote against it, it will be because I feel an obligation to sustain the Constitution of the United States. So far as its appeal to my feelings is concerned, to give to every man a portion of the public domain, I would be disposed to yield my assent. I know that it is the interest of the country to have as many land owners as possible; and if I had the power, under the Constitution, I would give every man an interest in the soil, by making him a land-holder. He would then feel that he was a part of the sovereignty of the country; and he would feel that attachment to his home, which, in a state of war, would make this country irresistible.

But, before I can vote for any measure, no matter how much benefit it may confer upon individuals, I am compelled to look to the power of attorney under which I act. The power of attorney limits the duties which I have to perform here. If I believe that it is in contravention of the Constitution, no matter how beneficially it might operate upon every portion of the community, I shall be compelled to withhold my assent.

But I did not rise for the purpose of discussion, but to appeal to the Senate now to vote upon the question whether they will proceed to the consideration of the homestead bill, or whether they will take up the bill indicated by my friend from Virginia? The usual hour of adjournment has arrived. We have all seen how difficult it is to keep Senators here when the time of dinner arrives; and I apprehend it would be almost impossible to keep the Senate in session more than ten or fifteen minutes longer. Now, if the Senate will take a vote, I will regard it as a great personal favor. [Laughter.]

Mr. BADGER. I hope the Senator from California will not think it any violation of the courtesy to himself which he asks, if I seize this opportunity to say, that this is about the hundred and fiftieth time that the propriety has been demonstrated of the amendment which I have endeavored to induce the Senate, on several occasions, to adopt to their rule, namely: that questions in regard to the priority of business be decided without debate. As the Senator from California has said, we have spent the whole day in determining whether we will do anything, and we have got to that point when we shall probably decide not to do anything at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on postponing the consideration of the subject to Tuesday week. On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HUNTER. I said Tuesday week because I supposed that if we took up the Indian appropriation bill, we should not get through with it until to-morrow. Then, on Wednesday the veto comes up, so that I supposed we could not consider that question before to-morrow week.

Mr. BROWN. And I beg leave to add, the balance of the session and something else.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 27, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Benjamin, Brodhead, Butler, Clay, Clayton, Dawson, Dixon, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Fout, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Morton, Norris, Pender, Rusk, Sebastian, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, Toucey, Weller, and Williams—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Brown, Cass, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Gwin, James, Jones of Iowa, Pettit, Stuart, Sumner, Wade, and Walker—15.

So the motion to postpone until to-morrow week was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. PETTIT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 8, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

Mr. RICHARDSON obtained the floor.

The SPEAKER stated the business regularly in order to be the call of States for resolutions.

NEBRASKA AND KANSAS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, avowing my purpose, if the House shall go into committee, to take such action, if sustained by a majority of the committee, as is requisite to lay aside the business in order, that we may reach the bills for the organization of the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to propound a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I have made the motion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I hope the gentleman who has made the motion will withdraw it, to enable me to make an inquiry.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object to any irregular debate.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Why did not the gentleman object to the statement being made by the gentleman from Illinois?

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman from Illinois was permitted to make a statement after his motion was submitted, and now I desire to propound a question, in order that we may have information as to the proposed plan of action. That is all I wish to accomplish. I wish to know whether the gentleman intends, when we go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to set aside or postpone the consideration of the deficiency bill, which, as we all know, is a measure of very great importance—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. CUTTING. This matter may as well be disposed of at once. Why should there be delay?

Mr. WHEELER. I appeal to the gentleman from Illinois to allow me to present the petition of several hundred citizens of the city of New York, against the repeal of the Missouri compromise.

Mr. HAMILTON. I object. The gentleman can present it under the rule.

Mr. WHEELER. Would not the gentleman object to that also, if it were in his power?

Mr. HAMILTON. No, sir; I would not.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. It is important that there should be a full House to act upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

Mr. MACE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that yesterday evening I paired off with my friend Mr. POWELL, of Virginia, on all collateral questions relating to Nebraska and Kansas. He is in favor of a repeal of the Missouri compromise act, while I am opposed to it.

Mr. DRUM. I have been requested to state by one of my colleagues, Mr. JONES, of Berks county, that he and another of my colleagues, Mr. HESTER, of Lancaster county, have paired off on the Nebraska-Kansas bill.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Mr. Speaker, I have paired off with Judge CASKIE, of Virginia, until to-morrow evening, on matters relating to Nebraska. The Hon. Messrs. APPLETON and AIKEN have also paired off with each other. It has been arranged between Mr. AIKEN and myself that we shall both vote until Mr. CASKIE's return, that we may thus put ourselves on the record, and the result is the same as it would be if we both abstained from voting. This arrangement was suggested to Judge CASKIE and approved by him before he left.

The question was then taken on ordering a call of the House; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 165, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, Thomas H. Bayly, Ball, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bell, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bocoek, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Bug, Campbell, Carpenter, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chrisman, Clark, Clingman, Colquitt, Corwin, Cox, Craig, Crocker, Cullom, Cutting, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dick, Dickinson, Dowdell, Dunham, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmonds, Thomas D. Eliot, John M. Elliott, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Plagier, Florence, Franklin, Gamble, Gladdings, Goode, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Grow, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harr, Harrison, Hendricks, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Howe, Hunt, Ingersoll, Johnson, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kerr, Kittredge, Knox, Kurtz, Lane, Latham, Lilly, Lyon, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Macy, Mattoon, Maurice, Maxwell, May, Mayall, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Millson, Murray, Noble, Norton, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Parker, Peck, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, David Ritchie, Robbins, Rogers, Ruffin, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Seymour, Shaw, Shower, Simmons, Singleton, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Tracy, Tweed, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walbridge, Walker, Walley, Walsh, Warren, Eliza B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Witt, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—165.

NAVY.—Messrs. Cobb, Drum, Dunbar, Edmundson, Haven, Hughes, Daniel T. Jones, Letcher, McCulloch, Mercham, and Thurston—11.

So it was ordered that there should be a call of the House.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I would state, Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the House, that Mr. HILL, of Kentucky, is confined to his room by sickness, and that, at his request, I have paired him off with Mr. HARLAN, of Ohio, on all votes in reference to the Nebraska-Kansas bill.

Mr. HENN. With the permission of the House I would state an excuse for the absence of my colleague, [Mr. Cook.]

The SPEAKER. The time has not yet arrived during which it is proper to submit excuses.

Mr. HENN. I only wish to state that my colleague [Mr. Cook] has been suddenly called home by the death of his only daughter.

[Here a message was received from the Senate, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, notifying the House that that body had passed sundry bills and amended sundry bills of the House, and requesting its concurrence in said bills and amendments.]

The list of the absentees was then called, and five more gentlemen answered to their names—making 197.

The following is the list of the absentees:

Messrs. Appleton, Bissell, Bliss, Caskie, Chase, Chastain, Cook, Dent, De Witt, Ewing, Faulker, Fuller, Grey, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Hiestler, Hill, J. Glancy Jones, Lindley, McMullin, McQueen, Morgan, Morrison, Nichols, Pringle, Thomas Ritchey, Rowe, Shannon, Sollers, Frederick P. Stanton, Westbrook, and Yates.

The SPEAKER then directed the doors to be closed.

The officers of the House having executed the order, and the doors having been closed, the Clerk proceeded to call the list of the absentees, for the purpose of allowing excuses to be made.

WILLIAM APPLETON.

Mr. WALLLEY. Mr. APPLETON has been called home by severe sickness in his family. I move that he be excused.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM H. BISSELL.

Mr. RICHARDSON. My colleague, Colonel BISSELL, is confined to his room by indisposition. He had hoped to be present to-day, but is not able to be here. I move that he be excused.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

GEORGE BLISS.

Mr. GREEN. Judge BLISS is in ill health, and is absent from the city by the advice of his physician. I will state, however, that he has paired off, on the Nebraska bill, with Mr. EWING, of Kentucky. I move that he be excused.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

SAMUEL CARUTHERS.

Mr. OLIVER, of Missouri. Mr. CARUTHERS is absent from the city, having been called home on urgent business. He has paired off with Mr. CHASE, of New York, especially on the Nebraska question. I move that he be excused.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

JOHN S. CASKIE.

Mr. BOCOCK. My colleague, Judge CASKIE, has been called home by some interesting family arrangement requiring his attention. He has paired off with Mr. SEYMOUR, of Connecticut, on the Nebraska question. I move that he be excused.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

GEORGE W. CHASE.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. CHASE is detained at home by sickness in his family. I move that he be excused.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

ELIJAH W. CHASTAIN.

Mr. COLQUITT. Mr. CHASTAIN is absent, having paired off with Mr. MORRISON, of New Hampshire. I move that he be excused.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

JOHN P. COOK.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that Mr. COOK be excused. He has been called home by the death of one of his children and the sickness of another.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM B. W. DENT.

Mr. COLQUITT. Mr. DENT left the city in consequence of indisposition, and is now detained at home in consequence of serious illness. I move that he be excused.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

ALEXANDER DE WITT.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. DE WITT is absent from the city, having been detained by serious illness, but is expected here in a few days. I move that Mr. DE WITT be excused.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

PRESLEY EWING.

Mr. PRESTON. I understand that my colleague, Mr. EWING, has gone home to Kentucky on account of illness, and that he has paired off with Mr. BLISS, of Ohio. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

CHARLES J. FAULKNER.

Mr. LETCHER. Mr. FAULKNER is detained at home by business of very great importance, and cannot with propriety be here. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

THOMAS J. D. FULLER.

Mr. MACDONALD. My colleague is out of the city. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

BEN EDWARDS GREY.

Mr. COX. I learned this morning that Mr. GREY is absent from this city, and that he went to New York a few days ago. I presume that he has gone there upon special and important business, as he has always been prompt in his attendance here.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Did my colleague state that Mr. GREY had paired off with any one?

Mr. COX. I do not know that he has.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I understand that he has paired off with Mr. PRINGLE, of New York.

Mr. COX. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

AARON HARLAN.

Mr. CORWIN. Mr. HARLAN has been called home in consequence of the indisposition of his wife, and important business. He told me that he had made arrangements to pair off with Mr. HILL, of Kentucky. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

ANDREW J. HARLAN.

Mr. MACE. My colleague, Mr. HARLAN, left the city a few weeks ago, in consequence of bad health; and I presume that he is not yet recovered, or he would be here. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

WILEY P. HARRIS.

Mr. WRIGHT. My colleague is confined to his room by sickness. He intimated to me this morning that he would be here if he was able to do so; but as he is not present, I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

GEORGE HASTINGS.

Mr. FENTON. Mr. HASTINGS left here a few days ago, in consequence of important professional engagements. As I understand that his wife is in delicate health, that may have something to do with his stay. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

ISAAC E. HIESTER.

Mr. MIDDLESWORTH. My colleague has been called home in consequence of having some very important business to attend to; but I understand that he has paired off with Mr. J. GLANCY JONES, of Pennsylvania. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

CLEMENT S. HILL.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, Mr. HILL has been confined for some time to his room. I understand, besides, that he has paired off with Mr. HARLAN, of Ohio. I move that he be excused.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

J. GLANCY JONES.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. JONES, has paired off with Mr. HIESTER, as has been already stated, on all questions appertaining to the Nebraska bill. I therefore move that he be excused.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

JAMES J. LINDLEY.

This name was twice called, but there was no excuse offered.

FAYETTE McMULLIN.

Mr. LETCHER. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. McMULLIN, is absent from the city. He has paired off with some person; but I at present do not recollect who.

A MEMBER. With Mr. NICHOLS, of Ohio.

Mr. LETCHER. Yes; he has paired off with Mr. NICHOLS, of Ohio; and I therefore move that he be excused.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

JOHN McQUEEN.

Mr. KEITT. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. McQUEEN is detained at home by indisposition in his family. I move that he be excused.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

EDWIN B. MORGAN.

Mr. MATTESON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. MORGAN, was called home by the death of his child. I move that he be excused.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

GEORGE W. MORRISON.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. MORRISON, has been called home by professional business. Having paired off on the Nebraska question with Mr. CHASTAIN, of Georgia, I move that he be excused.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

MATTHIAS H. NICHOLS.

Mr. EDGERTON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. NICHOLS, has been called home from sickness in his family. He has paired off on the Nebraska question with Mr. McMULLIN, of Virginia. I move that he be excused.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

THOMAS RITCHEY.

Mr. GREEN. I would state, Mr. Speaker, that my colleague, Mr. RITCHEY, is absent from the city. I move that he be excused.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

PAULUS POWELL.

Mr. BOCOCK. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. POWELL, has been called to Richmond, last evening, to assist my friend, Mr. CASKIE, in the family arrangement which I have spoken of. He is in favor of the Nebraska bill, and has paired off on all questions connected with it with Mr. MACE, of Indiana. I move that my colleague be excused.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

BENJAMIN PRINGLE.

Mr. SAGE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. PRINGLE, has been called home in consequence of a death in his family. I understand, however, that he has made arrangements with Mr. GREY, of Kentucky, to pair off on the Nebraska bill. I move that he be excused.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

PETER ROWE.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I understand that my colleague, Mr. Rowe, is detained in the city of New York by important business, and that he will shortly resume his seat in the House. I move that he be excused.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

WILSON SHANNON.

Mr. SAPP. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. SHANNON, has been called home on important business. I move that he be excused.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

AUGUSTUS R. SOLLERS.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. SOLLERS, has been detained from the sittings of this House for a long time by sickness. He is now at home. I move that he be excused.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

FREDERICK P. STANTON.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, my brother has been called home some few days ago by important private business. He expected to have been here to-day; but I presume he has been detained on the road. He has paired off with a gentleman from Illinois, Mr. YATES. I move that he be excused.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

THEODORIC R. WESTBROOK.

Mr. DEAN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. WESTBROOK, is detained at home by professional business. I move that he be excused.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

RICHARD YATES.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move that my colleague, Mr. YATES, be excused. He has been called home by important business for a few days. I understand he has paired off with Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. As the names of the absentees have all been called over and disposed of, I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

[A message was here received from the President of the United States, by the hands of SIDNEY WEBSTER, Esq., his Private Secretary, informing the House that he had signed certain bills.]

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the motion that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HAMILTON. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MILLSON. I would inquire of the Chair if the consideration of the deficiency bill will not be the first business in order if the House resolve to go into committee?

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. MILLSON. As I believe the deficiency bill will be the first in order, I shall vote to go into the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object to all debate.

The SPEAKER. Discussion is not in order, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 109, nays 88; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abernethy, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashie, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Boreock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craig, Cumming, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Eddy, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, English, Florence, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Leicher, Lilly, Lindsey, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, May, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milson, Noble, Oids, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Rogers, Ruffin, Seward, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Trout, Tweed, Vail, Van-sant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—109.

NAYS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Chamberlain, Chandler, Corwin, Crocker, Cullom, Curtis, Cutting, Thos. Davis, Dean, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flager, Franklin, Gamble, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Harrison, Haven, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Kludred, Knox, Lindsay, Lyon, McCulloch, Macy, Matteson, Maurice, Mayall, Mencham, Middlesworth, Murray, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pratt, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seymour, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Hestor L. Stevens, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Wheeler—88.

So the motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. OLDS in the chair.)

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to lay aside bill No. 84, upon the Calendar, for the purpose of proceeding to subsequent business thereon.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is it in order to have that bill read, that we may understand what it is? If so, I call for the reading of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was then read by its title, as follows: A bill making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1855.

Mr. PHELPS. I suppose the question is, whether the committee will proceed to the consideration of that bill or not?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that that bill be laid aside.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. HOUSTON] if he desires to have that bill laid aside?

Mr. HOUSTON. I suppose the committee are willing to take one vote upon this matter of laying aside these bills, as a test of party strength on this Nebraska question.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that one vote be taken upon laying aside all bills upon the Calendar which stand before the Nebraska-Kansas bill.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. WHEELER. I call for the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has already been read by its title.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to have the bill read through by sections.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would say to the gentleman that when a bill is under consideration, it is in order to call for its reading in extenso, but when a motion is pending to lay it aside, it can only be read by its title.

Mr. HAVEN. I rise to a question of order. If I remember correctly, when the House was last in Committee of the Whole, the committee had under consideration the deficiency bill. A resolution was adopted in the House, closing debate upon that bill, and thereby making it the duty of the committee to proceed to vote upon the amendments then pending, or such as might be afterwards offered to it.

The question of order is, that that business is first in order, and that we must now proceed to execute the order of the House upon the deficiency bill. I ask to have the order of the House read.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Is the question of order debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. STEPHENS. I only wish to say, in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from New York that the order to which he has referred only applies to the deficiency bill when we have it under consideration. The pending motion, as I understand it, is to postpone that bill. If we take it up, of course the order will apply; but it is not now before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that he supposes that, under the practice of the House, the first motion would be to lay aside the deficiency bill, as that was the bill under consideration when the House was last in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I make that motion.

Mr. HAVEN. My question of order is, that the business last under consideration in the committee should first be taken up.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York raises the question of order, that inasmuch as debate had been closed by an order of the House upon the deficiency bill, that bill must be first considered, and cannot be laid aside.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to call the attention of the Chair and of the committee that No. 48 is the deficiency bill.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN. No. 48 upon the Calendar is the bill known as the civil and diplomatic bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I was mistaken. I intended to move to lay aside the deficiency bill.

Mr. HAVEN. Do I understand the Chair as sustaining my point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir. The Chair will give his decision. The Chair decides that the resolution of the House closing debate upon the deficiency bill applies to that bill when it is up for consideration in the committee. If that bill were under consideration, the point made by the gentleman from New York would hold good. It would then be the duty of the committee to proceed to vote upon the amendments, and report it to the House, as the resolution directs; but the question is upon taking up that bill. That is the decision of the Chair. Does the gentleman from New York take an appeal?

Mr. HAVEN. I wish to say—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HAVEN. I know debate is not in order, and I do not wish to say anything to which the friends of the Nebraska bill would object. I merely wish to say that I believe it is the wish of the committee to decide this question by a vote, and I therefore respectfully take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question then is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. CAMPBELL. Upon that question I demand tellers.

Mr. HAVEN. If it is in order, I would like to hear the resolution closing debate upon the deficiency bill read.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That all debate in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the bill of the House (No. 271) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending 30th of June, 1854, shall cease at two o'clock p. m., on Tuesday next, (if the committee shall not sooner come to a conclusion upon the same); and the committee shall then proceed to vote on such amendments as may be pending, or offered to the same, and shall then report it to the House, with such amendments as may have been agreed to by the committee.

Mr. HIBBARD. In connection with that resolution I ask for the reading of the 135th rule.

The 135th rule was read by the Clerk, and is as follows:

"135. In Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union the bills shall be taken up and disposed of in their order on the Calendar; but when objection is made to the consideration of a bill, a majority of the committee shall decide, without debate, whether it shall be taken up and disposed of, or laid aside: Provided, That general appropriation bills, and, in time of war, bills for raising men or money, and bills concerning a treaty of peace, shall be preferred to all other bills, at the discretion of the committee; and when demanded by any member, the question shall first be put in regard to them."

Mr. MACE. I have a motion to submit concerning priority of business.

Mr. HIBBARD. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. MACE. I know it is not debatable; but I wish to submit a motion concerning priority of business, which it is in order for me to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman's motion as soon as the appeal is taken.

Mr. MACE. But it is in connection with the appeal that I wish to make my motion. It is important that it should be made before the appeal is decided.

The CHAIRMAN. The question first in order is the decision of the question of order.

Mr. MACE. I submit that the deficiency bill has priority over all other business in its consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided that the deficiency bill is the first in order. The gentleman from Illinois, however, moves to lay it aside, and the Chair decides that the motion is in order. From this decision the gentleman from

New York has taken an appeal, which appeal the Chair again decides must be first decided.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. There is one question which, I think, must take precedence of all these questions. I submit that, according to the rule of the House, when the House goes into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the bills must be called upon the Calendar, commencing with the first bill on the list. There is no unfinished business in committee.

Mr. CLINGMAN. But it has been otherwise decided on former occasions.

[Cries of "Question!"]

Mr. DISNEY obtained the floor.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object, Mr. Chairman; I object to all discussion.

Mr. DISNEY. I wish merely to have the rule which I hold in my hand read at the Clerk's desk. Mr. CLINGMAN. I wish the Chair to understand that I object. It is a mode of discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule cannot be read, as the gentleman from North Carolina persists in his objection.

Tellers were ordered on the appeal; and Messrs. VAIL and CHURCHWELL were appointed.

The question was then taken on the question, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" and it was decided in the affirmative; the tellers having reported—ayes 100, noes 88.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The question recurred on the motion to lay aside the deficiency bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL and BOCK were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 103, noes 82.

So the deficiency bill was laid aside.

House bill No. 48 was then read by its title, as follows:

A bill making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th June, 1855.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to lay aside bill No. 48.

Mr. WHEELER demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. WHEELER and HAMILTON were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 103, noes 56.

So the bill was laid aside.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that the committee now rise, as I think we have done a pretty good day's work. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER demanded tellers upon that motion; which were ordered; and Messrs. SAPP and PHILLIPS were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 63, noes 96.

So the committee refused to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read the title of House bill No. 95, being a bill making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1855.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to lay the bill aside.

Mr. HUGHES. I rise to a question of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will state his question of order.

Mr. HUGHES. It is, that there having been no objection to the consideration of this bill, the motion to lay it aside is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the question of order.

Mr. HUGHES. By the rules of the House, a motion to lay aside a bill is not in order unless objection be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the motion to lay aside is in itself an objection.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I would inquire of the Chair, if the question upon the motion to lay aside the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill has been stated and taken?

The CHAIRMAN. That vote has been taken. Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I ask for tellers upon the pending motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CHANDLER and PACKER were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 97, noes 24.

So the bill was laid aside.

The next bill on the Calendar was then reported, as follows:

A bill making appropriations for the transportation of the United States mail by ocean steamers and otherwise during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1855.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to lay that bill aside.

Many Voices. Tellers.

Mr. CUTTING. I hope not. I hope that no more time of the House will be consumed in taking questions by tellers. There appears to be a decided and clear majority in favor of laying aside these bills.

Mr. EDGERTON. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. FARLEY. I call for tellers. Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. LANE, of Indiana, and SKELTON were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 101, noes 21.

So the bill was laid aside.

The next bill in order was House bill (No. 97) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending 30th June, 1855.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to lay aside that bill.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Upon that motion I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. GREEN and GOODRICH were appointed.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative; the tellers having reported—ayes 98, noes 21.

So the bill was laid aside.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the next bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

H. R. No. 8. A bill to repeal the first proviso of the fourth section of the act entitled "An act granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States," approved September 28, 1850.

Mr. HAVEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know but what I am undertaking to say that which I ought not to; but, in my opinion, the committee had better, by unanimous consent, for such evidently is the design of the majority, lay aside all of the bills on the Calendar, before the one in reference to the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas.

[Cries of "I object!" "Let us do it!" "Time will be saved!" &c.]

Mr. HAVEN. I am as much opposed to the Nebraska-Kansas bill as any gentleman on this floor; but it is evidently the design of the committee to lay aside all the bills on the Calendar before it, and we had better let it be done immediately and save time.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection has been made.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to lay aside the bill which has just been reported.

Mr. EDGERTON. I demand tellers on that motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PARKER, of Indiana, and SEWARD, were appointed.

The question was then put; and the tellers reported—ayes 101, noes 22.

So the bill was laid aside.

The bill next in order on the Calendar was House bill (No. 9) "for the relief of the purchasers and locators of swamp and overflowed lands."

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the bill be laid aside.

Mr. FARLEY on that motion I demand tellers. Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. RITCHIE, of Pennsylvania, and KERR, were appointed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I wish to inquire whether a vote has been taken on setting aside the French spoliation bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not. We are acting on the bills seriatim, and we have not yet come to the French spoliation bill.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 99, noes 19.

So the bill was laid aside.

House bill No. 116 was then read by its title, as follows:

A bill making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for repairs of barracks and quarters, for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to lay aside this bill.

Mr. EDGERTON demanded tellers; which were not ordered.

The question was then taken upon Mr. RICHARDSON's motion; and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the bill was laid aside.

House bill (No. 117) was then read by its title, as follows:

A bill to provide for the ascertainment and satisfaction of the claims of American citizens for spoiliations committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1801.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to lay aside this bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, demanded tellers. Mr. MATTESON. I move that the committee rise.

Tellers were demanded and ordered upon Mr. MATTESON's motion; and Messrs. PRATT and WALSH were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 45, noes 93.

So the committee refused to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] to lay aside the French spoliation bill.

Mr. MATTESON. And on that I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. SAPP and FLORENCE were appointed such tellers.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 99, noes 32.

So the bill was laid aside.

The next bill in order upon the Calendar was then reported, as follows:

H. R. No. 132. A bill to reduce and graduate the price of the public lands.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to lay aside that bill.

Mr. EDGERTON. I demand tellers upon the motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. DAWSON, and JONES, of New York, were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 102, noes 16.

So the bill was laid aside.

The next bill in order was House bill No. 172, to promote the efficiency of the Army by retiring disabled officers.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to lay aside that bill.

Mr. EDGERTON. Upon that motion I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. TAYLOR, of Ohio, and LILLY were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 94, noes 24.

So the bill was laid aside.

The title of the next bill on the Calendar for consideration was then read, as follows:

H. R. No. 34. A bill granting the right of way and a donation of land to the State of Alabama, in aid of the construction of the Coosa and Tennessee river railroad, in said State, leading from Gadsden to the Tennessee river, at or near Gunter's Landing.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that that bill be laid aside.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. I demand tellers. Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WASHBURN, of Illinois, and BRIDGES were appointed.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative, the tellers having reported—ayes 100, noes 18.

So the bill was laid aside.

The bill next in order on the Calendar was House bill (No. 186) further to amend the act entitled "An act to reduce and modify the rates of postage in the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1851.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that that bill be laid aside.

Mr. EDGERTON. I demand tellers on that motion.

Tellers were not ordered, only twenty-one members rising.

Joint resolution (No. 12) "to provide for the continuance of the work on the Washington aqueduct" was next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that that joint resolution be laid aside.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is it in order to move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, by adding, "and the next one," so as to lay two aside at once?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair supposes that the bills must be laid aside seriatim, under the rules of the House.

Mr. EDGERTON. I ask for tellers on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON.]

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ROBBINS, and STUART, of Ohio, were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 96, noes 27.

So the bill was laid aside.

Senate resolution No. 4 was then read by its title, as follows: "Resolution authorizing the President of the United States to confer the title of lieutenant general by brevet for eminent services."

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to lay aside this joint resolution.

Mr. SAGE demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. INGERSOLL and HOWE were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 99, noes 47.

So the bill was laid aside.

The Clerk reported the next bill on the Calendar, which was House bill No. 138, extending the provisions of the pension and bounty land laws now in force, so as to include surgeons who served in the Mexican war under contract with commandants of regiments.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to lay the bill aside.

Several MEMBERS. Tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. RIDDLE and WADE were appointed such tellers.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 97, noes 22.

So the bill was laid aside.

The next bill in order upon the Calendar was then reported, as follows:

H. R. No. 43. A bill in relation to invalid pensions.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to lay that bill aside.

Mr. EDGERTON. I demand tellers upon the motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HOUSTON and MIDDLESWORTH appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 94, noes 30.

So the bill was laid aside.

House bill No. 111 coming up next in order for consideration, was read by its title, as follows:

A bill to amend the third section of an act granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to lay aside the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Upon that motion I demand tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, only twenty members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and the bill was laid aside.

NEBRASKA-KANSAS BILL.

House bill No. 236 coming up next in order upon the Calendar for consideration, was read by its title, as follows:

A bill to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move to lay aside that bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to take up that bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Was there not a motion made to lay the bill aside? If there was not, I make that motion. Now that we have gone thus far, I want to get at the Simon pure of the Senate. I move to lay aside that bill; and upon the motion I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Ohio is in order.

Mr. ORR. It is equally in order to move to lay aside and to take up the bill. I submit that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois was first made, and that the question must be first taken upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has thus far entertained the motion to lay aside, and he will adhere to the same course in this case.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have not the slightest objection to the motion of the gentleman from Ohio. Its effect will be the same as mine.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BRACKINRIDGE, and SMITH of New York, were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 85, noes 105.

So the motion was disagreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is now before the committee for consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now propose the bill which I hold in my hand as a substitute for the one before the committee.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Is it in order to have the bill read?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order to have the bill read. If the gentleman calls for its reading, it will be read.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It is a very long bill, and will occupy much time in its reading. I would suggest that it be read by sections for amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am on the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the rule is such, that if it be called for, the bill must be read.

Mr. TAYLOR. I withdraw the call for the reading of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. With the permission of the committee, I would now briefly state the reasons inducing me to offer the amendment which I have submitted. I do not design to go further, at this time, than to explain as briefly as I can the character of the substitute which I propose. There are very many things, Mr. Chairman, to which I should like to reply. There are very many arguments that have been used by gentlemen who are opposed to this bill, the fallacy of which I could very readily expose. I do not propose, however, to do so now. The reason why I do not propose to do so, is that I do not desire to occupy the time of the committee. I desire that those friends of the measure who are anxious to be heard shall be heard, and when they are ready to vote upon this question—

Mr. COBB. Its enemies too.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Its enemies, too, though they have been heard pretty extensively already.

Mr. COBB. Oh, give every one a fair chance.

Mr. RICHARDSON. When they shall have had an opportunity to discuss the measure, I have no doubt it will be their desire, at a very early day, to bring this question to a vote.

The substitute which I propose, Mr. Chairman, is substantially the Senate bill with one material exception; it leaves the CLAYTON amendment out. The other amendments are utterly immaterial; they are merely verbal amendments. My substitute changes the bill in no material respect, except in that to which I have referred.

The committee will excuse me if I forbear at this time to enter into the varied field of discussion to which this bill has led in this House, and at the other end of the Capitol. I do not desire to discuss the bill. I desire that other members, who are more anxious to discuss it than I am, shall do so. I submit the substitute with this brief explanation; and I have now said all I desire to say.

Mr. HIBBARD. I ask the unanimous consent of the committee to dispense with the reading of the amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Oh, no; we want to hear it.

Mr. HIBBARD. My reason for asking to dispense with the reading of the amendment is, that I desire to address the committee in favor of the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it the pleasure of the committee to dispense with the reading?

[Cries of "No!" "No!" "No!"]

Mr. HIBBARD. I suppose that, if any one member asks for the reading of the substitute, it must be read.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If the gentleman from New Hampshire would suggest that, when the committee rise, the House can order the amendment to be printed, I suppose the reading of it would not be insisted on.

Mr. HIBBARD. I will do that, in lieu of moving to dispense with the reading of the substitute.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. When we get into the House, we can then order the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to be printed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it the pleasure of the committee to dispense with the reading of the bill?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I ask the Chair if we dispense with the reading of the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] whether we shall thereby waive the right of offering amendments to it?

The CHAIRMAN. Not at all; it will still be open for amendments.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I understand the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. HIBBARD] wishes to address the committee. If that is his desire, I am sure that no one of the enemies of the bill will throw any obstacle in his way. I hope he may be now allowed to proceed with his remarks.

Mr. HIBBARD rose and addressed the Committee in favor of the Nebraska and Kansas bill. A report of his speech will be found in the Appendix.

Mr. H. having concluded—

The floor was awarded to Mr. LYON, who addressed the Committee in opposition to the bill. His speech will be found in the Appendix.

Mr. INGERSOLL here obtained the floor.

A MEMBER. Will the gentleman from Connecticut yield for a motion that the committee rise. [Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"]

Mr. INGERSOLL. If the committee desire, I am ready to go on now.

Mr. MAXWELL. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. HUGHES. I call for tellers upon that motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PHILLIPS and NORTON appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, a further count not being demanded.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman (Mr. OLDS) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the bill of the House (No. 236) to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. McNAIR. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it was the understanding in committee, that when we came into the House we were to order this substitute to the Nebraska bill printed. It was with that understanding that its reading was dispensed with.

Mr. McNAIR. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The printing will be ordered, unless objection be made.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. JONES. It is in order to move to suspend the rules, is it not?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. JONES. I move that the rules be suspended for that purpose. I would also remark to the House that the Doorkeeper informs me that the original Senate bill which was ordered to be printed, one copy for each member, has been distributed to the members upon their order, so that there are no copies left. I would suggest that this bill be ordered to be again printed for the use of the House.

The question was taken upon the motion to suspend the rules; and, upon a division, there were—ayes 79, noes 1; no quorum voting.

Mr. DEAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CRAIGE. I move that when the House adjourns to-day, it be to meet to-morrow, at ten o'clock, a. m.

Mr. HOUSTON. Compromise, and move that when the House adjourns it be to meet to-morrow, at eleven o'clock, a. m.

Mr. WHEELER. There is no quorum present, and the motions submitted by gentlemen, other than the one to adjourn, are not in order.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from North Carolina, no quorum being present, cannot be put or carried.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would inquire of the Chair whether it would be in order for me to make a motion affecting the subject of the hour at which we are to meet, to be considered to-morrow? I do not want to do anything which may be disagreeable to the House; but there are many gentlemen who desire to speak on the Nebraska-Kansas bill. That all may have an opportunity, we might meet earlier in the morning, or have night sessions. I do not want the order to extend beyond this week, or while we are occupied in the disposition of this subject.

Mr. DEAN. I have moved that the House do now adjourn, and insist on the question being put to the House.

The question was taken; and the motion was carried.

Thereupon the House adjourned (at four and a half o'clock, p. m.) till to-morrow, at twelve, m.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 9, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Treasurer of the United States, transmitting copies of his account of receipts and disbursements for the Post Office Department for the year ending 30th June, 1853; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. BRIGHT presented two petitions of citizens of Madison, Indiana, praying the establishment of a port of entry at that place; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SUMNER presented resolutions passed at a meeting of the students of Wilbraham Academy, Massachusetts, remonstrating against the repeal of the Missouri compromise; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts, in favor of the establishment by the United States, of floating schools for the purpose of educating youth in the rudiments of navigation and seamanship; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Also, the memorial of George Washington Greene, of Rhode Island, in which he states that he is in possession of valuable documents belonging to his late ancestor, Major General Greene, and praying the aid of Congress in the publication of them; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, presented the petition of H. S. Sanford, late chargé d'affaires at Paris, praying to be allowed the difference between his pay as secretary of legation and chargé d'affaires, during the time he acted as such, and the reimbursement of the amount paid for clerk hire in said legation; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. FISH presented the memorial of Townsend Glover, Darius Claggett, and others, praying Congress to make an appropriation to purchase Glover's collection of artificial fruits, now on exhibition at the United States Patent Office; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. WADE presented the memorial of Robert C. Schenck, of Ohio, praying an appropriation for the compensation of his services as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary on special missions to the Argentine Confederation and to the Oriental Republic of Uruguay, in the years 1852-'53; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PRATT presented a petition of citizens of the United States, professing the Jewish religion, praying that measures may be taken to secure to citizens of the United States of every religious creed, while residing or traveling abroad, the rights of religious worship; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Also, resolutions of the Mayor and City Council of Baltimore, in favor of an appropriation for the construction of Fort Carroll, near Baltimore; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CHASE presented a memorial signed by eight hundred and fifty-five citizens of New York, praying the rejection of the bill for the organization of the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Also, twenty-three memorials from citizens of Ohio, and other States in the Union, against the repeal of the Missouri compromise; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CASS presented the memorial of the delegates and representatives of that portion of the Stockbridge tribe of Indians known as the "Indian party," residing in Wisconsin, praying that they may be permitted to remain in their present homes, and that Congress will make an appropriation to defray the expenses of their delegation while visiting the seat of Government on business of the tribe; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, a petition of the Lutheran Synod of Missouri, Ohio, and other States, praying that a quarter section of land may be granted to the head of every family of the Chippewa Indians, residing in Michigan, and an appropriation for the support of schools among those Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, two petitions of citizens of Harrisburg and Aaronsburg, Pennsylvania, praying that measures may be taken to secure to American citizens residing or traveling abroad, the rights of conscience and religious worship; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HUNTER presented additional documents in relation to the petition of Caty White, widow of Doctor William White; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills:

A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Captain William Davis, late commander of the United States transport schooner Eufala;

Bill for the relief of Fayette Mauzy and Robert G. Ward; and Bill for the relief of the heirs of Anthony G. Willis, deceased.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore signed the above named bills.

RECOMMITTAL OF PETITION, ETC.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, it was Ordered, That the adverse report of the Committee on Pensions, on the petition of Caty White, be recommitted, together with her petition, to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORT FROM A STANDING COMMITTEE.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of John T. Hildreth, praying that the widow of John Hildreth, a soldier in the last war with Great Britain, may be allowed a pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. BRIGHT gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for the relief of the inhabitants of the reserved township in Gibson county, in the State of Indiana,'" approved August 11, 1842.

EUROPEAN PENAL CODES.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State furnish the Senate with a communication from H. S. Sanford, late chargé d'affaires at Paris, on the different systems of penal codes in Europe; and also a report on the administration changes in France since the revolution of 1848.

REPORT OF LIEUTENANT S. P. LEE.

Mr. JOHNSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom the subject was referred, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That two thousand extra copies of the report of the cruise of the "Dolphin," under command of Lieutenant S. P. Lee, be printed, and that the Navy Department be furnished with one thousand of the same.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I rise, Mr. President, for the purpose of saying a single word in explanation. I stated yesterday that the Rev. Mr. Richardson, from whose sermon I then quoted, was a Connecticut man, as I believed. I have received a note to-day, from a member of his congregation, who happens to be in the city, stating that he is a Kentuckian, and not from Connecticut. He says Dr.

Richardson came from Kentucky to him with a letter of introduction from an eminent Kentuckian, that he was present and heard that sermon delivered, and left the church because of its delivery on the Sabbath day. I make this correction by the authority of one of Mr. Richardson's congregation.

Mr. TOUCEY. I am very glad the Senator has made the correction.

DAVID MYERLE.

Mr. GWIN. I move that the Senate take up for consideration the bill for the relief of David Myerle. It was objected to on Friday last by a single Senator, and was passed over.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

This case has been eight years before Congress, and has several times passed the House of Representatives, and been favorably reported on in the Senate. It appears that, previous to the year 1840, the memorialist had been long and extensively engaged in the manufacture of cordage; and was possessed of much useful knowledge on the subject of the growth, preparation, and manufacture of hemp. It had long been considered an object of the highest national importance, and as vitally essential to our true independence of other nations for one of the most important elements of national defense, to introduce and establish the practicability and safety of the process of water-rotting hemp in the hemp-growing regions of the United States, for the supply of its Navy and commercial marine.

It is claimed that Mr. Paulding, then Secretary of the Navy, urged the memorialist to abandon the business in which he was engaged, and to enter upon the experiment of water-rotting hemp. The patronage of the Government was tendered to him, with the most liberal promises of encouragement and indemnity against loss, and if successful, of the most generous reward from the Government. He embarked in the business, and hence his claim against the Government.

The PRESIDENT. There is an amendment pending to this bill, and the question is on that amendment, to strike out "$30,000," and insert "$10,000."

Mr. GWIN. Who was it moved by?

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. EVANS,] who is now absent.

Mr. CHASE. I do not see the Senator from South Carolina in his place. Probably he wishes to address the Senate on the subject, or, at all events, desires to be present when the bill is taken up and acted upon. It seems to me the usual courtesy requires it to be postponed until he shall be present. A majority can take it up at any time.

Mr. GWIN. I am not aware that the Senator desired to discuss the bill. It has been before Congress for a long time. I hope the bill will be disposed of now, one way or the other. I have not a word to say about it. I think the reading of the report will show clearly the equity of the claim.

Mr. DAWSON. The Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. EVANS,] on Friday, consented that the bill might be taken up, if he could be heard on his amendment.

Mr. BADGER. Oh, no.

Mr. TOOMBS. Yes, sir; I so understood him.

Mr. BADGER. He said he would agree to take up the bill on condition that the Senate should adopt his amendment.

Mr. DAWSON. That amendment was to reduce the amount from $30,000 to $10,000. That Senator is not now in his seat; of course he did not expect that the question would come up this morning. I hope my friend from California will consent to wait until, at least, he can be heard upon that amendment.

Mr. GWIN. This question has been before Congress for many years. The bill has been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and is well understood, I presume, by the members of this body. I think we can take the vote on the proposition. There are others opposed to the claim besides the Senator from South Carolina; and we can take the vote in his absence. If the Senate agree to the amendment, and pass the bill in that form, I shall not object. I am against the amendment, but I wish to have it acted upon.

Mr. DAWSON. It is a mere matter of courtesy on which I appeal to my friend from California.

I may be with him upon the bill; but if he were out of his seat, and it were proposed to take up a bill on which he wished to be heard, I should make the same point that I now do as a matter of courtesy.

Mr. GWIN. I did not understand the Senator from South Carolina as exactly proposing his amendment; certainly not as wishing to be heard upon it. He agreed that, if $30,000 should be stricken out, and $10,000 inserted, the bill might pass without opposition from him. On that day, any one Senator could have a private bill postponed.

Mr. BADGER. I hope this bill will not be postponed. The Senate has been conversant with this measure for a number of years. It has, at different times, passed both Houses of Congress. It is perfectly understood. I understand the question raised by the honorable Senator from South Carolina was merely as to the amount to be paid. Upon that question the Senate is perfectly competent to decide at the present time. At any rate, I see that the honorable gentleman is now in his seat.

Mr. BAYARD. I have no recollection of the particular facts connected with this claim. I believe, however, that it is a gratuity throughout. But I do recollect that at the last session of 1852, the claim was opposed by the honorable Senator then representing the State of Kentucky, [Mr. Underwood,] in an argument, which made the impression on my mind at the time, that the bill ought not to pass. I know further that a very distinguished Representative from Kentucky, in which State I believe the claimant lives, stated to me that the claim was utterly baseless. Under these circumstances I should like to have the report read. I will state further that I can conceive of no possible ground on which, in giving a gratuity to a party—for this is certainly a gratuity—you are to allow him interest upon it, which this bill contemplates. If the bill is now to be put to the vote of the Senate, I ask that the report may be read.

The report of the Committee on Naval Affairs was accordingly read.

Mr. BAYARD. I move to postpone the consideration of this bill until Friday next, or I am willing to say to-morrow, or any day which will suit the convenience of the Senate. I wish to have an opportunity to look at the remarks of the honorable Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. Underwood,] in opposition to this bill. I have now a very indistinct impression of them; but I know that at the time they were made, they satisfied me that the claim was not a just one. I can see on the face of the report—without reference to the magniloquent language employed in some portions of it, evidently delusive in its character—enough to satisfy me that this bill is dangerous as a precedent. If, however, I can find nothing in the remarks made by the late Senator from Kentucky to justify opposition to the bill, I shall probably make none.

As it now stands, the bill seems to me to be based upon a false principle. In reference to your tariff policy you have decided that you will not grant even indirect protection by levying duties with a view to protection; yet here we are asked to give a specific bounty to an individual for entering into a particular business, and that, too, when he did not comply with the very terms of the contract which he entered into. He did not fulfill the requisites specified in that contract, and yet you are literally asked to give him a specific bounty for having introduced a certain business into this country. That business, of water-rotting hemp, is no more important, I suppose, than the manufacture of iron; yet, within the last few weeks, I have seen a proposition made to take off entirely, all duties on railroad iron, although there are millions of dollars invested in its manufacture, under the faith of your laws, and that interest, certainly, is quite as extensive as any benefits which could be conferred by the action of this individual.

You are to grant bounties, in one case, to an individual for a particular species of manufacture, and in another case you are to depart from your revenue system, to destroy the entire protection afforded to a great interest in the country, quite as important in itself. This seems to me to be hardly a consistency in legislation; I mean a consistency with any known principle. I would rather, however, take time to look into the objections made to this bill in 1852 by the honorable Senator from Kentucky.

I may state further that a distinguished Representative of Kentucky, in the other House, told me that the bill was baseless, as regards any right on the part of the claimant, that he was a man without property at the time he entered into this business, and that there was no business, no capital abandoned by him in order to enter into it. Supposing him to have had industry and skill, if he failed to comply with his contract, of course he was not entitled to call upon the government to remunerate him. Then as regards the contract made by the Secretary of the Navy with this individual, I look upon it as directly in the face of your laws, and contrary to all principle. He entered into a contract with an individual, not with a view to obtain the articles which that contract specified should be obtained, but under some exaggerated notion on his part, that he would assume the province of legislation, and undertake to encourage the growth of a particular article, by entering into a contract for that purpose, outside the terms of the general law. I think that this principle is too monstrous to be countenanced by congressional legislation at all. Still that is the substance of the contract made by Mr. Paulding, according to the report.

He was authorized, as Secretary of the Navy, to enter into contracts for the supply of the Navy with cordage. He did not enter into contracts with a view to obtain the supply necessary for the Navy, but he made a contract with this individual with the view, under his notions, of introducing into the country a particular species of manufacture. Do you mean to confide to your Executive Departments any such authority as that? Even suppose his judgment to be right, if you set the precedent in this case, you will have other Secretaries following the same example, and you will have brought upon you, in one case after another, this difficulty.

Every experimentalist who chooses to go to a Secretary of War or of the Navy, and obtain his favorable ear, and enter into contracts, not for articles wanted for the purpose of the public service, but with the view of introducing some beneficial business into the country, by giving extraordinary compensation, will be allowed to do so. This seems to me to be a sufficient objection to the bill in itself. I would rather, however, as I have said, look into the subject. I move, therefore, that its further consideration be postponed until Friday next, or to any other day that the Senate may choose.

Mr. EVANS. On Friday last, when this bill was taken up, I objected to its consideration. I was satisfied that the claim ought not to be paid. I should probably have known nothing of it, but that the memorialist sent me an argument on the subject. I read it, and read the evidence, so far as it was furnished to me, and the result was that the evidence did not satisfy me of the truth of the propositions on which the claim rests.

The claim rests first, upon the allegation that by way of patronizing this process of rotting American hemp, Mr. Paulding, the then Secretary of the Navy, had entered into certain agreements with the claimant. Now, I have no doubt that Mr. Paulding went so far as to enter into an agreement with him and patronize his hemp, so far as to buy hemp of him, and make a contract for two hundred tons directly, and a prospective contract for five hundred more. So far I have no doubt the contract went; but that Mr. Paulding intended to commit this Government to do what he had no right to do—to give premiums to encourage the process—I do not believe. I see no evidence of it.

The next proposition is, that when the hemp was sent to Boston, it was improperly rejected. I have seen nothing to show the truth of that; and I will not assume that the officers of the Government improperly rejected the man's hemp, when it ought to have been received. After Mr. Paulding went out of office, how did it happen with his successor? Application should have been made to the successor to have the thing corrected. Why was it delayed? If the man had a legitimate claim, he should have applied to the proper officer of the Government, when his claim was rejected—he should have applied to the Secretary of the Navy immediately to have the affair understood. I am not prepared to say that the claimant ought not to have something, but I think we are giving rather too high a premium for what I consider a doubtful claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WELLER in the chair.) The question is on postponing the further consideration of the bill until Friday next.

Mr. BADGER. I hope that the bill will not be postponed. It has been before the Senate ever since I have been a member of the body, and it has passed, at different times, both Houses of Congress. I once had occasion to examine it, and I examined it thoroughly, and I am satisfied that it is a just and honest demand upon this Government, and that we cannot refuse to pay it without doing injustice to this man, who has been ruined in the manner set forth in the report of the committee.

When the subject was under consideration a few years ago, a brief explanation of it was made by my friend, Mr. Berrien, then a Senator from Georgia, which was so clear in statement and so conclusive in argument, that I am persuaded, if it had been reported and preserved as it ought to have been, it would have removed every shadow of doubt from the mind of every Senator.

Mr. BAYARD. Is it not reported?

Mr. BADGER. I have looked for it, and cannot find it. I have looked through the Register of Debates, but without success. Now, sir, justice delayed is as injurious and unjustifiable as justice denied. Let us ascertain, now, what is the judgment of the Senate upon the measure. My opinion is, that we shall never be better prepared to do it than we are at this time. I hope whatever be the fate of the bill, that it will not be postponed.

Mr. BAYARD. If it were right or proper to depend upon the statement or opinion of any single member of the body as to the propriety of passing a claim, of course, on the argument addressed by the honorable Senator from North Carolina to the Senate, we ought to pay this claim. He has examined it, and is perfectly satisfied that it ought to pass; but unfortunately Senators may differ on the case; and it seems to me that every man ought to decide from his own judgment upon the propriety of allowing such a claim, instead of taking altogether the opinion of any other Senator, when they have the means of investigation.

I do not desire to delay action upon the claim. Unfortunately, through some accident, which certainly seems singular, the remarks of the Senator from Georgia, which were so clear as to lead to the regret expressed by the Senator from North Carolina that we have them not before us, seem to have been lost; but I am very sure that no member of the body could make a statement which would make clear a claim better than that honorable Senator could do himself; and I would rather have the statement of the facts than take a mere opinion, because, I confess, that on the face of that report, it does seem to me that the claim is one which violates every principle in its allowance. I desire to look into the grounds of it.

I admit that the grounds of the claim, as stated in the report, cover up a great deal. I admit that there is a great deal of delusive language which is calculated to appeal to the sympathy and feelings. All that I concede, but as regards the number of reports which have been made in favor of the claim, I confess that, with my experience here, they have no weight with me. I have yet to see a favorable report made, where subsequent favorable reports do not follow it, as sheep follow each other in a flock. When any favorable report is made, another committee will not take the trouble to investigate it, but will take the former report of the committee, follow it, and adopt it as their report. Therefore, one report is of as much weight with me as half a dozen. That is the opinion at which I have arrived, after some very searching scrutiny and examination in reference to matters of this kind.

What I desire to do is this. The very intelligent Senator who represented the State of Kentucky in the Senate, opposed the bill strongly, when it was up in 1852. I desire to look at his remarks. They are reported, I have no doubt. I desire to see his objections to the bill, because I have heard objections to it, and—here is opinion against opinion—I have had a statement made to me by an honorable and distinguished member of the other House, that this claim is baseless, because the claimant was a man of no capital, and that if anything is due to any one, there are other parties to whom it should be paid, and it should not be paid to this party who was not injured at all.

I want to look into the facts and the objections which are made to the claim. I do not desire to defeat it by a postponement, nor do I think there is any unreasonable delay in the matter. It is a private claim, and as such is entitled to come up on private bill day, like any other private claim to be disposed of. It has not been the desire, that I know of, of any one opposed to it, to delay its consideration. On the contrary, I recollect that on one or two days when it would have been brought up, it was passed over in consequence of the honorable Senator who reported it [Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey] being absent. Therefore its friends have created the delay, and not those opposed to it. It may be that, on further investigation, I may abandon my objections; but I do desire further time; and I will promise to look into it between this and Friday next. Therefore, I move to postpone it.

The motion to postpone was not agreed to.

Mr. DIXON. I should like to know from the honorable Senator from South Carolina whether there is any proof which establishes the fact that the hemp was water-rotted under the direction of this man, in consequence of a contract made by the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. EVANS. If I read the evidence aright, it does not establish that fact.

Mr. DIXON. The committee stated that that was the evidence; and if that is the fact, Mr. President, I do not see why the amendment of the honorable Senator from South Carolina should prevail. On the contrary, it appears to me, if he had a contract, and if the contract was violated; if the Government is bound by the contract made by its agent, for the water-rotting process, such as is described to you; if, under this contract, he expended large sums of money; if, as is alleged, his health was injured in the matter; and if, after all this, the hemp was improperly rejected by the Government agent, surely it is a case that appeals strongly to the sense of justice of the Government; and, for one, I am not disposed to vote against it.

Then, if the contract were entered into, and if it were such as he represents it was, why shall we reduce the amount from $30,000 to $10,000? If he sustained losses to the amount of $30,000, and if the claim is just, it is just for the whole amount. I understand that the losses which he sustained were even greater than $30,000.

Mr. EVANS. That does not appear.

Mr. DIXON. I have not examined the testimony; but I understand, from the reading of the report, that the opinion of the committee was, that his losses were even greater than $30,000. If they were greater, it is right to give him all or nothing. If he has any claim, it is to the amount of his losses; and especially if those losses resulted from the fact that the Government agent acted improperly and unjustly in rejecting his hemp. That is the point. I know nothing of the grounds upon which my honored predecessor opposed the claim. I understand that there was some contest between a citizen of Kentucky and this claimant, the citizen of Kentucky insisting that some portion of the claim was due to him for moneys which he had advanced to the memorialist. All that may be true. I know nothing about it. I have no knowledge of the fact.

The only question which presents itself to my mind is this: Was this contract entered into? Had the claimant a right to believe that the Government would pay him for the losses which he sustained, or for the hemp which he might have furnished to the Government, in pursuance of the contract entered into? Did he, in pursuance of that contract, furnish the hemp? Was the hemp such as he agreed to furnish, and was it improperly rejected? If these facts are established, I see no reason why we should not pass the bill allowing the compensation.

Mr. BAYARD. If the case were such as seems to be supposed by the honorable Senator from Kentucky, I should not oppose it; but, on the contrary, that is not the ground upon which it is placed by the committee. It is not placed on the ground that the Government violated a contract. It is true, they throw into the report the idea that the administrative officers, under the contract, improperly rejected the hemp.

But the testimony further shows, on the report of the committee, that the Government did advance a large portion, or some portion—if I recollect aright, one half the amount—but I believe no estimate is given by the committee; they give us no data upon which to form our judgment. We are not shown how much per ton was to have been given for the hemp. We are not told how much was lost on the contract, nor is the claim put upon the ground that the Government were bound to pay on the contract; but it is put upon the ground of a bounty to the party, arising from the fact that the Secretary of the Navy, contrary to his powers, undertook to enter into a contract to give a bounty, for the purpose of introducing a specific business into the country. It is on that score that my greatest objection to the bill rests; it is sanctioning and legalizing an improper exercise of power on the part of an officer of the Government, which may be followed in other cases, if it is sanctioned in this.

I should have wished further time to look into the case. The Senate think proper, however, to pass upon it without further investigation; they think it is not proper to allow any examination in a case of this kind, which is so abundantly clear. They are so perfectly familiar with all the facts, that they are satisfied that the claim ought to pass.

I shall vote for the amendment of the honorable Senator from South Carolina, because there are no data given to me to show that any amount whatever ought to be paid; and, therefore, I shall vote to reduce it to the lowest sum. I shall afterwards move, if that is lost, to strike out the allowance of interest; for there is no possible ground on which any such allowance can be granted in this case, upon any known or given principle recognized even in this body.

If this fail, I shall still vote against the bill, because I cannot perceive that there is any legitimate claim for it on the Government whatever, even taking the tone and language of the report, though I admit there is a mystery about the language. It wants specific character; it does not put the claim upon a fair basis, though it throws in ideas connected with the contract, without venturing to allege that there is any ground for the claim, because of the violation of the contract on the part of the Government.

Mr. HUNTER. If the Senate is ready to take a vote on the bill I shall not make the motion; but if it is not ready, I must move to postpone the prior orders, for the purpose of taking up the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. EVANS. I moved the amendment because I understood that at a former session of the Senate, when Mr. King was here, the amount was reduced to $10,000. Whether that was so or not I shall not positively state.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is the case.

Mr. EVANS. I understand that was the fact; the amount was reduced to $10,000.

Mr. PETTIT. This is an old settler with me. This case was in the other House when I was there; and I examined it very thoroughly; and I then satisfied my mind that beyond question it was a good claim. I have seen no reason for changing that opinion. I shall therefore vote for the bill.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAYARD. I move to amend the bill by striking from it the words "with interest thereon from the first day of January, 1850." I see no ground for the allowance of interest. On the amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PETTIT. That is the time, I understand, when the claim was established. What fixes the time at that date?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator who reported the bill [Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey] is not present.

Mr. BAYARD. There is nothing whatever in the report which shows any reason for allowing interest upon the claim. The debt, whatever it is, is unquestionably in the nature of a gratuity on the part of Congress, in my view; but there certainly is not a word in the report which shows any reason for allowing interest upon the claim from that time, or from any other time. The business was commenced in 1841, and the contract was fulfilled on the part of the contractor as early as the 1st of December, 1842; so that if there was any right to interest, I think it ought to be based upon that ground, and it should commence in December, 1842; but I cannot see any ground for its allowance.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 24, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Bayard, Benjamin, Bright, Cass, Clay, Dawson, Dixon, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Hunter, Jones of Tennessee, Norris, Pearce, Rusk, Sebastian, Shields, Shidell, Stuart, Toombs, and Toucey—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Badger, Bell, Brown, Douglas, Fish, Foot, Pettit, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, and Weller—10.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

On the question of ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading,

Mr. BAYARD called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 21, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Brown, Chase, Dixon, Dodge of Wisconsin, Douglas, Fish, Foot, Gwin, James, Jones of Tennessee, Pettit, Rusk, Sebastian, Sumner, Wade, Walker, and Weller—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Bayard, Cass, Clay, Dawson, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Hunter, Pearce, Pratt, Shields, Shidell, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, Toucey, and Williams—18.

The bill was read a third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

On the motion of Mr. HUNTER, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the House bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1855; the pending question being on the amendment reported by Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to insert the following:

To the Creek nation of Indians, in full for all demands against the United States, the sum of $500,000, in payment for eight million acres of land at six and a quarter cents per acre, taken from the friendly Creeks without compensation, by the treaty or capitulation of Fort Jackson, of August 8, 1814.

Mr. BELL. I understand there will be opposition to this amendment, or I should not propose to say anything upon it. I believe the Senator from Virginia wishes to oppose it.

Mr. HUNTER. I certainly shall oppose it.

Mr. BELL. It has been some two or three years since I examined this question in detail, and I venture to make some few remarks upon the subject more from my recollection of what the case was at that time, than from any very careful examination of it since. I have just run over, cursorily and carelessly, the grounds which have been presented within a few days past. When I first examined it, I was struck with the consideration, which I have no doubt the Senate will perceive presents the strongest reason—if any substantial reason can exist—against the allowance of the claim. That arose from the very great lapse of time which has transpired since 1814, when this wrong was done to the Indians by the Government; and secondly, from a review of several treaties which had been made between that time and this, between the Creek nation and the Government of the United States. I could not account satisfactorily, at first, for the reasons why the Creeks had not pressed the claim at each of the treaties made with them subsequent to the capitulation; for the transaction of 1814 was not so much a treaty as a capitulation demanded by the commanding general at the close of the Creek war. There was a treaty in 1818 or 1819, between this Government and the Creeks, which I find was for a small tract of country situated in the State of Georgia; and had no other provision of any great importance. Then came the treaty of 1821, and the treaty of 1825. Subsequently, another treaty was made, I do not recollect for what, perhaps in 1828. And finally, there was the treaty of 1832, by which the Creeks agreed to surrender their whole territory, upon the terms prescribed in that treaty, and remove west of the Mississippi.

I should not have time, sir, the Senate would not have patience to hear me, if I were to attempt to recite the whole history of this transaction, of the circumstances and condition of the people, and of the questions which arose between the Government and the Creek nation of Indians, and between the Creek nation and Georgia. It would take some two or three hours to do it, I can only refer to them as explanatory of the grounds upon which I have finally come to the conclusion, that this Government would do justice to those Indians if it would redress the great wrong which was done to them in 1814. If it is not considered too late to do justice, and to redress the wrong, the claim is well founded still, notwithstanding the lateness of the period at which it is brought forward.

In 1814, it will appear by the proofs which perhaps all the Senators have before them, General Jackson called together the chiefs of the Creek nation—both friendly Indians and hostiles. That was at the close of the bloody war which had taken place between this Government and what were called the Red Sticks, or war party of the Creek nation.

At that capitulation some twenty-five of the friendly chiefs attended, and but one of the hostile chiefs. A large portion of the latter had fled to the country south, and taken refuge in Georgia; and whatever portion of them remained did not show themselves at that capitulation, which was held at Fort Jackson. General Jackson had informed both the friendly and the hostile chiefs, so far as he could have any communication made to them, through their agents, in summoning them, that he proposed, as the terms upon which he would enter into that capitulation, full indemnity for the expenses of the war incurred by the United States against the hostiles, to be taken by a cession of their country; and he added the further assurance to the friendly Creeks, that their claims should be respected, and that they should be furthermore rewarded. The terms were not very definite as to what he meant by their claims being respected; but the terms were explicit, from the information, in regard to the indemnity which the Government would exact, to wit: the whole expenses of the war; and that that was to be taken from the territory occupied by the hostile chiefs of the nation.

When the friendly chiefs objected to the lines or boundaries which General Jackson proposed—twenty-five of the friendly chiefs, remember, to one hostile—General Jackson would not have a discussion, but directed that they should sign the capitulation. Those were the terms which he was disposed to grant them, and no other would be acceded to. The friendly chiefs, before they signed it, asked that they might be permitted to put in a protest, which they did put into the hands of the agent, and it found its way to Washington.

In addition to the whole country, except a very small slip between two rivers, of the territory occupied by the hostile Creeks, which was ceded to the United States as indemnity for the expenses of the war, some eight or nine millions of acres on the southern boundary of the lower band of the Creek tribe bordering upon Florida, and exclusively, I believe, in the State of Georgia, were taken. The justification to the friendly Creeks, and to the Government, when he came to give his explanation—for he seems to have acted under the general instructions of taking indemnity for the war—made by General Jackson, was that it was necessary to cut off forever thereafter the communication of the Indians with the Spanish territory of Florida, by ceding the lands to the United States, and causing settlements to be formed between the Creek country and the Florida country, then in possession of the Spanish Government; it being alleged, and no doubt being the fact, that the war arose, as wars had in former times been instigated, and were likely to be so in the future, by the Spanish agents and officials in the territory of Florida; so that, in addition to nearly the whole country occupied by the hostiles when the war was entered into, he took these eight or nine millions of acres occupied by the lower or friendly Creeks, on one foot of which there had never been any hostile operations either on the part of the Creeks against the Government of the United States, or of the Government against them. This is the hardship of which the friendly Creeks complained then and protested against, and have continued occasionally, from time to time until this day, to put up their complaints.

I do not remember the number of friendly Creek warriors who were under the command of General Jackson in the last battles of and throughout that Creek war. Between one and two thousand were constantly by the side of the whites in their wars against the Red Sticks, or the hostiles of the same people. The war, I believe, commenced at first by the hostiles committing depredations upon their own brethren who were disposed to be friendly to the United States; and before the United States could send troops enough for their protection in their own country, great depredations had been committed on the friendly Creeks. The honorable Senator from Georgia [Mr. Dawson] can, perhaps, enlighten us on that subject, for in all that transaction he was pars magna. But I believe I am stating the facts of history when I say that the war first broke out between the hostile and friendly Creeks. The simple ground of hostility was that the friendly Creeks refused to go to war with the United States, at the instigation of Tecumseh, or his brother Prophet, or whatever influences were brought to bear. Throughout the war the friendly Creek warriors fought gallantly by the side of the United States volunteers who went into the war.

Now, sir, I say that the injury of which they justly have a right to complain was, that when that capitulation was entered into in addition to taking the whole of the country occupied by the hostile party of the Creeks, amounting to fourteen millions of acres of land, lying within the then Territory, but now State of Alabama, the United States took eight or nine millions of acres from their own allies and friends in the war. In the outset, I challenge a denial of the fact; and if it cannot be denied, was it not a most singular, unparalleled, unjust, and arbitrary result of such a war? The friendly Creek warriors were paid as soldiers of the United States, and they got pensions. I remember now one fact in the history of this transaction, viz: That sixteen hundred Creek warriors have received compensation in some shape for their services during that war, which shows that there were more than a thousand in it on the side of the United States. I have said before that there were between one and two thousand. The names of sixteen hundred can be found on the records of the Department as having received some acknowledgment for their services. But the only acknowledgment that was conceded at the time of the capitulation was, that they should be indemnified for their losses of property—for the depredations which had been committed at the commencement of the war, and throughout the different periods, upon their property. That has been paid fully, I believe, of late—but not entirely until of late.

Well, the protest came on to Washington. It was sent on after the capitulation of 1814; and the question at first with me was, why did we not, at an earlier period, hear of this claim? Why was it not pressed regularly by the agents of the Creeks? Why did they not clamor against the Government for indemnity? The occurrence took place in 1814. Then the question is, why was not this claim brought forward in 1814, or at the treaty of Indian Spring, or the treaty of the Broken Arrow, or of Washington city, which have since been held with them? Sir, that history is a little more difficult to comprehend, or to narrate so as influence the minds of honorable Senators. But, sir, you will see how it was; these Creeks were not only alien and unfriendly to one another at the commencement of the war, but throughout. They were hostile and warlike, and engaged in war with each other. Sir, it is not at the close of a war that feelings engendered under such circumstances can subside. Wherever they came together in council afterwards—wherever in their consultations among themselves, it became a question whether they should put forward this claim, or in what shape it should be put forward—there were the hostiles saying to the friendly chiefs, “we have lost our whole country; we are more or less dependent upon you; we are within a restricted and contracted district; and if you, the friendly Creeks, choose to put up a claim against the Government of the United States for your eight or nine millions of acres, remember that we have been stripped of the whole of our territory, and we shall demand our proportionate part, for we are one people.”

The friendly Creeks would have replied, “You are not of us;” and I understand that is the true history of their tribe. That powerful nation, at the commencement of that war, numbered from twenty-five thousand to thirty thousand souls; I have heard it stated at a greater number. I wish the honorable Senator from Georgia would correct me if I am in error. I have long understood that these Muscogee Indians, who have since taken the generic appellation of Creeks, were the original owners of the whole of this country—that which was occupied by themselves, and that which was occupied by the Red Sticks, or hostile party, when this war took place. Their nation grew powerful by conquests and alliances, and by taking into their confederacy tribe after tribe and band after band of other Indians, as they became reduced in numbers, and proposed to come and live within the Muscogee territory, and be subject to their general councils and laws; and every family of these hostiles, every town of them, was composed of these original dependents or allies who had been taken into the Creek confederacy, and they had been assigned the country which now lies within the limits of Alabama; so that probably in their own private councils—for we know they held them, and very often with more secrecy than our public administrations hold their councils, or than we ourselves occasionally do—the difficulty was to adjust between themselves the relative proportion between their claims which should be set up against the Government. If the hostiles attempted to set up a claim, they knew it would be vain and abortive; and the friendly Creeks were not willing that any indemnity which they might demand of the Government of the United States should inure to the hostiles, because they brought on the war; and if there was any justice in conceding indemnity, by the Government exacting it from those who caused the war, the hostiles were the persons who should have borne the peril of that transaction. The friendly Creeks were not willing to obstruct their other policy in their relations with the Government, and to impede their demands for other claims which they had upon the Government, by putting in a claim of redress for that injustice which had been done themselves, because they saw it would render the whole council to be held perhaps abortive.

Since the treaty of 1832 they have found refuge together in a country at the West. Previous to that time we know these old feelings and rivalries had proceeded to a great extent. McIntosh, with all his party, who made one of these treaties, was assassinated by the leaders of the old Red Sticks in the war. Opothleyoholo at that time, I believe, commanded the hostiles, and McIntosh the party friendly towards the United States. This fact is proof of the difficulty they had in settling among themselves the proportion of claims which they had against the Government of the United States. Well, sir, in 1832 this question was presented in some shape or other. According to my recollection, it was in General Jackson's instructions, of which the honorable Senator from Michigan [Mr. Cass] perhaps may have some knowledge. But even then there was not harmony between the two parties, although one of the former treaties had been made expressly for the purpose of reconciling these difficulties. In 1832 they were told by the United States, “You must move west before we can talk or make any stipulation about your claims of any description; you are now surrounded almost by the white settlements; you are now in a condition where you must remove; but when you go west we will hear your demands and your claims.” Thus the treaty of 1832 was made without any adjustment of this claim.

But since they have gone to the west, being more harmonious in their councils, these ancient rivalries and hostile feelings having subsided in a great degree, if not entirely passed away; they now come forward and make a joint application to the Government for indemnity for the wrongs committed in 1814. The application is in the name of friendly Creeks, but the benefit is to enure to the whole nation. This shows pretty clearly that it was not in their power to propose any terms in their former councils, or treaties with the United States; for it appears that the hostiles and themselves have never before been perfectly agreed. Lately, however, it has been agreed that whatever indemnity the United States shall grant in consideration of the injustice done to the friendly Creeks, shall inure to the equal benefit of the whole tribe west; so that it is better policy on the part of the United States that this indemnity shall be granted to be distributed amongst them all; and to that extent it will tend to compose and consolidate the harmony which now prevails between the old hostiles and the friendly Creeks.

Now, sir, let me recur to the original injustice.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 10, 1854.

NEW SERIES....No. 72.

I think it makes a strong appeal to our sense of right and justice, and to our sympathies, too. In the last eight or ten years we have scarcely made a single Indian treaty where we have not given ten cents an acre for the ceded lands; and I observe by one, or two, or, perhaps, three reports made at different times by the Bureau on Indian Affairs, that the cost of the purchases made within the last six or seven years, has amounted to twenty-five cents for every acre ceded to the United States upon the average. Some cessions have cost much less; but others occasionally a great deal more. You know, sir, that in our treaties with some of the tribes east of the Mississippi, we have given them their whole lands, only reserving such portions as would pay the expenses of survey and sale, conceding to them the whole net proceeds of their country. These were the terms upon which one or two treaties were made in Ohio, when some of the Shawnees and their confederates, or brethren, emigrated from Ohio to the west of Missouri. The same terms were conceded to the Chickasaws, when they left their original country, and went west of the Mississippi. The heads of families of the Creeks themselves were allowed, under the treaty of 1832, to take reservations, with liberty to sell to the whites. We know what finally were the consequences of that measure. It is not necessary to pursue them now, or to connect them with this subject; so that I hope we shall have no war here upon that question.

But, sir, this application is in relation to eight or nine millions of acres of land which were taken from our allies in 1814. I have attempted to state the facts of the case as well as I could from having recently cast my eyes over them, though I had once investigated the subject very fully.

I can tell the Senator from Virginia another very strong ground, and a very plausible and rational one, on which we may account for this claim never having been brought forward before. At the close of our war we were not very liberal to the Indian tribes. Our Treasury was overwhelmed by a large debt, contracted during the war with Great Britain, which was just then about to be brought to a close. In 1814 we did not measure out justice liberally at all to our conquered domestic enemies at home—the Indian tribes with whom we were at war. We had no compassion for them. As you see, in this capitulation of Fort Jackson, we took the whole of their country—three or four of the hostile chiefs fleeing into Florida, and finding a refuge there, the rest taking refuge among their old allies, but recently enemies. The Treasury of the United States was not in a condition to induce the officers of the Government, or its agents anywhere, to listen to appeals in regard to justice or injustice, and if these Indians had so appealed, the country was not then in a condition to listen favorably to those appeals. That state of things continued for a long while, for we did not get clear of the war debt of 1812 until 1823 or 1833.

But, since that time a different measure of justice and liberality has been acted upon by this Government in all its transactions with the Indians. Now, if it be true that in our treaty stipulations with the Indians, when we have bought their lands, when, for the last ten years, we have felt ourselves bound to do justice to their claims, to their natural and just rights, and have allowed them twenty-five cents an acre, is it, in the eyes of a magnanimous and just Government—I will not say with an overflowing Treasury, for that is not a fair argument, but when we are able to be just, I will not say to be generous and liberal—is it right to object because these claims were not recently prosecuted from year to year, and from time to time, by these Indians? Ought we not rather to endeavor now to right that injustice which was done in 1814?

I am not able myself to form an opinion as to what ought to be the measure of redress that we should render to them. I believe, by the report of the Indian Bureau during the last Administration, it was estimated that, in view of the long detention of this money, in view of the late period at which it is proposed to give this justice to the friendly Creeks, that they ought to be allowed twenty cents an acre for the lands taken in 1814. I understand that the Committee on Indian Affairs have thought it more expedient and more just to the Government, under all the circumstances, to allow them but six and a quarter cents an acre.

This was land taken from our friends and allies in the Creek war, not one foot of which was pretended to have been conquered territory, but which was held exclusively by the friendly Indians. The boundary may be truly said, as has been said in some of the papers that I have seen, to have been marked out with the sword. Even remonstrance or discussion was refused. They were reduced to the privilege of drawing up a protest, and of appealing to the Government for some indemnity for this gross wrong; for the friendly Creeks felt it so, and had a right to feel it so. It was not in human nature to have other feelings; and it is known by those who have been connected with the tribe ever since, that it has been felt as a grievance by the friendly Creeks, that they were robbed, as they call it, unjustly by the power of the sword in that capitulation of 1814, of these eight or nine millions of acres.

I have also seen a statement that these friendly Creeks might justly claim indemnity for eight or ten millions of acres of land; which, a long period ago, when they were on terms of friendship with the Cherokee Indians, they permitted that tribe to occupy. When that question came up in a treaty, in ascertaining the rights of the Cherokee nation to those lands—some eight or ten millions of acres in the northeastern part of Alabama—General Jackson being one of the commissioners, and Governor Meriwether, or some other distinguished person of the South, being the other, upon a full investigation of the Cherokee claim, it was decided that the country belonged rightfully to the Creeks, and that the Cherokees only occupied it by permission. This would make eight or ten millions of acres more in regard to which the friendly Creeks have a just right to complain that they have been deprived of. They allowed the Cherokees to settle on them; and the United States took them from the Cherokees; and they were claimed, I believe, by Georgia; but not one cent was ever allowed the Creeks for them. This, to be sure, is only cumulative, and is only an additional circumstance why we should view the present claim with favor, if it be just in itself.

Sir, I think that notwithstanding the fact that this claim is brought forward at this late day, it is founded upon principles of justice and right, and that its presentation affords this Government an opportunity of doing justice to a weak and feeble people; and that we owe it to our fame and character to blot out that part of the page of history which records that, in a capitulation which took place between the commanding general of the forces of the United States and the Creek Indians, in 1814, in addition to taking the whole, or nearly the whole of the country occupied by the hostiles, the United States took eight or nine millions of acres from their own allies in arms, who were most important auxiliaries in the war, and never conceded one cent as a consideration therefor.

I think that the Government ought to make restitution in the best way it can, and to pay the friendly Creeks at least five or six cents an acre; I will not say ten cents, although we have been paying (since we have had the means, and have been disposed to be liberal and just to other Indian tribes) twenty-five cents an acre. I think it is but reasonable; I think it would add to the credit and honor of the country, under such circumstances, to concede this amount, at all events, this five or six cents an acre, if the facts be as I have stated them, and I believe they are. I know there was a small strip of land of the hostiles reserved, and something was said at the time the treaty was made in regard to its being an equivalent. I have investigated that point as far as I could, and I have not been able to find that there is the slightest pretense for saying that it was anything like an equivalent, or was so understood or accepted by the friendly Creeks. There was also a claim for indemnity for spoiliations and property destroyed. That went before the House of Representatives, and was pending for a long time before Congress, in one shape or another. Mr. Lowndes made a report on it, which was a puzzle to me at first. As I read it at first, I understood him to mean that there was proof that the Indians would have taken $60,000 as indemnity for the lands of which they had been arbitrarily deprived; but on more thorough investigation, I found that the report related to another matter, and not to land.

For the reasons which I have stated now—though I have not thoroughly investigated the subject within the last two or three years, except to cast my eyes over the memorials and briefs, and to listen to the statements of the honorable Senator from Wisconsin—I am of opinion that it would be but just to grant this claim. I will not detain the Senate by any further remarks upon it.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, this amendment proposes to go back forty years, to 1814, to readjust an old settlement between the Creek Indians and the United States, and to set aside, in part at least, the treaty which was then made, upon the ground of inadequacy of consideration. The proposition I regard as a very dangerous one; and I think it involves two considerations which it behooves us to weigh well before we agree to this amendment.

The first is, whether we shall now begin to act upon the principle that we are bound to go back forty years, and rip up old Indian treaties and settlements, on the ground of inadequacy of consideration, for the purpose of now doing them justice. And the next consideration is, whether we are bound, upon such evidence as we can now command, to give the Creeks more than they have already received, even if we should assume the obligation of readjusting the settlement. My own opinion is, that if we commence the policy of reopening these treaties, we shall find that there is scarcely one made prior to 1840, which we shall not have to reexamine and readjust upon the grounds which are here set up. I believe, too, sir, that when we come to make that attempt, we shall find that, even if we had the disposition to reopen these settlements, it will be perfectly impossible for us to collect the evidence upon which we can make a fair decision. We cannot collect the testimony which will enable us to determine the relative understandings of the parties; that is, what was understood on the part of the representatives of our Government and of the Indians at the time the treaties were made. We should find it difficult, too, to ascertain what was the just amount of consideration to be paid them, if we should set aside these Indian treaties for the purpose of giving them a fairer compensation.

Sir, what is the consideration which we should pay to the Indians, and what are their rights? Not the consideration which we would pay to the fee-simple proprietor; not the consideration which we would pay to a foreign nation which held the ultimate title in the land; but some sort of compensation, something to satisfying them for abandoning the right to rove over the land and catch game, when it becomes necessary to use that land for the purposes of civilization. Now, I think it would be very difficult to ascertain what that right is worth. If we estimate it according to what they made out of it, that is, according to the scanty subsistence which they managed to derive from it, the worth of the game, and such habitation as it afforded them, I think it will be found that there is not a treaty we have ever made in which we have not given them more than an equivalent for that value. In addition to this, it will be found that we have not only given them such considerations as satisfied them at the time, or ought to have satisfied them, and were better for them than this right which they exercised of roaming and hunting over this country, but we have constantly guarded and protected them—protected them against civil wars, protected them against the encroachments and invasions of the whites.

But, sir, let us go back a little, and see where we shall be led if we take the ground of setting aside these old treaties, because of inadequacy of consideration. I think I shall show, before I have done, that the Creeks have been better paid, perhaps, than any other tribe, with the exception of two or three, with which we have had relations. I have before me a list of the treaties which we have made with various tribes. Here I find that we made a treaty with the Quapaws, by which we received from them 51,786,560 acres of land, and gave them $297,976; not one cent an acre. To the Wyandottes, Delawares, &c., we gave $210,000 for 11,808,409 acres; not one third of a cent per acre. To the Wyandottes, Ottawas, &c., $116,500 for 1,030,400; about one and a half cents an acre. And thus I might recapitulate a long list of old treaties by which we obtained lands from Indians at such nominal prices. If we set the example in this case, the claims are much stronger under the treaties to which I have referred, and if we apply the same rule to all, what will be the result? In casting my eye over the list of treaties, I find more striking cases of inadequacy of consideration than any I have yet mentioned. The Delawares and Piankeshaws ceded 2,038,400 acres, for which we gave them $4,000. The Delawares and Pottawatomies ceded 1,572,480 acres, for which we gave $5,000. The Delawares and Miamies ceded 3,257,600 acres for $18,000.

Sir, you may go over the whole list of these Indian treaties, and I believe you will find that there was no treaty prior to 1830, in which we agreed to give the same compensation that the Creeks have already received, or anything like it. And, what is more, it will be found that we have not given to civilized nations anything like what is now claimed here, or anything like what we have already given to the Creek Indians. Why, the whole territory acquired from France by the cession of Louisiana cost us but $15,000,000; and it amounted to between seven and eight hundred millions of acres; so that the cost of the territory was not two and a-half cents an acre. It will be seen, on examination, that we have given the Creeks twenty times that, as I think I shall be able to show before I have done, in the course of the various settlements which we have had with them. It will be found, I think, that we have never made a treaty, of late years, with an Indian tribe, in which we did not agree to give them more for their lands than we gave France. Are we to go back and set aside that treaty on the ground of inadequacy of consideration? Are we to go back, and say we will compensate her, because the lands which she ceded have turned out to be more valuable than was expected? Or is it a safe policy for a nation to pursue, in regard either to civilized nations or savage tribes, to go back such a great distance of time for the purpose of settling old accounts in reference to which we cannot now have any reliable evidence?

I venture to say, sir, that if we adopt this claim, we shall have claims presented at our Treasury upon every Indian treaty which we have made heretofore, because, on the ground on which the Senator from Tennessee seems to go, that we are to pay them twenty-five cents an acre for the lands they have ceded, I believe there is scarcely a treaty which it will not be necessary to reopen, and in regard to which it will not be incumbent upon us to resettle these old accounts. Can we do it? What frauds would it not occasion? In what difficulties would it not environ us?

But, sir, in point of fact, I think I can show, so far as we have evidence, that these Creeks have no claim upon us, and have been better paid than almost any other tribe of Indians that ever had dealings with the United States. This whole transaction arose, if I understand it, out of a civil war. The hostile Creeks attacked the friendly Creeks, and committed spoiliations upon them, and afterwards upon the whites, and the Government of the United States interposed for their protection. It sent down armed men; it distributed rations amongst the men and women, and supported their families; and it paid, as the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BELL] says, their warriors. It took upon itself the whole cost and charge of defending them and of supporting these people; and when that war was concluded, from which they would have suffered as much, ay, sir, more than we, if we had not interposed for their relief, instructions were issued by the Government here to those who were to make the treaties, to reserve a sufficient indemnity out of the territory in order to satisfy the United States for the expenses of the war. It was required of the negotiators, and the Indians so understood it, and it was just and right, that a sufficient territory should be reserved in order to indemnify the United States for the expenses of that war, which they incurred as much for the benefit of the friendly Indians as for themselves. In making this arrangement it became necessary, and no one knows it better than yourself, Mr. President, [Mr. FITZPATRICK in the chair], for the United States to take a strip of country between Florida and the Creek country, in Alabama and Georgia, for the purpose of cutting off these hostile Indians from their communications with Florida, then in the hands of a foreign and rather an unfriendly Power. It was necessary to interpose this barrier. This territory was never worth much; for I understand that a large portion of it is yet unsold, and that a great deal of that which is left is valued at some ten or twelve cents an acre. This country, never worth much, was taken off—a strip of it—for this purpose, in order to interpose that barrier between the communications of those hostile Creeks with the Spanish settlements, and the Indians within the Spanish territory.

This was a measure of defense, not only for the whites, but for the friendly Creeks themselves. It was a good and wise thing for the hostile Creeks, because it enabled this Government the better to exercise that supervision over them which was indispensable for their safety and peace as well as our own. It left to the tribe, which I understand did not at that time number more than twenty thousand, ten or twelve millions of acres of land for their joint occupation—far more than was necessary for their subsistence, far more than they could cultivate, and quite enough for their hunting grounds. For the land thus taken from the friendly Creeks, they received better land belonging to the hostiles, many of whom, I believe, were killed, or fled into Florida. This capitulation left these Indians all the land they ought to have wanted in any possible point of view; more than they could have profitably used.

We have never recognized the Indians as fee-simple proprietors of the soil. All that we have felt ourselves bound to do was to protect them; and, in making treaties and arrangements in regard to the extinguishment of Indian title, to make such stipulations as would promote their happiness, and as would make the necessity of occupying their country for the uses of civilization fall as lightly and as easily upon them as possible, to keep them satisfied, and to give them such consideration as might minister to their future happiness, in the shape of annuities, in the shape of presents, clothing, and the necessities which they might require in the course of their after life. This is all that we were bound to do. This is all we ever stipulated to do. The idea that we are to go back and value the lands which we acquired from them according to the present prices, and make them compensation accordingly, would involve our Treasury in responsibilities, the end of which no man living would ever see.

But permit me to pursue that point a little further. It has been said that these Indians were induced to believe, by the representations of General Pinckney, after they signed the capitulation with General Jackson, that some remuneration would be made them for these lands. Here is what is found in General Pinckney's letter to Colonel Hawkins:

"You will please, sir, to communicate these terms to the friendly Indians, and to enjoin them, in the prosecution of the war against such as may continue hostile, to abstain carefully from injuring those who may be returning with the intention of making their submission. You may likewise inform them that the United States will not forget their fidelity, but, in the arrangements which may be made of the lands to be retained as indemnity, their claims will be respected; and such of their chiefs as have distinguished themselves, by their exertion and valor in the common cause, will also receive a remuneration in the ceded lands, and in such manner as the Government may direct."

When that capitulation was made, General Jackson reserved, within the ceded lands, a settlement for every friendly Creek, and for every chief amongst the friendly Creeks, who was then in the possession of settlements on the ceded lands. It is obvious that the promise of General Pinckney, as will be found by reference to agent Hawkins's letter, referred only to such indemnities for spoiliations and such consideration for their reservations within the ceded lands, as would satisfy the chiefs and the people. What did agent Hawkins say? He said:

"As to the extent of the claims, I have no data to calculate from. Part of the vouchers were taken in by Mr. Cassidy, the general's secretary, and the remainder given in since to the assistant agent at Coweta, which I have ordered on here; whatever they may be, I will forward them as soon as received. I believe, at the time of drawing the lines for the treaty, $60,000 would have been received as an equivalent."

At the time of drawing the lines for the treaty, he believed that $60,000 would have satisfied them; that is, they would have taken that sum in gross, not only for the spoiliations, but for the lands, and in satisfaction of all their claims.

The answer to the second question proposed to him by the Department, which was, "How far the Government ought, from motives of justice or policy, to yield to their claims?" he answers:

"From the statement on the first question, it is apparent, justice is on the side of the claimants, and policy requires a strict fulfillment of the expectations of the chiefs."

That is, indemnity for these spoiliations.

In answer to the third question, "Whether indemnity ought to be made to them by restoring a part of the ceded land, or by an additional annuity, or by giving them a certain fixed sum in money or goods?" he says:

"I believe the correct way would be to liquidate the claims of individuals, some of which, I am told, are too high; reduce them to a just value, and pay them. If it were a national claim, a cession of land might be desirable; but to individuals it is otherwise."

Question four was "Whether these compensations (of whatever nature they may be) should be confined entirely to the friendly chiefs?" In reply, he says:

"This question is, in fact, already answered. It should be confined to the individual claimants, for none other are in contemplation of the terms of peace offered."

Let me pursue this history further. This question came up for the consideration of Congress before a committee, of which Mr. Lowndes was chairman, in 1817—this very question; for if you observe, you find that these Creeks had claims for spoiliations on their property as well as claims in regard to their lands. Mr. Lowndes, in this report, says:

"That the foundation of a claim, on the part of the friendly Creek Indians, to an indemnity for the losses which they sustained from hostile Indians of their own tribe, is best explained by the instrument delivered by them to General Jackson, on the 9th of August, 1814. In this they say: 'We call ourselves, as we are, the masters of the land. We have adhered faithfully, in peace and war, to our treaty stipulations with the United States. Finding that General Jackson, in drawing the lines around our country, to retain so much of that conquered from the hostile Indians as he deemed just, found it necessary, for political motives and purposes, to run a line within which there is a great quantity of land, actually our property, for which he, as an equivalent, leaves to the conquered Indians lands between Coosa and Tallapoosa. We do not deem the exchange as an equivalent. It shall not, however, interfere with running the line, as we rely on the justice of the United States to cause justice to be done to us. And, on these conditions, we request that General Pinckney's letter, of the 23d April, to Colonel Hawkins, and the answer thereto, of the 25th, be sent on with the treaty, which we will sign after delivering this instrument.'"

"These extracts appear to the committee to be sufficient to show that if the friendly Creeks are to be considered as having consented to the cession made by the treaty of 1814, it was only on the condition that their claims to indemnity should not be disregarded. Congress, indeed, may be considered as having recognized their claim by the act of the last session for the relief of Samuel Manac, one of their number."

"At the time of the treaty, the friendly Creeks would have been satisfied, in the opinion of Colonel Hawkins, to have received, as an indemnity for their losses, the sum of $60,000. As it is to be considered in some measure a claim under a treaty, as they seem to have expected that some fixed sum would be distributed among them as an equivalent for their losses, and as to do so will be to make it the interest of each sufferer that the losses of another shall not be exaggerated beyond their real amount, the committee believe that it will be best to appropriate a definite sum, to be applied, under the direction of the Secretary of War, to indemnify the friendly Creek Indians for property destroyed by the hostile Creeks, in fair proportion to their losses."

Commissioners were selected who looked into these spoiliations for which they claimed indemnity, and who estimated the whole amount afterwards at $195,000. The Creeks came before Congress for the difference between what was then paid them, some $87,000, being more than the $60,000 which Colonel Hawkins mentioned, and the $197,000, making about $110,000. Upon that claim the committee of the House of Representatives, of which Louis McLane, of Delaware, was chairman, reported adversely, stating it, as the opinion of the committee, that the sum of $85,000, appropriated under Mr. Lowndes's report, "by the law of 1817 was intended to be a full indemnity for all the losses of the friendly Indians, and was equal to any reasonable expectation." I will not read the whole of that report.

Mr. DAWSON. What time was that?

Mr. HUNTER. In 1824. Well, sir, within the last year we have appropriated the residue of these $197,000. We have given the $110,000, which, in addition to the $87,000, makes up the whole amount of indemnity for spoliation claimed by the Indians themselves; for it was a settlement made by consent of the Indian chiefs at that time. My friend from Georgia [Mr. Dawson] tells me that these same friendly Indians made a treaty in the subsequent year, in which they set up no such claim as is now brought forward, for these lands. We find, then, that it was the opinion of agent Hawkins, who knew more about these Indians, as we are told, than any other man ever concerned with them, as I think I heard you say, sir, for you knew something of them, that at the time, the payment of $60,000 to the friendly Creeks would have settled the whole matter.

Mr. BELL. That was for the spoliation.

Mr. HUNTER. No, sir, it would have covered the whole. It was a joint claim, and so Mr. Lowndes treats it in his report, because he applies this indemnity to that part of the treaty in which the friendly Creeks say they referred only to their lands. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, in arguing this question before, when we had the other portion of the claim under consideration, said the report referred to lands. Mr. Lowndes clearly had reference to the lands, because he quoted the instrument of the friendly Creeks in regard to land.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I think the honorable chairman took different views when the claim for spoliation was before us, from those which he now advances. My impression then was, that the $60,000 applied to the land claim; such is my opinion yet. He argued, however, that it applied to the spoliation claim. If he did, then the whole of his present remarks now are in opposition to his former opinion, and he is fortifying the view which I took then. I have been looking over the remarks which the Senator made heretofore, and I find that, in reference to the claim for spoliation committed on the friendly Creeks, he contended that that offer of $60,000 applied to those, and he read the report of Mr. Lowndes and of Mr. McLane, to show that I took the ground then that Mr. Hawkins, the agent for these Indians, in speaking of the offer of $60,000, had reference only to the national claim of the Creeks, and not to the claim of individuals for losses.

Mr. HUNTER. Sir, I took the same ground then that I take now—that what agent Hawkins meant at that time was, that $60,000 would have satisfied all the claims of these Indians for spoliation, for their lands, and everything else. That was the view of Mr. Lowndes, when he made that report, under which they received $85,000; and that was the view of Mr. McLane when he reported against their claim for the $110,000 necessary to make up the amount of $195,000, which was the full amount which the commissioners said they were entitled for spoliation. Mr. McLane said they were not entitled to that, because agent Hawkins had said at the time that $60,000 would have satisfied all their demands; and I believe it would. I do not believe the claim for land is a valid one, even upon equitable considerations alone. I think I shall be able, presently, to show that these Creeks have been compensated for all the land which they have ceded to the United States, upon a more liberal measure than perhaps any other tribe of Indians that have treated with the United States. I believe they have got already, in exchange for their lands, more than the United States will ever get for them in return, and I think it will not be difficult to prove it. But these documents certainly show that it was the opinion of agent Hawkins, and that it was the opinion of Mr. Lowndes, who were contemporaries with the transaction, and that it was the opinion of Mr. McLane, that what they meant was, that a sum in gross would have been received as a satisfaction for all demands, whether of lands or anything else. That was the meaning of these letters of Hawkins, and of these reports from those gentlemen. That was all the Indians ever asked—a sum in gross for the lands, and as an indemnity for spoliation, and for all other claims.

Again sir, is it to be supposed that if General Jackson, who made this capitulation, and was afterwards President, if he believed that this amount of eight or nine millions of acres had been wrested wrongfully from the Indians, would not have proposed to make a fair compensation to them? I do not believe it, and I will show you presently that treaties were made by which the Indians got lands in return of far greater value, in my opinion, than any they have ceded.

I have before me a statement made up at the Indian Department in 1840, from which it appears that the aggregate number of acres ceded by the Creeks to the United States was 24,766,400, and the aggregate value of the land given in exchange (valued at $1.25 an acre) of the annuities and of the money paid them, was estimated at $21,909,000. Now, I believe it will be found—for I wish to state the case fairly, if I can do it—that in this estimate of 24,766,400 acres, there is an omission of a portion ceded in Georgia of something like 6,000,000 or 7,000,000 of acres. It will be found, then, that for about 30,000,000 of acres they have received in land, valued at $1.25, which is certainly better worth $1.25 than what they gave, and in annuities and indemnities, according to this statement, $21,909,000. It is to be observed, too, that this estimate of the whole compensation consisting of land and money given and paid to the Indians does not include the Indian reservations, or "head rights" in Alabama, which were very valuable, or the $195,000 which have been paid them by the United States.

But, sir, that is not all. It is said that in this case we took land for which we gave no equivalent. I find that there was a treaty made in 1832, long after this transaction, by which the Creeks gave 5,128,000 acres, and received 11,158,000. This difference in the quantity of land is more than enough to cover any claim in regard to these 8,000,000 or 9,000,000 of acres. I believe, as I said before, that if you take the whole quantity of lands ceded to be 30,000,000 of acres—and it will not exceed that, or, at least, will not be much over it—and take what they have received in return, $22,000,000 in round numbers, it will be found that they have received more per acre than the United States ever received for their lands; and that they have been better paid than any people with whom we have ever dealt; better paid than any foreign nation from whom we have derived territory by cession.

Why, sir, I was curious to look into a report made in the first session of the Twenty-Sixth Congress, on the subject of the value of these lands to the United States, by a committee of this body, of which Mr. Norvell was chairman; a report with which it was said Mr. Calhoun had a great deal to do; a report which received, at that day, the assent of that intelligent committee. It made out the net value of the public lands to the United States to be something like seventeen cents an acre, which is less than one fourth of the value per acre which the Creeks have already received for the whole of the lands ceded to the United States, according to the document to which I have referred. And now we are asked, upon the plea of inadequacy of consideration, and upon a view of a part and not of all our transactions with them, to reopen the accounts, and, upon another settlement, to fix another price upon a mere arbitrary valuation. Sir, if we are to go into it, how can we measure the value of what was ceded by the Indians at that time? It is evident that, in order to do so, we have to consider a great many subjects, in relation to which we have now little and imperfect evidence. We have to consider how far it was a war on account of the friendly Creeks. We have to consider how far they were entitled to contribute a portion of the expenses of that war. We have to consider how far it was for the benefit of the Creeks themselves that we should take this strip of country, which still remains, the greater portion of it, in our hands, and, I am told, is almost worthless, and would sell, at best, but for a few cents an acre. We must ascertain, too, whether we did not, in fact, give the friendly Indians a more valuable country, taken from the hostiles, in exchange for this barren strip, so as to make it, in fact, a contribution from the hostiles themselves. And, lastly, when we have gone through all these considerations, we have to estimate the nature of the Indian title, and what we ought to pay them for such concessions as these.

My own opinion is, that it would have been far better, in the beginning, if, instead of going through the form of treaties with the Indians, we had made arrangements with them, through commissioners—such arrangements as would have satisfied them, and looked more to their real interests and less to the mere form of treaties. We could have made such arrangements and contracts with them as would have promoted their real happiness, as would have secured to them such articles of subsistence, of clothing, and of agricultural implements, as would have benefited them in their after career, instead of giving these large sums of money either to be wasted upon agents, or to be expended in whisky, or to be scattered broadcast over the face of the earth. I believe it will be found in the history of our transactions with the Indian tribes, that they have been very little benefited by the large sums of money that have been paid to them, and that it would have been far better to have made some arrangements with them which looked to furnishing them, in kind, with such things as would be useful to them. But, whether that be so or not, of this I feel very certain, that it would not be safe or proper for us to undertake to go back forty years, for the purpose of re-examining old treaties and resettling old accounts, and especially Indian treaties. If we once commence it, I fear we shall never see the end of it.

We paid last year to these friendly Creeks $110,000, which, in my opinion, was not due, for I believed, as I said then, that what was allowed in 1817, when Mr. Lowndes made his report, was a full consideration for all the claims which they were entitled to make. But Congress thought otherwise. They appropriated the $110,000, which, in addition to the previous appropriations, made up the $195,000—the whole amount ever estimated by the Commissioner as due to them for spoliation. Having done that, it seems to me we ought to stop; because, if we go further, if we undertake to go back to resettle these old treaties, we shall find that we are not to stop with those to which I have alluded. There are others, and we shall have large claims from another quarter.

I have before me a statement of some treaties made in 1842. A treaty was concluded with the Chippewa Indians of the Mississippi and Lake Superior, on the 4th of October, 1842, by which they ceded fifteen millions of acres of land, for which they got $407,000. That is the estimated value of the lands granted, of their annuities, and of the money paid to them. Shall we reopen this treaty too, and pay these Indians at the rate of twenty or twenty-five cents an acre for their lands? If you pay this claim, how can you discriminate against others who have received much less than the Creeks for the lands which they have ceded? If we take this step we cannot stop there, but must go on. And if we act on the principle of this amendment, we shall have probably to reopen every treaty made previous to 1830, which I hope the Senate are not disposed to do.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. President, it is, or should be, the desire of every member of the Senate, to get at the right in this matter. I have listened, with great attention, to what has been said by the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance, but he has failed to satisfy my mind by any thing that he has said, of any error on the part of the committee. It is purely a question of justice.

Have these Indians, as is alleged, been deprived of such a portion of their country, without compensation? If so, what compensation shall be allowed them? Upon this question we find there is a very wide difference between the opinion of the committee and of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I have before me his report and opinion upon the subject. As I stated upon a former occasion, his conclusions are with the committee, that justice is with the Indians; and not only so, but he fixes the amount of land of which they have been deprived at a much greater aggregate than the committee have fixed it, and the sum to which they are entitled at a much greater sum than that fixed by the committee—as twenty cents an acre is greater than six and a quarter.

The Senator from Virginia sets out with a very imposing declaration, and one that strikes impressively when made in the manner in which he made it. It is that the amendment proposes to go back for forty years, and set aside a treaty made with these Indians, and readjust the consideration paid to them under that treaty for their lands. This would seem to be an act that the Senate would not do; and if that were really a true and correct statement of what is proposed, let him satisfy the Senate of it, and I venture to say they will not make this appropriation. But, sir, is it a correct statement? Is this a proposition to go back and set aside a treaty? You know, sir, the amendment does not propose to set aside the treaty. It leaves the treaty in force. The lands which by the capitulation were vested in the United States, are left, notwithstanding the amendment, in the United States. Does it propose to readjust any consideration stipulated for by that treaty? No, sir; for the gravamen of this claim is that no consideration whatever was allowed under the treaty.

If Senators read the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in which he correctly details what General Jackson said at the time, they will find that it is there asserted—and such will be found to be the case when the history of the matter is looked into—that General Jackson did not pretend to buy that land of the Indians. He never pretended that he was giving them any consideration, except in the casual words in which he said the land reserved between the Coosa and Tallapoosa rivers is an equivalent. The Indians might, and probably did, reply, "Sir, we do not consider it an equivalent." And why did they not consider it an equivalent? For the very reason stated in their part of the treaty, or the instrument drawn up by them, and which agent Hawkins and General Pinckney say they declared to be their part of the treaty, and in consequence of their being permitted to make that statement they signed the treaty, and from no other consideration except the force which was used. They say, in their part of the treaty, that they did not consider it an equivalent, and for a very plain reason. They might, if they had used language which would have expressed the idea very clearly at the time, have said: "General Jackson, how do you decree this a capitulation? The land between the Coosa and the Tallapoosa is already ours. It is true, these hostiles live there now; but how did they get there? They came there by our sufferance. They are not native Muscogee Indians, but are engrafted tribes, who have gone there to settle on our land by our permission, and the first thing we knew they waged war against us and against your country. We have stood by you, and helped you to fight them and put them down; and do you now deem it a consideration to say to us that we shall have a portion of the country which was originally our own, and take from us, under the capitulation, a large portion of this country which has never been the scene of warfare?"

Sir, such language as that addressed to General Jackson would have presented the case in its proper form, and how can it be said at this day that leaving to them this small parcel of country, which was already theirs, between the Coosa and the Tallapoosa rivers, was any equivalent for the enormous amount of property taken from them by the capitulation? They, our friends, were converted into enemies for the purpose of capitulation, and they were forced to give up land which had not been trodden by a foe, but from which they had kept the enemy with arms in their hands, a portion of the time being under the command of General Jackson himself, and other military officers of the United States. To contend that there was any equivalent would seem to be absurd. It would seem like my taking two horses from you, and saying that as an equivalent for this one I give you that. That is a queer kind of bargain. If that is the manner in which the Government can conduct itself, and deem itself acting justly, it is a new rule by which it governs its conscientiousness.

Then the Senator is mistaken in both branches of his first proposition. We do not propose to go back forty years and set aside any treaty. We do not propose to go back and readjust any consideration then paid under the treaty for this land. We deny that it was paid at all; and the Senator has read the very instrument contemporaneous with the capitulation in which the Indians declared that they were the owners, not only of the land they were forced to give up, but also of that which was left to them as a pretended equivalent, and that they alone had the right to cede it. In that instrument they also recited the promise which had been made through General Pinckney and agent Hawkins, that their claims should be respected. Here let me take a side glance at the objections which have been made to the claim. It is said that this claim has slumbered so long that now it is too late to take it up. The Senator himself has called our attention to the first step which was taken in this matter in 1814. He has traced from that time down to 1824, and we find that at other periods the claim was asserted through their agent, and by different agents.

Mr. HUNTER. Not since 1824, that I can find.

Mr. WALKER. You will find that it was so; but I will admit that, from 1824 down to 1852, their principal struggle was to get indemnity for the spoiliations on their personal property, and their houses and villages. The Senator says there would now be impropriety in attempting this readjustment, as he terms it, because of the great difficulty of getting at the evidence. I wish to inquire what evidence he wants which is lacking? Is there any testimony in regard to it which is not of a better character than can be presented in regard to any other claim? Why, sir, the highest order of testimony is record evidence; and, though this may not fall strictly within the definition of record evidence, when we speak of the decisions and the records of courts of justice, yet it is record evidence so far as it can be, and most solemnly so, being found among our own American archives. It is a claim which can be traced, as I before remarked, by the public archives of the country, more conclusively, perhaps, than any other claim which ever was presented on the part of an Indian tribe. It had its inception at the capitulation of 1814. Then we find the Indians most solemnly declared that they would not, by reason of the force that was exercised upon them, execute this treaty. Agent Hawkins says so too; and notwithstanding force was used, and the threatening attitude of General Jackson, they would not have signed the treaty unless it was conceded, on the other hand, that they should have put upon the treaty a kind of protocol, which they made their part of the treaty, and which they required to be forwarded to the War Department, together with the letters of General Pinckney and agent Hawkins. We see, from that time down to 1824, it is not disputed they were following up this claim. We find, too, contemporaneous with it, a declaration of surprise, on the part of agent Hawkins, that the course pursued by General Jackson should have been pursued towards them; and so far as I have heard, I must say, that, as well as I can learn from those who knew him, this agent Hawkins, has left a character as fair as any man, perhaps, who ever conducted Indian affairs in connection with any tribe in the country. He seems to have been a man of peculiar integrity, and of a fine sense of justice, who stood by the rights of the Government, and stood up, when he could, for the rights of the Indians. But all that he could do was to declare his surprise in reference to this matter.

The Senator says we cannot now estimate the Indian title, and he tells us, as a reason why we cannot, that the Indian title is but the right to roam over the land and to obtain a precarious subsistence from the game that, like the Indians themselves, roam over the country. Why, sir, it is strange indeed if we cannot estimate the Indian title at this day. What have we been doing since the revolutionary war? Has not, in every instance, when it was proposed to make an Indian treaty, an estimate been made of the value of the Indian title to the lands proposed to be sold? Why, sir, you will find that the very next year the Indians were allowed for lands in the same region of country, not six and a quarter cents an acre, but the admission of the Government is, that that land right adjoining this was more valuable than six and a quarter cents—as much as two thirds more valuable. There is the estimate set by the Government itself, upon what? Upon land to which the title was in it? No, sir, but to land over which there was an Indian title—the right to roam and procure a precarious subsistence. Here then we have evidence of the value of the Indian title. In the following year, at the treaty of Indian Spring, we have evidence of the estimate which the country set upon the Indian title, and we have it continually ever since. Not a year passes in which the Government is not brought to make some estimate of the Indian title; I cannot see therefore that there is any force in this point, which is thrown in as it were to make weight against this claim.

Mr. President, there was another very broad assertion made by the Senator, and it was that we gave at the time to these Indians that which they were satisfied. I must confess I was more surprised with that declaration from the lips of the honorable Senator than with any other declaration which he made. Why, sir, was not the very evidence which he was reading and reviewing at the time proof cogent and conclusive of the incorrectness of that statement? Was not the protocol, drawn up by themselves, a refutation of his declaration? How, then, could he say they received that with which they were satisfied? It is impossible to say it in truth, not that I by any means intend even to imply that the Senator would falsely represent this matter intentionally. But we do know that these Indians were dissatisfied at the time. They declared it solemnly in writing. They declared it in that form which they deemed a part of the treaty.

Mr. HUNTER. I did not say that the Indians were satisfied at the capitulation of Fort Jackson, but I say we have the evidence of agent Hawkins that they would have been satisfied at that time if they had received $60,000 in money.

Mr. WALKER. That was a subsequent part of the Senator's remarks, and I was about to comment on it; and I was going to say, that the next thing we heard from the honorable Senator was that they would have been satisfied at the time Colonel Hawkins made his report, if they could have been paid $60,000. Now, what is said on that subject by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in reviewing the whole history of this transaction? He says this:

"As to what may be deemed 'just and proper' compensation for the lands referred to, I have to remark that Colonel Hawkins, in his letter of the 1st of August, 1815, (2 Indian Affairs, 493,) said that he believed the Indians would at the time have accepted $60,000 as an indemnity. The committee of the Fourteenth Congress, of which Mr. Lowndes was chairman, considered the remark to refer exclusively to their claim for indemnity for injuries and losses, (2 Indian Affairs, 125.) So did the Committee of Ways and Means of the House, in 1824, (ib., 492.) On the contrary, my predecessor in office, Orlando Brown, Esq., with whom I concurred, was of a contrary opinion. (See Commissioner Brown's report, made in 1850, to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate.)"

Now, I wish Senators to note what follows, for it addresses itself to the Senate as well as the Secretary of the Interior, to whom this report was made:

"But be this as it may, even if the friendly Indians, seeing their land irretrievably taken from them, expressly informed by General Jackson that he had no authority to comply with General Pinckney's promises, crushed under a great weight of misfortunes, disheartened and despairing, would have received at that time for their lands so inadequate a compensation, that affords no rule by which to measure what they ought now to receive; and to consider them bound by what it was Colonel Hawkins's opinion they would have received, if paid them then, would be the strangest injustice."

This is what the Commissioner of Indian Affairs says. Differing vastly from the Senator from Virginia, and from any view it seems to me which may be taken on this subject, when it is clearly and fully understood. Why, sir, suppose, as the Commissioner says, at that time confronted by General Jackson as they were, told that he could not comply with the terms proposed by General Pinckney, that he could do nothing more than receive the capitulation from them, and take from them their country; and suppose when they saw it had to go anyhow, they voluntarily said, give us $60,000, would the Government have considered that the Indians were concluded and estopped by the acceptance of such a proposition? No, sir. It seems impossible that just men could come to such a conclusion. These are the best features surrounding the transaction, and the best you can say of that statement of Colonel Hawkins is, that under the circumstances recited by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, they would have humbly bowed down and taken that sum when they knew well they could get nothing more. When friends are found involuntarily placed in the position of enemies, and are forced and become willing to submit to such terms, I do not know how far some minds might be willing to consider them as concluded on that subject; but for my part, I am so constituted that I can take no such view as that. I cannot say that I would hold them responsible for it even if the $60,000 had then been paid them; and it was undeniably the consideration for their lands.

Another statement was, that, when the capitulation was made, General Jackson reserved land for the friendly Creeks equivalent to that which he took from them. I have commented on that before; and the comparison which I made, of taking your two horses, and returning you one as a consideration for the other, is an exact parallel. He gave them nothing but what already belonged to them; nothing but what they said, in his presence, belonged to them; nothing but what they said, in writing, belonged to them; and that writing he consented to forward to the Government, knowing that they claimed it as their part of the treaty.

This, then, was the attitude occupied by this case at that time. This was the manner in which General Jackson, in connection with this whole transaction at that time, answered the argument and the assertion of the Senator, that they received an equivalent. But, sir, General Jackson, at the time, did not dispute that part of the treaty, or that protocol which they claimed as their part of the treaty. Why do I make this assertion? In the same report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to which I have referred, he recites the fact that:

"General Jackson, however, did not pretend to take or retain the lands of the friendly Creeks as part of the conquered territory. His reasons for taking them were stated by him in his letter to the Secretary of War, dated August 10, 1814, in which he said: 'Considerations interesting to the United States, relative to the Spanish dominions immediately south of us, induced me to procure the cession of all the Creek lands of consequence, bounding on foreign claims of territory, in order to prevent future connections injurious to our tranquillity.' (1 Indian Affairs, 638.) On the 15th of April, 1824, Mr. Forsyth, from a select committee in regard to the claims of Georgia, made a report, in which it is said: 'In 1814, General Jackson, acting under the authority of the Government, took from the Creek Indians, for an equivalent named by himself, all the land the United States chose to require, to effect a great object of national policy in regard to the Indian tribes. It cannot be alleged that this was done by virtue of conquest. This acquisition by conquest was an acquisition of lands from friends and allies for an equivalent named by the United States.'"

That "equivalent," as I before stated, was but another portion of their own country, and they so declared in the protocol to the treaty on their part. Thus we see, sir, that contrary to the argument of the honorable Senator, General Jackson himself did not pretend that he was giving an equivalent. He took the territory for political considerations. He did not view it as a matter of consequence to the country whether he gave any consideration or not. A military man, in his position, perhaps, was justified in doing what he did. If the country was in extremis—if those Spanish dominions lying on the frontier were to be made the rendezvous for robbers, thieves, and pirates—if persons like Arbuthnot and Ambrister were to be allowed there to carry on their operations, and arm parties to commit treason on this country, it was, perhaps, justifiable, if the country could not be saved in any other way, to take the Indian lands on the frontier, and seize the traitors and shoot or hang them. Sir, General Jackson, of all men on earth, was the man to act up to the requirements of the occasion. In this condition of things it was immaterial to him what the Creeks might claim as being their country, because there was a necessity on his part for taking it. But, sir, when these Indians appealed to us for justice, when their claim is ascertained, when they have followed it up, and shown its justice clearly to us, are we to say to them coldly, "What you were forced to do then we will make you stand by now! Though you were our friends, and fought by our sides—though you were under the command of the man who forced you to cede your country for the benefit of his, we will not give you one farthing for the territory which was ceded or taken from you." If the Senate or the Congress of the United States will do that, I must solemnly declare that I have long misappreciated their sense of justice.

The honorable Senator says the Indians have already got more than the United States will ever get from these lands. Sir, when did they get it? He brings up general tables here showing the aggregates of sums given by the Government, under all the treaties with the Creeks, and all the expenses paid them for indemnity, &c., including, perhaps the expenses incurred by the United States in wars in which the people of the United States, those of Alabama and Georgia in particular, were as much interested.

Mr. HUNTER. Not an estimate of what we gave them except lands and money.

Mr. WALKER. I make the inference from the nature of a statement, which I now have in my drawer, in which I see that in some of these cases the expenses of wars are charged in these tables to the Indians. I do not say it is so in this case.

Mr. HUNTER. It is not so. The statement which I gave merely included the lands and the money given to the Indians.

Mr. WALKER. But suppose in treating with the Creek Indians, the United States, at various times, have, in making other acquisitions, incurred heavy expenditures. That has been a matter of voluntary bargain and contract between the two parties. Neither was then forced to capitulate. The parties stood upon an equal footing. They dealt as equals do. Then why array that against these Indians? why bring that up to show that now the Government of the United States ought not to make compensation when there has been a manifest wrong done? I cannot see how the argument can be applied.

Why, sir, would this be the case between individuals acting as equals? If I had bought one farm of you, and paid a large price for it, a price that turned out to be a losing bargain on my part, and I subsequently seize on another farm, and take it from you, ought I to offset the loss which I made by the first purchase, against the farm secondarily taken? I apprehend no one could approve such a reason; and yet this would be the strongest point of view in which the Senator could put his argument. I do not concede the facts which he puts forth. If he will take the tables of lands already sold, he will find, and that, too, in a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office sent to the Secretary of the Interior, and the accompanying report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that there has been already sold in this identical tract, land for which this Government gave nothing, to the amount of over seven millions of dollars. About seven and a half millions have already been received in that very district of country; and it is now objected to complying with the Indian portion of this treaty, and paying them $500,000 for it, or at the rate of six and a quarter cents per acre.

Then I do not think that in the statistics which the Senator has produced or can produce, he can show in relation to these Indians, and more particularly in relation to this transaction, that his statement is correct, that the Government has already paid for this land more than it will receive. The truth is they paid nothing except what they paid out of another portion of lands belonging to the same Indians, and situated just as those were which they did seize and did take.

Mr. HUNTER. I think the Senator must have misunderstood what I said. I said that taking the whole amount ceded by the Creeks, the United States had paid more for it than they ever were paid in return.

Mr. WALKER. That may be the case, and I will state the reason for it. Take the case of an Indian tribe, the Delawares for instance. They were originally situated in this part of the country. The Government bought them out, and they were removed a little further west, and you gave them a location there. When the whites reached that you buy them out, and remove them further west. When the whites reach that you take it and remove them still further west, and so on, step by step, until you get them west of the Mississippi, buying them out each time and paying them gratuities. It might turn out that if you charged the whole of it to one purchase, it would amount to a great deal more than the Government received; but we know that this is the character of the transactions yearly occurring between the United States and the Indian tribes.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator is mistaken.

This is the whole amount ever bought from them, and this is the whole amount given.

Mr. WALKER. I had a right to infer that the Senator was taking this view of the policy of the Government towards the Indian tribes, when he not only makes that assertion against them, but then makes the broad assertion that the Government has at last given them lands that are far more valuable than any it ever did acquire. Who does not know this? Why, sir, he could instance a dozen tribes in regard to which the same thing took place, that after lands were bought from them from time to time, they may at last be settled on reservations west of the Mississippi, more valuable than the lands the Government has got from them.

But when you propose to buy them out again, what would you do? If you have a reservation a little further along, you will give it to them. It may be valueless when you give it to them, but when the whites come up to it, it will be more valuable, perhaps, than what you previously bought from them. Would this be an argument against paying them for what you had taken without consideration? If so, you have arrived at the period at which not a dollar should ever be appropriated to an Indian tribe; for that they have been a bill of expense to the country everybody knows; that they have been of no use to it everybody knows; that many of the tribes have been a most serious detriment and injury to the settlement of the country, everybody will admit.

But I am speaking of doing justice to this tribe of Indians in this particular, as we have and always have had our relations with them, to pay them for what it is acknowledged and cannot be disputed we did take from them without consideration, and not to bring up now a statement of accounts from the beginning down to the present day, charging everything to the Indians, and saying it is well enough to snatch this from them; it is well enough to convert them into enemies for the purpose of robbing them; it is well enough to make them assume the position of hostiles after they have been our allies and friends, and sign a capitulation by which we deprive them of their country. If it be a good argument in this instance, it will be a good argument against the appropriation of another dollar henceforth and forever to any tribes with which we have had treaty relations.

Mr. President, it is to me a matter of conviction that these Indians are entitled to what I have endeavored to show they are entitled to. My opinion is but the opinion of an individual, and one about as likely to err as anybody, and the older I get the more I am satisfied of it. But, at the same time, while my convictions rest upon me they are generally pretty sincere; and I am sincerely of the opinion that the Indians are entitled at least to an amount to the extent to which the committee has proposed to go. If the Senate think otherwise, be it so.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I shall support the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin; but it is useless to go on to-day. There is not a quorum in the Senate, I think, to enable us to take a vote on the subject, and at this late hour it would be unjust to myself and to the Senate, to enter upon the discussion of it; for although I shall not say much, I want to say it under different auspices from those by which I am surrounded at present. I therefore move to postpone the further consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Until what day?

Several SENATORS. To-morrow.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not want to urge the Senator from Arkansas to go on under circumstances which are adverse; but I am anxious to have the bill disposed of to-day.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and
The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 9, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICKER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from Samuel Casey, the Treasurer of the United States, transmitting copies of his accounts of receipts and disbursements for the Post Office Department, for the year ending 30th June, 1853; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move, with the unanimous consent, that the substitute for the Nebraska-Kansas bill, offered yesterday by the gentleman from Illinois, be ordered to be printed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope that will be done. The motion is one which I myself intended to submit.

Mr. JONES. I make the motion in pursuance of the general understanding of the House, yesterday, when the reading of the substitute was dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection, and the substitute was ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES. Now, I would ask that the Senate bill be also printed. The copies which were printed have all been exhausted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled bills of the following titles; which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

H. R. No. 134. An act for the relief of Fayette Mauzy and Robert G. Ward.

H. R. No. 188. An act for the relief of the heirs of Anthony G. Willis, deceased.

H. R. No. 267. An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Captain William Davis, late commander of the United States transport schooner Eufala.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is a motion to recommit the following bill: "A bill granting lands equally to the several States to aid in the construction of railroads and for the support of schools;" and upon that motion the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HAMILTON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announced that the gentleman from Maryland was entitled to the floor; if he yields for that purpose, the motion can be entertained.

Mr. HAMILTON. I would not, by any course of mine, prevent the disposition of any matter by the House. I will therefore yield the floor to my friend from Illinois.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I submit the motion which I have indicated.

The question was taken on Mr. RICHARDSON's motion; and it was agreed to.

NEBRASKA BILL.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. OLDS in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill "to organize the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska."

Mr. INGERSOLL obtained the floor, and addressed the House during his hour in relation to the foreign policy of the United States. A report of his speech will be found in the Appendix.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER said that the subject of organizing a territorial government for this Territory was introduced in Congress ten years ago. He would prefer that our Government should pursue the policy heretofore pursued towards other Territories, but he was for the principle of this bill, regarding the main feature to be that proviso which repeals the Missouri act of 1820. He claimed for the South equal privileges of rights and occupancy with other parts of the country in the Territories. He referred to the history of the passage of that law, and in the course of his remarks, said southern men agreed, acquiesced in it, for the sake of peace, having been assured that it was to be as a wall beyond which aggressions on southern rights were not to extend. If the compromise had been adhered to by the North, he should be the last man to disturb it. But the North, soon after the passage of the law, disregarded it. In every question that has ever been presented, the anti-slavery men of the North have repudiated the binding efficacy of the compromise of 1820 in the extension of slavery. He further advocated the bill until the expiration of the hour to which he was limited in debate. A report of his speech will be found in the Appendix.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER having concluded—

Mr. WALLEY next obtained the floor, and addressed the House at length in opposition to the Nebraska and Kansas bill. His speech will be found in the Appendix.

Mr. LATHAM obtained the floor.

Mr. KEITT. The gentleman from Massachusetts has been interrupted several times in the course of his speech, and I trust that he may be allowed to proceed for ten minutes further.

[Cries of "Let him go on!" "No, you will break the rule!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no power to let the gentleman from Massachusetts proceed beyond the hour allowed him under the rule.

Mr. HUNT. I hope that the gentleman will be allowed to proceed. He was interrupted, it appears to me, by the consent of the committee, and by the consent of the committee he ought to be allowed ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no power to let the gentleman proceed without the consent of the committee.

Mr. HUNT. I do not appeal to the Chair, but to the committee. I know that the Chair has no power; but as the Chair interrupted the gentleman from Massachusetts, I think that it is an argument with the committee why he should be allowed to proceed further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is mistaken; the Chair did not interrupt the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HUNT. I heard you say frequently, "Will the gentleman give way to such and such gentleman?" That was an interruption. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. With the permission of the gentleman from California, I will submit a suggestion. There are a great many gentlemen who desire to speak on this subject. If we have an understanding that we are to speak—

Mr. COBB, (in his seat.) To nine o'clock to-night. [Great Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. If we hold our session to a late hour to-night, gentlemen can go home and get their dinners, while those who wish to speak can stay here and have an opportunity to do so. They will at all times have audiences.

Mr. HUNT. I shall submit to no dictation; and I trust that the committee will go on according to parliamentary law. [Applause.]

Mr. LATHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have here prepared, a speech upon the claim of California to what is commonly known as the "civil fund." I am perfectly aware that the House is deeply anxious to hear only those persons who want to speak upon the Nebraska bill. I do not propose to consume at this time the attention of the House upon a question of vital importance alone to my people and State. I have frequently read my speech myself, and am pretty well satisfied with it, Mr. Chairman, [laughter,] and I do not care about reading it to empty seats. [Laughter.] I therefore respectfully ask of the House to permit me to print it, and when printed, I respectfully ask of all the members, as I have thus obliged them, to oblige me by reading it. [Great laughter, and cries of "Agreed!" "That's right!"]

Mr. ENGLISH obtained the floor.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania. I move that the committee do now take a recess for two hours.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. WRIGHT. I modify my motion so that it will be that the committee take a recess for one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion will be entertained.

Mr. HUGHES. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. ENGLISH. I do not yield to the motion that the committee do now rise. I only yield to the motion for the taking of a recess of one hour.

Mr. HUNT. I demand tellers on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. HUGHES. If the motion for a recess be put, I insist on the right to submit mine, that the committee do now rise.

Mr. COX. The gentleman has not the floor to make his motion.

Mr. WRIGHT. I withdraw my motion that the committee take a recess.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is still on the floor.

Mr. ENGLISH addressed the committee, taking the ground that under the Nebraska bill, as it came from the Senate, slavery can have no legal existence in the Territory, unless a Legislature favorable thereto shall be chosen by the people; secondly, that slavery cannot exist there; and thirdly, that the bill is just to all sections of the country, and is in strict conformity with the genius of our republican institutions. [His speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. COX obtained the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. I rise to what I deem a privileged question. There is no quorum present, and, under the circumstances, can the committee continue in session longer?

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. KEITT in the chair.) The gentleman from Kentucky is upon the floor.

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman, if his question be a privileged one.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the question is not a privileged one.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I would ask the Chair, whether he decides that it is in order for the House to remain in session when no quorum is present?

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in committee, considering the Nebraska-Kansas bill. The Chair does not know that there is no quorum present.

Mr. COX. As there has been a speech just made on the side of the question which I desire to advocate, I will yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SIMMONS.] I will follow him, and promise to do so to-night. I yield to the gentleman, if it be the pleasure of the committee, with the understanding that he shall now proceed, and that I follow him this evening.

Mr. WHEELER. I object.

Mr. WASHBURN. Does the Chair overrule the point of order which I made?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does.

Mr. WASHBURN. Then I take an appeal from that decision of the Chair.

Mr. CLINGMAN. There is no privileged question in committee.

The CHAIRMAN. So the Chair decides.

Mr. WHEELER. I object to the farming out of the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has yielded the floor to the gentleman from New York. No privileged question can be entertained in committee, and the gentleman from New York will now proceed.

Mr. SIMMONS. I claim the floor to speak an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. WHEELER. For one I will not stay in the House where such decisions are made.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want every moment of my time.

Mr. SIMMONS argued that the Missouri-compromise is a contract, a binding law, and which the courts would be bound to hold against the action of Congress, much to the mortification of gentlemen of both Houses, unless he had read law for thirty years to no purpose. He likewise spoke against the policy of repealing the Missouri act.

Mr. COX, while he declared that quiet should be given to the country by the passage of this bill, yet he did not feel that his northern friends who oppose it are unpatriotic. He referred to historical documents to show that the North never regarded the Missouri act of 1820 as a compact. Therefore, the charge of the South violating a compact came with a bad grace from the North.

Mr. DAVIS, of Rhode Island, said that, whether the bill should pass or not, the effects already produced in arousing agitation on the question of slavery were such as could not be avoided. The agitation against that institution was not now confined to that class which had so often been stigmatized as fanatics, but had extended already to men of business in the North, and even to the emigrants, who are manifesting their natural opposition to slavery. He contended that slavery is inconsistent with true democratic principles, and earnestly opposed the repeal of the Missouri compromise.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, said that the excitement which this bill had produced is rapidly giving way to sober reason, which leads to right conclusions. He held to non-intervention in the local affairs of the Territories, including slavery. As to the Missouri law of 1820, there was no compact about it. It was a mere law, repealable at the pleasure of Congress.

[These speeches will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. BALL next obtained the floor.

Mr. LETCHER. Will the gentleman yield to a motion that the committee rise?

[Cries of "No!" "No!" all over the Hall.]

Mr. BALL. If the committee desire to rise, I have no objection.

Mr. LETCHER. I make that motion.

[Cries of "No!" "No!" and "Don't rise."]

Mr. LETCHER. It is now eight o'clock, and we have been here long enough.

Mr. WHEELER. I demand tellers upon the motion that the committee rise.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. VAIL, and Jones of Louisiana, appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 46, noes 56; no quorum voting.

[Cries of "Call the roll!"]

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted, the Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule is imperative. When the committee finds itself without a quorum the roll must be called.

Mr. STEPHENS. I call for the reading of the rule upon that subject.

The Clerk read the 126th rule, which is as follows:

"Whenever the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, or the Committee of the Whole House finds itself without a quorum, the Chairman shall cause the roll to be called, and thereupon the committee shall rise, and the Chairman shall report the names of the absentees to the House, which shall be entered on the Journal."

The CHAIRMAN. Under that rule the Chair rules that the order is peremptory, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called.

The committee then rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman (Mr. OLDS) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the bill of the House (No. 236) to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, and having found itself without a quorum, had caused the roll to be called, and the names of the absentees to be noted, and had further directed him to report the facts to the House, with the names of the absentees.

The absentees are as follows:

Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Wiley Allen, Appleton, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Benton, Bissell, Bliss, Bocoek, Brooks, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chase, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchill, Clingman, Cobb, Cook, Craig, Cullom, Cumming, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dent, De Wit, Dick, Dickinson, Disney, Dunham, Edmonds, Edmundson, J. M. Elliott, English, Ewing, Farley, Faulkner, Flager, Franklin, Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Goode, Goodrich, Green, Grey, Grow, Hamilton, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Hendricks, Henn, Hiester, Hill, Hillyer, Howe, Ingersoll, J. Glancy Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, Knox, Kurtz, Lane, Latham, Lilly, Lyon, McCulloch, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Mace, Meacham, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Morgan, Morrison, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Orr, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Pringle, Raddy, Riddle, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchie, Rogers, Sage, Shannon, Simmons, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Sollers, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Siranb, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Upham, Walker, Walley, Warren, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Westbrook, Witte, Hendrick B. Wright, Yates, and Zollcoffer.

The SPEAKER announced that one hundred and ten members (less than a quorum) had answered to their names.

Mr. SAGE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken upon Mr. SAGE's motion, and decided in the negative—yeas 40, nays 66; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Belcher, Benson, Bugg, Chandler, Corwin, Crocker, Cullom, Cutting, Dean, Drum, Edgerton, Edmonds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Fenton, Harrison, Haven, Hillyer, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Letcher, Macey, Maurice, Middlesworth, Milson, Murray, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Puryear, Russell, Sapp, Seymour, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, and Wade—40.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Ball, Bell, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Curtis, Dawson, Dowdell, Dunbar, Eddy, Florence, Greenwood, Sampson W. Harris, Henn, Hibbard, Houston, Johnson, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Lamb, Lindsey, Lindsay, Macdonald, McDougall, Maxwell, May, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Reese, Richardson, Robbins, Rowe, Ruffin, Seward, Shaw, Shower, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walsh, and Witte—66.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move a call of the House.

Mr. SAGE. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STRATTON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SAGE. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and decided in the negative—yeas 32, nays 69; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benson, Bugg, Chandler, Corwin, Crocker, Cullom, Cutting, Dean, Dick, Drum, Edgerton, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Fenton, Harrison, Haven, Howe, Hunt, David T. Jones, Letcher, Middlesworth, Milson, Murray, Norton, Parker, Russell, Seymour, Gerrit Smith, Stratton, Nathaniel G. Taylor, and Wade—32.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Ball, Bell, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craig, Curtis, Dawson, Dowdell, Dunham, Eddy, Florence, Greenwood, Sampson W. Harris, Henn, Hibbard, Houston, Johnson, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Lamb, Lindsey, Lindsay, Macdonald, McDougall, Maxwell, May, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Preston, Reese, Richardson, Robbins, Rowe, Ruffin, Sapp, Seward, Shaw, Shower, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Alexander H. Stephens, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walsh, Warren, Tappan Wentworth, and Witte—69.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question then recurred upon the motion that there be a call of the House.

Mr. BELL. I ask the House to allow me to make a single statement. As there seems to be some difficulty about adjourning, I would much prefer going on with my speech, if the House will again go into committee.

Mr. BOYCE. I move, then, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order while there is no quorum present. The Chair knows of no way by which the House can accomplish its object without a quorum being present.

Mr. STEPHENS. How many members answered to their names upon the vote to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. One hundred and one.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I hope the Chair will ascertain whether there is a quorum in the House; and then we shall know whether the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole can be submitted or not.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to count the House, and announced that one hundred and fourteen members (less than a quorum) were present.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I must then insist upon my motion for a call of the House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Have the yeas and nays been ordered?

The SPEAKER. They have, and the House must vote upon the motion by yeas and nays, unless the gentleman from Illinois withdraws the motion.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 78, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Ball, Bell, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Carpenter, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Craig, Curtis, Dawson, Dean, Dunbar, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmonds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Florence, Greenwood, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Lamb, Latham, Lindsey, Macdonald, McDougall, Macey, Mattoon, Maxwell, May, Mayall, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Preston, Reese, Richardson, Robbins, Rowe, Ruffin, Sapp, Seward, Shaw, Shower, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, George W. Smith, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walsh, Warren, Tappan Wentworth, and Witte—78.

NAYS—Messrs. Benson, Bugg, Chandler, Corwin, Cullom, Cutting, Dick, Drum, Fenton, Harrison, Haven, Howe, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Letcher, Lindsey, Maurice, Middlesworth, Milson, Murray, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Puryear, Russell, Sage, Gerrit Smith, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Tracy, Upham, Wade, and Elihu B. Washburne—34.

So the House ordered that there should be a call of the House.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. There is a quorum present, lacking one.

Mr. CULLOM. The gentleman from Ohio desires to proceed with his remarks this evening. At their conclusion we can adjourn.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the House do now adjourn; and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

[Cries of "No!" "Withdraw the motion?"]

Mr. WHEELER. I shall not withdraw it.

The question was then taken on Mr. CULLOM's motion; and it was agreed to.

So all further proceedings in the call were dispensed with.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. On the vote on the last motion there wanted two of a quorum. The Chair will, however, ascertain if there is a quorum now present.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. What has become of the motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks pardon. The motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WHEELER,] that the House do now adjourn, is pending.

The question was then put on Mr. WHEELER's motion; and it was decided in the negative.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to count the House; and announced that there were 128 members in their seats.

A quorum being now present, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session, (Mr. OLDS in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee found itself without a quorum, a motion was pending that the committee rise.

Mr. LETCHER. I withdraw that motion.

Mr. BALL. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be very little disposition in the committee to hear me, and it is suggested that I had better print my remarks.

[Cries of "Oh, no!" and "Go on!"]

Mr. BALL. Well, I will proceed. I regret exceedingly that the committee was detained by the motion of my friend from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] that the committee should rise for the purpose of adjourning.

Mr. B. said he was uncompromisingly opposed to that portion of the bill which proposed to operate as a repeal of the Missouri compromise of 1820. He considered it a great wrong and outrage to be perpetrated on the people of the North, and as threatening to disturb the peace of the whole country. [His speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, obtained the floor.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If my friend from Virginia will yield me the floor, I will move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. BAYLY. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I submit the motion to rise.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Will the gentleman allow me a few moments before the committee rises?

Mr. BAYLY. I will do so, if it does not come out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can make no such arrangement.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Let it be the understanding of the House that it shall not come out of my colleague's time.

Mr. BAYLY. I will yield the floor with pleasure to the gentleman from Georgia now, if I can have my full hour to-morrow.

Mr. STEPHENS. The gentleman can have his full hour in the morning. I do not want to detain the committee many minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent the gentleman from Georgia can proceed.

Mr. DICK. I object.

Mr. STEPHENS. I merely wish to say—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia cannot proceed, since objection is made. The question was then taken on Mr. Richardson's motion; and it was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman (Mr. Olds) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill (No. 236) to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. COX. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to;

And thereupon (at five minutes past ten o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 10, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Navy, communicating information, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, in relation to the dock, basin, and railway at Pensacola; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT presented the petition of James T. V. Thompson, of Missouri, praying indemnity for losses sustained on his contracts with officers of the United States Army; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WELLER. I ask leave to present joint resolutions passed by the Legislature of California, relative to the lands donated to that State by the General Government. I ask that these resolutions be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; and I may be allowed to invite the special attention of that committee to the subject. They will see at once, from an examination of the question, that some legislation is necessary in order to protect the common school fund of that State. Whether the legislation proposed by the Legislature of California will be a correct remedy for that, I do not know; but I trust the committee will properly investigate that point. I profess no opinion on the subject.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GWIN presented resolutions of the Legislature of California, asking the passage of a law for the establishment of certain post routes in that State; which were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALLEN presented a petition of inhabitants of Newport, Rhode Island, praying the reduction of ocean postage to two cents for a single letter; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. MORTON presented the memorial of James Herron and others, praying a grant of the right of way through the lands of the United States for the construction of a plank or railroad from some point on the Perdido river to the bay of Pensacola, in the State of Florida; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BENJAMIN presented the petition of Nathaniel M. Woolverton, praying the confirmation of his title to land in the Ouachita land district in Louisiana; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Also, a petition of citizens of the United States, professing the Jewish religion, praying that measures may be taken to secure to American citizens of every religious creed, residing or traveling abroad, their civil and religious rights; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. NORRIS presented a letter from the Commissioner of Public Buildings, communicating information of the destruction of a portion of the Long Bridge, by fire, on the 8th of May, and asking an appropriation for the repair of the same; which was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. SLIDELL presented a memorial of citizens of the parish of Morehouse, in the State of Louisiana, remonstrating against any legislation, on the part of Congress, that will interfere with the preemption rights of the settlers on the Bastrop grant, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. BELL presented the petition of Alexander R. McKee, late of Kentucky, now of the State of Tennessee. The petitioner states that he is the holder, by purchase, of a certificate of lands, issued by John T. Mason, on behalf of the Governor of Texas and Coahuila, dated 21st June, 1834, amounting to about forty-eight thousand acres; and also the holder, by transfer, of a similar certificate for the same amount of land, which lands, having been conveyed by Samuel Swartwout to William Young, President of the Mount Savage Iron and Coal Company, in trust for the use and benefit of the United States, were sold by order of the Solicitor of the Treasury for the benefit of the United States. The petitioner alleges, that at the time the Solicitor of the Treasury advertised said certificates for sale, it was not stated, as was done after the purchase, that said certificates were in the hands of General Rusk, of Texas, who states, in writing, that the same are not in his hands, but were delivered by him to General John T. Mason before his death. The petitioner further states that he has called upon the Solicitor of the Treasury for them, but he is unable to give any information relative thereto, alleging that the same have never been on file in his office. The petitioner therefore prays that Congress will pass an act authorizing him to locate copies of said original certificates on the lands acquired from Texas by virtue of the compromise act with said State, as the said lands, on the emanation of said certificates, were subject to entry by them. The petition was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORTON, from the Committee on Agriculture, to whom was referred a memorial of the Maryland State Agricultural Society, praying the establishment of a national agricultural school in the District of Columbia, submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. EVANS, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to whom was referred the petition of the legal representatives of John Shly, praying the extension of a patent granted to him on the 27th of October, 1836, for an improvement in the machine for picking or breaking wool, and ginned or seedless cotton, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill to extend a patent heretofore granted to John Shly, of the State of Georgia; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Captain Charles G. Merchant, of the United States Army, praying the settlement of his accounts in the commissary department, on just and equitable principles, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Thomas B. Eastland, praying that he may be credited with an amount disallowed in the settlement of his accounts as quartermaster in the late war with Mexico; and that he may be compensated for services performed which were not in the line of his duty, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORTON, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom was referred the petition of John W. Kelly, praying indemnification for loss sustained in consequence of the abrogation of a contract by the Post Office Department, for the transportation of the mails, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom were referred documents in relation to the claim of John Makin, a pilot, to salvage or compensation for relieving the United States frigate Saranac, when in distress off the harbor of Savannah, Georgia, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. BRIGHT, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of the inhabitants of the reserved township in Gibson county, in the State of Indiana," approved August 11, 1842; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

THE GUANO TRADE.

Mr. MORTON. I am instructed by the Committee on Agriculture, to whom were referred the resolutions of the Legislature of Maryland relative to guano, to make a report thereon, accompanied by the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture be discharged from the further consideration of the resolutions of the General Assembly of Maryland, in relation to the sale of guano in that and other States of the Union; and that the same be transmitted to the President of the United States.

Mr. PRATT. I would ask the Senator to have the resolution considered at this time.

Mr. MORTON. I hope there will be no objection to its consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. CLAYTON. I ask for the reading of the report of the Committee on Agriculture.

The report was accordingly read; from which it appears that, while the committee admit the great importance of guano as a fertilizing agent to the agricultural interests of the country, and agree as to the policy of doing away with all monopoly in its sale, yet, as it is an article owned exclusively by the Government of Peru, Congress can afford no relief in the premises. The resolutions contemplate the action of the General Government by treaty, with that of Peru, and as the treaty-making power is vested by the Constitution in the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the committee recommend that the resolutions committed to them be referred to the President of the United States, to take such steps as he may deem advisable, towards accomplishing the wishes and views of the General Assembly of Maryland.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President, perhaps it may not be amiss to state now, in reference to this subject, which is a very interesting one to the agriculturists of the United States, that the Executive Department has heretofore exerted itself to procure a treaty with Peru, placing our trade in guano, and in other respects, on the footing of the most favored nations. While I was in the State Department, I made efforts to have such a treaty concluded; and, after a very long negotiation with the Peruvian Minister here, Mr. Tirado, we did, at last, succeed in making a treaty, which I hoped would have accomplished the object which these petitioners have in view. That treaty was sent to the Senate, and confirmed, I believe, without any opposition. It was then transmitted to the Peruvian Government; but, under the influence, as I believe, of the British capitalists, who are interested in the guano of the Chincha Islands, the treaty was defeated. The Government of Peru refused to confirm it, and indeed the authorities there became so much incensed that they recalled Mr. Tirado, and sent a successor to fill his place here.

I think the facts in regard to the subject may be briefly and correctly stated thus: When Peru achieved her independence, she did it by the aid of British capitalists, who loaned her some twenty millions. That became her revolutionary debt. To secure that debt, the Government of Great Britain, at the solicitation of these capitalists, made a treaty with Peru, by which they were to have one half the net proceeds of the Peruvian guano sold by them under the authority of the Peruvian Government, both to British and to American purchasers. Well, sir, the understanding and bargain, as I understood it myself, was, that these capitalists were to employ the shipping to transmit the guano to market; and they were to be allowed, on settlement with Peru, the net proceeds of freights, insurance, and commissions. Thus they acquired the exclusive carrying trade, to a very great extent at least, in this article. You will perceive, from the statement which I have made, sir, how deeply these capitalists are interested. I have not yet learned that that debt has been paid. If they can retain the power which they originally had over the subject, doubtless they would be willing to advance the price as long as the Government of Peru shall choose to ask it.

Under these circumstances, the committee is perfectly right in saying that Congress can do nothing. The whole matter is properly referable, as the report proposes to refer it, to the Executive Department. I do not know what the Executive contemplates, but I do suppose that until the influence of these capitalists can be in some way subverted or controlled, we shall never be able to participate in the guano carrying trade.

The resolution reported by the committee was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL SCHOOLS.

Mr. PRATT. There was a report, to which my attention was not called at the time, made by the honorable Senator from Florida, [Mr. MORRIS], from the Committee on Agriculture, in relation to the establishment of an agricultural school. The report was made on petitions which I had the honor to present from agricultural societies in the United States, as well that of Maryland as of other States, asking for the establishment of such a school.

My object is to ask that the consent of the Senate be given to printing an extra number of copies of that report. It is an important subject; and though I suppose there will hardly be anything done this session of Congress on it, it is right that public attention should be called to it. Every one will observe that all the great national sources of industry have received the attention of this Government except that of agriculture. We have appropriated millions towards the interests of commerce, and towards every other of the great industrial interests of the country, while nothing has been done for the assistance of agriculture. My desire is to have two thousand extra copies of the report printed, so that the subject may go to the public. I have read the report; it is very ably made; and I am sure that it would be of great interest to the agricultural people of the United States. Therefore, I submit the motion that two thousand extra copies of it be printed.

The PRESIDENT. That motion will go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. RUSK. I suppose it can be considered by unanimous consent?

The motion was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

PATENT OFFICE AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

The PRESIDENT. The following order stands first on the order of business, if there are no further reports or resolutions to be presented:

Ordered. That there be printed, for the use of the Senate, thirty-seven thousand five hundred additional copies of the agricultural portion of the Patent Office report, with the plates accompanying the same, two thousand five hundred of which shall be for the use of the Patent Office.

Mr. HUNTER. Does not that go to the Committee on Printing?

The PRESIDENT. It has been reported from that committee.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope it will lie over.

Mr. BRIGHT. I hope it will be passed over. I believe the Senator from Delaware has some objection to it.

The PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the resolution will go over.

Mr. STUART. I hope that resolution will be considered now. There may be some reason, but I do not really see why we ought not to take it up at this time. At the last Congress, I do not know how it was with other gentlemen, but I suffered great inconvenience from the fact that no printing of these documents took place until after the adjournment of Congress. The whole Congress was spent in determining who should be printer, and the result was that the document was not printed until the vacation. It works a great inconvenience, and, besides, a very great additional expense to the transportation of the mails of the country. I hope that the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the resolution now.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia moves to postpone the consideration of the resolution until to-morrow.

Mr. GWIN. I hope it will be considered now. The question is, whether we are to have the agricultural portion of the report.

The motion to postpone was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I desire to move an amendment to the resolution. It is to add an additional number of copies for the use of the Patent Office. That office requires a greater number; and I therefore move to amend the resolution, by increasing the number to be given to the Patent Office, twenty-five hundred.

Mr. RUSK. The resolution now proposes to give twenty-five hundred.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, sir; and I move to amend by giving twenty-five hundred more.

Mr. RUSK. I would inquire of the honorable Senator from Alabama, if that is offered at the request of the Patent Office?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Certainly; the object is to allow that office a sufficient number for their use.

Mr. TOOMBS. I am decidedly of the opinion that it is wholly unnecessary to waste the public money by printing this document at all. It is an unnecessary expense, which is of advantage to no one. It is simply a compilation from agricultural newspapers, and we are ruining the country by unnecessary expense. My opinion is, that not one copy of it ought to be printed. This system of printing has got to be a very important branch of the Government. We go on printing the miserable stuff that is reported to us from the Patent Office; and the printing now costs as much as the judicial department of the Government, and almost as much as the legislative. It ought to be stopped. It is a book which nobody wants. As to mine, I am willing to give them away whenever they may be called for.

Mr. RUSK, and others. I will take them.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This matter was referred to the Committee on Printing; and I have offered this amendment at the desire of the Patent Office. That office really wants a much larger number than the committee propose to allow. The head of the Department set forth in a communication to us, various reasons why they should have a larger number than the amount which I propose to allow, for the purpose of distribution. I have, however, been instructed by the committee to offer the amendment which I now submit.

It seems to me, that as it is the settled policy of the Government to publish works of this kind, it is but an act of justice to the Commissioner of Patents, to allow him the number that he deems necessary for distribution throughout the country. The Commissioner of Patents asked for a greater number of copies, but we thought twenty-five hundred would be amply sufficient. I trust the Senate will agree to the amendment.

Mr. WALKER. I hope the amendment will be agreed to, and that we will give the additional number to the Patent Office. I have heard a former Commissioner of Patents complain of the limited number which he had; and he addressed to me a communication, in which he represented that the desire of the Patent Office was to bring itself into connection and communication with as many of the agriculturists of the country as possible; that he derived very great facilities from this work; that he desired to extend that intercourse with the agriculturists, and that the limited number of Patent Office reports which were given to him, did not enable him to do so to the extent he desired.

Upon one occasion when he desired more, I know not to how many Senators application was made, but he made application to me for the loan of a portion of mine. I made him the loan of one hundred and seventy-four copies; and I regret to say that that was the last I ever saw of them. It was not the present, but a former Commissioner. I have no doubt in my own mind that he made as good a use of them as I could have done; but I can very well see how it would advance the agricultural interests of the country for that Bureau to be brought into intercourse with as many agriculturists of the country as possible through the distribution of this report.

Mr. CLAYTON. I am decidedly for printing, and for disseminating it among the agricultural community. I represent, in part, an agricultural district of the country, and I know, through communications with farmers of my State, that they take more interest in this Patent Office report than in all the other documents published together, and that they would feel more deeply now the deprivation of the report with which you have heretofore supplied them, than the deprivation of any other document which you publish.

Sir, I do not pretend now—it would not be proper—to go into a dissertation on the advantages which an agriculturist may derive from reading this report. Among these advantages, however, this is apparent: They see communications made by farmers from all portions of the United States to the Commissioner of Patents published for their information. They are enabled to compare them with their own observations, and they communicate in return their information to others. I shall vote with great pleasure for the printing of the highest number, believing that there is not a single document here which does as much real practical good as this very Patent Office report.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I trust we shall print a large number of this report. I am very well convinced that there is no document sent to my State, which has done more good than the one in question. I am not surprised at my friend from Georgia speaking on the subject as he does. The State of Georgia, I believe, has carried on agriculture to such a perfection that no new lights can be thrown by the Patent Office reports on them. [Laughter.] But Florida, sir, which combines all the agricultural products of the country, fine crops of sugar, of cotton, of lumber, of rice, and thousands of other things, which I cannot enumerate here, sees the propriety and necessity of a document of this character; and with all that I get legitimately, and all that I can buy, beg, borrow, or have stolen for me, [laughter,] I cannot send off enough of these documents for the use of my State.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have no objection to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, though the amount proposed is very considerable; but I rise more for the purpose of claiming the benefit of the offer of the honorable Senator from Georgia, than anything else. I shall claim, under the offer which he has made, being the first claimant on the floor, his pro rata share of this branch of the Patent Office report. The Senator then must say, of course, that I am entitled to them.

But, Mr. President, I think, in making the order, we should direct who is to print whatever we may order. There is some difficulty as to whether the two parts of the Patent Office report are embraced in one order for printing. The Senate originally ordered the printing of the first part, as I understand. I think, therefore, it would be better to amend the resolution in such a way as to give the Senate printer the printing of this branch of the Patent Office report.

Mr. BELL. Mr. President, I suppose if we continue this practice of printing books for distribution, it is hardly worth while to stop it at this point; but I really think some honorable gentlemen on this floor ought to give some explanation of their views to satisfy gentlemen who have doubts on the subject as to the power given by the Constitution to appropriate money for the purpose of printing works for the agricultural interests or any other. I am utterly surprised to see certain gentlemen sit quietly, and silently listening to this proposition for printing this work, and not raising their voices against it.

Of course I shall not pursue the consideration of the subject any further; but I think it is due to the body that Senators should at this epoch in the Government, when we have the opportunity of bringing back the practice of it to strict constitutional principles, to explain to us how, under the powers given to us by the Constitution, we can make an appropriation for this object.

Mr. BAYARD. I take it for granted, from the line of remarks of the honorable Senator from Tennessee, that it is a reflection on the opinions of those who have different views from him on the subject to which he alludes. Now, sir, I have never yet heard that it is denied that there can be no implied powers whatever, under the Constitution. The great difficulty connected with the question of construction—and it was raised early in the history of the Government in reference to the Bank of the United States, and the subject was then exhausted on both sides, as any gentleman will see if he will take the trouble to examine it—is as to the extent of the implication. The powers that are necessary and proper in order to carry on the functions of the Government, and to carry out those purposes for which this Government was organized, are properly impliable under the terms of the Constitution; but the question is, what are those powers so implied and necessary? In the application of the rule, those who are supposed to aggrandize the Federal Government at the expense of the powers of the States, extend them; those who are unwilling to extend those powers, and think that the safety of the Union rests upon the limitation of the power to the utmost extent that it can be, consistently with the objects for which the General Government is organized, restrict them.

• I think, therefore, it was hardly worth while, on the part of the honorable Senator from Tennessee, to bring that question into the discussion on this subject—which is really one of very little moment—to operate in reference to other questions which are to come before the body.

Mr. BELL. The Senator will excuse me. Really, I did not mean to throw any embarrassment in the way of the Senator. I beg his pardon.

Mr. BAYARD. I assure the Senator that it is not embarrassing me. There will be no difficulty whatever; I can answer for my own opinions. I am aware that in the application of the principles of the Constitution to any particular case that may come before me, whether those of implication or not, I may err; but I should never hesitate to express my opinion in this case or any other. In this particular case, I have no doubt, from the organization of this body, from the organization of the Government, the power is implied, and, indeed, may be deduced by strict analogy from the settled practice of the Government, which has been without question or opposition. Such a consideration would there have its weight, and especially is it so when it does not arise from single precedents, but from an unquestioned practice.

Mr. TOOMBS. The honorable Senator from Indiana addressed a remark to me, to which I will reply. I should be very glad to get him to aid me in putting a stop to this unnecessary and absurd expenditure. I offered to give my Patent Office reports to any body who wanted them, but I shall not give them to him or any other Senator to aid in a profligate and useless expenditure of the public money, as I consider it.

Now, upon the question of power to which the Senator from Tennessee has referred, I deny it. I say that it is no part of the constitutional power of the Senate or House of Representatives to be spreading information, as the Senator from Delaware says, among the people in regard to their business. In the first place, these bodies are very incompetent to do that. If I wanted to know how to manage an agricultural interest, I should not come to the Senate to learn how to raise cotton or any other product. I should go somewhere else.

As to people wanting them, I suppose that they want any other valuable book; and, upon this principle, why not print valuable books? And, indeed, there are others of much greater value to the morals and religion of the people. Why not print the New Testament for them? It relates to a subject which is as far above the material interests of society as the things of eternity are greater than those of time. Why not print the Bible, and other valuable works upon the subject of morality and religion.

The Congress of the United States has exhausted, in my judgment, its clear and legitimate powers, when it has printed such documents as are necessary to inform the two Houses of Congress, to enable them to proceed properly in the public business; and they get the power to go further nowhere else than from a latitudinarian construction of the Constitution. I know that the argument for the printing of this Patent Office report, is put on the ground that it is for the interest of the farmers; that it benefits them. This is told to them while we are putting on them the expense of printing it. As to the relative products of our younger sister, Florida, and Georgia, I have not a word to say. Georgia speaks for herself; she needs no compliments from me; there she stands, and when the Senator from Florida speaks of the production of the States, and the benefit to them flowing from this, I think that my honorable friend from North Carolina would find the means in his State of doing more good than has resulted from all the Patent Office reports which have been printed from the beginning of the Government until now.

But, sir, the position of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. CLAYTON] is fundamentally wrong. If we had the power, it would be wrong to exercise it. It does not effect the object; and I repeat, it is not within the legitimate power of this Government, nor is it competent for us to attempt to instruct the people upon their own business. Where do you get the power to do it? By what authority? Is it in the Constitution, though I believe nobody goes there now? It is even ridiculed by my friend from Tennessee. But the reason given for the printing of these agricultural reports, and spreading them among the people is, that the agriculturists are a large class of people and therefore this is for their benefit. But, sir, this printing made by the Congress of the United States, amounting now to three or four hundred thousand dollars, is more for the benefit of the printers than the farmers.

One half of these reports, which are printed by the two Houses, are never read by any body. They are found everywhere scattered all over the United States, and the people who are real agriculturists know too much about farming to look upon them with anything but contempt. It is those who know least about the subject that generally write the books. I never knew a successful farmer who bothered himself to write any. But you may get a schemer, a man who is not a practical farmer, and he is writing all the time for the agricultural papers. I believe that is almost the universal rule. I am an agriculturist; I was brought up on a farm, and I have noticed how these things are.

But there is still another objection to this practice. By printing these works you lumber up your mails, and are departing from the salutary system of making the Post Office Department pay its expenses. This is one of the means by which we have done that; and it is for the benefit of the commercial interests, the newspapers, and those who have power here beyond their numbers. The practice ought to be stopped. It is not a measure so much for the benefit of agriculture as for the benefit of printers; therefore, on the question of power, and expediency, and rightfulness, I am opposed to it.

Mr. CLAYTON. What the honorable Senator from Georgia has said shows the truth of one thing. I think it is apparent, from the tone of his remarks, that the copies of the Patent Office report which have been in his possession, have not been read. The honorable Senator speaks of them, without having read them, as being contemptible. Sir, I would not undertake to put my judgment in opposition to that of the Senator on such a subject; but I have read a variety of these reports with great interest and instruction. I have found much in them to interest me.

Mr. TOOMBS. Let me ask the Senator, if he has looked at the last volume but one, I think it was, in which the leading article and opening one, was to show how to find water by hazel switches? [Laughter.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Exactly, and the honorable Senator thinks, because he has found some one article, on some one page, of some report, which he believes he can turn into ridicule, on a subject that he does not profess to understand or know anything of, he is to condemn the whole volume, and not only that volume, but all others. I submit whether it is a fair mode of estimating any work.

But, sir, a word in regard to the honorable gentleman's constitutional argument. He tells us that he cannot find any authority in this body to print anything, except for the information of the body. Now, let us test it for a moment. Let us see how correct the honorable gentleman's views of constitutional law upon this subject are. Now, according to his argument, we have no power to print anything for the information of anybody but our noble selves. Well, sir, what are we to say of the wisdom of all the fathers of the Republic, and of all the men who have been in Congress ever since its formation, who have had printed annually thousands and tens of thousands of copies of the President's message, and accompanying documents? Was that for the information of members of Congress? No, sir, it was evidently for the information of the people. We have exceeded the power of communicating information to the people ab urbe condita. I have heard it questioned before; but, to my knowledge, there have never been more than two or three gentlemen entertaining the peculiar opinions of the honorable Senator from Georgia on this subject. Sir, have we any power to print, for the information of the people of the country, reports from important committees which are made here, and extra numbers of these reports? Are we not constantly in the habit of printing them? Does anybody doubt our constitutional power to do it? The other House does the same thing.

As to the value of this volume, it is sufficient to say that the agricultural community place a very different estimate on it from that which is fixed on it by the honorable Senator from Georgia. I know that the agricultural societies in the region of country which I represent, and I believe all the agricultural societies of the United States, consider this an important auxiliary to them in the great object that they have in view, of diffusing valuable information among the most important class of all our countrymen—the bread-growers of the country. I beg pardon for taking up so much time of the Senate on such a subject.

Mr. DAWSON. Before the question is put upon this resolution, I desire to offer an amendment. I want to put the question upon a proper footing. This is an attempt on our part to make an expenditure for the benefit of the land States. Well, sir, whether we have power to do this may lead to a considerable doubt; but, for the purpose of putting it on its right footing, as it is a land question, I move to add at the end of the resolution the words:

And that the cost thereof be paid out of the proceeds of the public lands.

I do it for this reason: These books are to be divided among all the people of the States, and all the people of the States are entitled to the public lands, and consequently the proceeds of the public lands should be applied to their benefit in this respect. The expense ought to be paid out of the common fund of the country. It is for the benefit of agriculturists. Then it ought to be general in its terms; and, as all have a common interest in the common lands, let it be paid out of them. It seems to me to be all right. I therefore offer the amendment which I have mentioned.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama to increase the number given to the Patent Office.

The amendment was agreed to by a vote, on a division of—yes twenty-six, noes not counted.

Mr. DAWSON. Now I offer my amendment, to add: "And that the cost thereof be paid out of the proceeds of the public lands."

Mr. STUART. Is that in order, Mr. President? I make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT. That is a question for the Senate to decide.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I suggest to my friend from Georgia, that such a proposition as this would have to pass through both Houses; and therefore is scarcely proper for a mere Senate resolution. He had better withdraw it.

Mr. DAWSON. I desire to have fair legislation. I wanted to tack the amendment on for the benefit of my colleague, who is an agriculturist. [Laughter.] But I withdraw it.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. WEBSTER, his Secretary, announcing that he had approved and signed an act to change the name of the bark Albeona to Mount Vernon.

INDIGENT INSANE BILL VETO.

Mr. HUNTER. One o'clock has arrived, and this was the day fixed upon for the consideration of the bill which has been vetoed by the President. I move, therefore, to postpone all prior orders, for the purpose of taking up that bill.

Mr. BELL. Would it not be as well, and really economical in point of time, to finish the Indian appropriation bill, now that we are upon it? I think there would be really a loss of time in postponing it. Now that we have it up, we had better dispose of it. I believe there is but one proposition to be decided upon it. At all events, I take it for granted we can finish it to-day. The honorable Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] who has the floor upon the other bill, has no objection to its postponement. I think there will be a propriety in continuing the discussion on the Indian bill until we can get clear of it. I make that suggestion, and hope the Senate will see the propriety of it.

Mr. BADGER. As far as I am concerned, I should prefer to adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee, go on with the Indian appropriation bill, and see the end of it, and then proceed to the consideration of the other bill.

Mr. HUNTER. So far as I am concerned, if I were to consult my mere personal convenience, of course I should like to take up the appropriation bill and go through with it; but this is the day fixed for the consideration of the bill which has been vetoed, and I feel bound to make the motion which I have made. The Senate can dispose of it as they choose.

Mr. BADGER. I suggest to the Senator from Virginia, and the Senate, that the Indian appropriation bill is the first business in order. I believe I am right.

The PRESIDENT. It is the unfinished business, and therefore, first in order; but the Senator from Virginia moves to postpone all prior orders, for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the bill which has been vetoed. The question is on that motion.

Mr. WELLER called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. RUSK. I shall vote against the postponement of the regular order of the day, which is the Indian appropriation bill, for the purpose of taking up the other. It is evident that the bill which has been vetoed cannot be disposed of to-day. We are to have a lengthy discussion upon it; there is no doubt of that in my mind. All that we could do, therefore, with it, would be to hear one argument to-day, then postpone it to another day; and it would be still in the way of the Indian appropriation bill. I regard it as no disrespect whatever to the President of the United States to postpone it until we can get through with the Indian appropriation bill; and besides, that it would be an act of discourtesy to the honorable Senator from North Carolina, who has the floor, to go on with the bill which has been vetoed, after the intimation he has made; so that I would certainly, even if I were otherwise indifferent, vote against the postponement of the Indian bill for the purpose of taking up the other.

The question being taken by yeas and nays resulted—yeas 13, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Butler, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Gwin, Hunter, Mallory, Mason, Norris, Pettit, Slidell, Weller, Williams, and Wright—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Aitchison, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Brodhead, Brown, Cass, Clay, Clayton, Dawson, Dixon, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Foot, James, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Morton, Pearce, Pratt, Rusk, Shields, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, Wade, and Walker—34.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUNTER. The Indian appropriation bill comes up now, I suppose, as the special order, without a motion.

The PRESIDENT. It does.

The Senate accordingly, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the House bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1855; the pending question being on the amendment reported by Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to insert the following:

To the Creek nation of Indians, in full for all demands against the United States, the sum of $5 000,000, in payment for eight million acres of land at six and a quarter cents per acre, taken from the friendly Creeks, without compensation, by the treaty or capitulation of Fort Jackson, of August 8, 1814.

Mr. HUNTER asked for the yeas and nays on the amendment, and they were ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON. I see that the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. SEBASTIAN] is not here. I know he wishes to address the Senate on that amendment.

Mr. WALKER. I will say to the honorable Senator, that the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs got the floor at the last adjournment, to address the Senate on the subject.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will send for him. He has gone up to the Indian department this morning. He went there in view of the fact, which he understood, that the veto message was to be considered this morning. I presume he has gone there, also, in connection with this very subject. That is my belief.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I met him on his way to the Department as I came up fifteen minutes ago.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, I ask the Senate, will it be proper to proceed with the consideration of this bill under such circumstances? Is it probable that it will be for the benefit of a just, and fair, and enlightened decision of the question?

Mr. RUSK. Will the honorable Senator allow me a moment? It is usual in matters of this sort to pass over the amendment by unanimous consent.

Several SENATORS. Let that be done now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, this amendment will be informally passed by, and the Senate will proceed with the consideration of others.

There was no objection.

Mr. HUNTER. I understand the Committee on Indian Affairs have other amendments. They had better offer them and let us proceed with something.

Mr. GWIN. The chairman of the committee is not here.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is very plain that we cannot proceed with this bill under the circumstances. It has come up unexpectedly. The chairman of the committee is not here, and he has, I imagine, the only other amendments which are to be presented.

Mr. BROWN. If my friend from Arkansas will allow me, I will move to postpone this bill and take up the homestead bill. That is one which we have for a long time desired to consider and dispose of. We seem now to have nothing else to do, and we had better take that up.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall go on with the Indian appropriation bill. I am sorry the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs is not here. I had heard of another amendment, which I supposed the honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WALKER] was to offer. If it be not so, I think we had better proceed.

Mr. JOHNSON. I shall certainly oppose any action of that sort. It may suit the Committee on Finance very well, who have had all their amendments made; but it may not suit very well the Indian service, that the other amendments should be passed by. It seems to me that the bill should be postponed now, as a matter of course. I make a motion, which I think will reach the matter, to reconsider the vote by which the order bringing up the veto message was disposed of for to-day. I am in a position to make that motion, for I voted against the motion to postpone the Indian bill, to allow the veto to be taken up. I move that that vote be reconsidered, and that the veto message consequently be taken up, for we cannot to-day proceed with the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. BROWN. Take up the homestead bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion will be received, but it cannot be considered now. There is other business before the Senate, which must be disposed of before it can be considered.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move, then, to postpone the Indian appropriation bill until to-morrow, with the view of taking up the other.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope it will not be postponed until to-morrow. I submit the question of order, whether the motion to reconsider does not take precedence of all others?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the rule to be this: A motion to reconsider may be made at any time within the period prescribed by the rule; but that motion cannot be considered while other business is pending before the Senate.

Mr. WELLER. I inquire whether it is necessary to move to reconsider that vote at all? The motion was voted down, and the Indian bill has been taken up. It has been under consideration; and, I apprehend, it is in order now, without a motion to reconsider, to move to lay this bill aside, with the view to take up the veto message; and that motion I now make.

Mr. BROWN. We can take up something else. It is not necessary to take that up.

Mr. HUNTER. I propose that, by general consent, we agree, without postponing this, to take the question on the reconsideration. If there is a majority for the reconsideration, and for taking up the veto, we can go on; but if not, by the time that vote is taken, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs may be here.

Mr. JOHNSON. My only reason for pursuing this course is this: The Indian service must be protected here; but it is entirely out of the question to talk about disposing of the Indian appropriation bill under these circumstances. Amendments are yet to be offered from the Committee on Indian Affairs; and we, therefore, cannot proceed with the bill without the chairman. This deference has always been shown to any and every member of this body. I am very well assured of that; and certainly, unexpected business on the part of my colleague, when he had every reason in the world to believe, and, as it were, to know, that the bill would not come up to-day, should not be taken advantage of, and so prevent the offering of what amendments he may have. I then ask the Senate to reconsider the vote by which we have disposed of the veto message for to-day, so that it may come up in its regular order.

Mr. BADGER. I will submit a motion, which I think will be more appropriate, to enable us to get along with these matters, and which will take precedence over that of the Senator from California. If this bill be postponed until to-morrow, we could not get it before the Senate again to-day. I suggest, therefore, that it lie upon the table, and then, when the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs is in his place, it can be at once taken up without any reconsideration. With that understanding, I submit the motion that the bill lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

DAVID MYERLE.

Mr. BRIGHT. I desire to move the reconsideration of the vote which was taken yesterday on passing the claim of David Myerle. I voted with the majority.

Several SENATORS. Oh, no!

Mr. BRIGHT. Oh, yes! I will state my reasons. That claim has been here for the last six or seven years. I voted against it twice; I voted for it yesterday. I voted for the amendment giving $10,000, believing that that, under the circumstances, was perhaps all that ought to be given; but that proposition failing, I voted for the bill, which appropriates $30,000. I am satisfied that it is too much; and, independent of that, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] has criticised very severely my vote, and those of other gentlemen who voted with me. He expresses no doubt, that if an opportunity is given him, he will be able to show clearly that this is an unjust claim. If he has that in his power, he certainly ought to have an opportunity to exercise it; and I move the reconsideration for the purpose of hearing him, that he may satisfy me that this claim has no justice to sustain it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from Indiana that the bill has been sent to the House of Representatives, and it will be necessary to send for it.

Mr. BRIGHT. I am very sorry that it was sent. Then I move that the Secretary be directed to request the return of the bill.

Mr. HUNTER. There cannot be two motions pending at the same time.

Mr. BRIGHT. I withdraw the motion to reconsider, and ask that a message be sent to the House, requesting the return of the bill.

Mr. GWIN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to direct the Secretary to request the House of Representatives to return the bill.

Mr. BAYARD. I merely wish to express my regret that the Senator from Indiana has thought it necessary to refer to me as severely criticising his action. I dissented from the opinion that the bill should pass. I certainly expressed my own conviction that I was surprised at his vote. The high respect which I have for him, and the general estimate I have formed of his character, would prevent me making any unkind criticism. I was surprised that the bill should be passed without such an examination as the principles involved merited. If it is returned, whether I can devote to it that labor which might be desired, is doubtful; and the reason why I doubt it is this: yesterday, when I made the proposition to postpone the bill, the Senate determined not to postpone it; and I am unwilling to obtrude upon them in reference to the examination of a question connected with a private claim, when I have had sufficient experience already to be satisfied that they are unwilling to listen to any discussion on a private claim, no matter how extensive may be the principles involved in it, or how great the effect of the precedent that is established for the purpose of disbursing money out of the public Treasury. I do not desire, therefore, on a subject on which Senators are unwilling to listen or investigate, but are disposed to vote on faith, to interfere with their views. It is enough for me to make up my own mind, and determine my own course.

Mr. PEARCE. The motion pending is to send to the House of Representatives a request to return the bill to us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, sir.

Mr. PEARCE. I must express the hope that that will not be done. It is rather an unusual proceeding, and, until of late years, was almost unknown to the Senate; and I think it should not be resorted to except upon extraordinary occasions. Now, sir, I agree with the Senator from Delaware, that this bill ought not to have been passed. It struck me that the claim of Mr. Myerle was not one of strict right, and scarcely of strong equity. I look upon it rather as a benevolence. I was not able to bring myself to vote for the payment of the $30,000 proposed. The Senate thought otherwise, after quite as much discussion as we usually have upon a private bill; and I doubt much whether we ought to send to the House of Representatives for the bill, and whether the Treasury of the United States will be very much benefited by the operation. It is rather a small affair; and as it has gone from us I think the Senate ought not to get into the practice of sending to the House of Representatives for bills which we have passed. I hope we shall not do so now; for, Mr. President, it must be observed that if we do get into this practice it leads to another evil, and that is, to hasty and inconsiderate passage of bills, which do not receive the attention they always ought to have. This habit of sending to the House of Representatives, I say, may occasion that practice. If we determine that we will not send there for private bills which have passed the Senate, we probably shall be more careful in the future to investigate the merits of a claim before its passage.

Mr. BRIGHT. The motion which I have made is one of very common occurrence; one that has been made repeatedly in this body during this session. During the last week the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] made one, if not two, motions of a similar character—one, I recollect very distinctly. The Senator from Maryland says this is a small matter. So it is. It is an appropriation of only $30,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will ask the gentleman what two motions I made?

Mr. BRIGHT. I understood that the Senator from Arkansas made a motion directing the Secretary to request the House to return a bill, which had been passed by the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes sir; one motion in reference to one bill.

Mr. BRIGHT. This is a motion of common occurrence. It is one which is repeatedly made here. The principle is the same, whether the amount be large or small. As I stated when I was up before, I voted against this claim twice. I voted upon it yesterday for the third time, and then I voted for it under the impression that the claim was a just one; or that at least, we ought to pay the individual some amount. I first voted to fix the sum at $10,000; but, failing in that, I preferred to vote for appropriating $30,000 rather than that the claimant should receive nothing. I regret that the honorable Senator from Missouri, [Mr. ATCHISON;] whose constituent I understand the claimant is, who is conversant with the claim, did not yesterday give us the benefit of his counsel in regard to it, because, since then, he has stated satisfactory reasons to my mind why he voted against it.

Sir, I will not be placed in the attitude of having voted for a claim that is unjust and improper. It may be that this claim is not so; but the Senator from Delaware says, very confidently, that it is; and other Senators speak in that manner. I think it is proper that it be reconsidered, in order that they may have the opportunity of showing that it is so. The Senator from Delaware remarks, in a private conversation, that he did not intend anything personal by criticising my vote on this claim; but that he regards the votes which I generally give here, on such questions, as correct. I am very happy to have his good opinion on that point. I desire to continue those relations between us; and I can only do it by voting against improper claims. If this be one of that character, I am for giving him an opportunity of showing it; hence, I ask that the bill may be returned to the Senate. I am inclined to believe that there may be something wrong about it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. President, I doubt whether this is not the first time that such a motion as this has been made for the reason which this is now made. It is true, we sometimes authorize our Secretary to recall bills which have been sent to the House of Representatives; but for what reason? Why, for reasons similar to that which was given a few days ago by the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON;] for recalling the bill which he then wished to have brought back to the Senate; namely, that the Senate had committed an error. In that case, by the bill as sent to the House of Representatives, we proposed to repeal one law when we intended to repeal another.

Mr. JOHNSON. It was an error of date.

Mr. WALKER. There was an error of date, and consequently it was necessary to get the bill back in order to correct our action. But can any one call to mind an instance where we have requested the House of Representatives to return a bill to us that we might consider its merits? Not at all. For one, at all events, I have no remembrance of any such case. Now, it is proposed to recall this bill for the purpose of discussing it de novo—to give Senators an opportunity to show that it ought not to be passed, when that was the main consideration in the first instance. I remember that when this case was before the Senate on a former occasion, one of the then Senators from Missouri [Mr. BENTON] came down upon it with such an argument and such a speech as is rarely heard in a legislative body. I remember the effect and force of that speech; but, notwithstanding it, the Senate took the vote and passed the bill. They passed it more than once.

Mr. ATCHISON. I think this is the first time it passed.

Mr. WALKER. It failed before.

Mr. BRIGHT. The gentleman will find that, on that occasion, it passed the Senate, but never both Houses at the same time.

Mr. BADGER. My friend from Wisconsin is right. The bill passed the Senate on the occasion referred to, having first passed the House; but an amendment was made in the Senate, and that bill, with the proposed amendment, went back to the House, and was there laid on the table. That is the way in which it was lost at that session.

Mr. WALKER. I thought my memory did not fail me in regard to the fact that the Senate had passed the bill. Now, I should be pleased to hear the Senator from Missouri, who proposes to address himself to this subject; but I do not think it will be a safe policy for us to recall bills from the House of Representatives for the purpose, not of correcting a mistake, but of considering them upon their merits.

Mr. ATCHISON. The Senator from Wisconsin is mistaken. I do not propose making a speech in relation to the matter at all. But, sir, as to the proposition submitted now by the Senator from Indiana to the Senate, let me say that it is one of frequent occurrence. Under our rules, three days are allowed within which to move a reconsideration of a bill that has been passed or rejected by the Senate. When a bill is passed, sometimes it lies upon the Secretary's table until the three days elapse; but that is generally done only upon the suggestion that it may be reconsidered. The only method by which we can reach a reconsideration of a bill that has passed from the Senate to the House of Representatives, even within the three days allowed under our rules, is by offering a resolution or motion requesting the House to return the bill to the Senate. I venture to say that this occurs not only once, but frequently during each session of Congress, and is done not merely by one House, but by both Houses.

Mr. WELLER. Suppose a bill has passed both Houses?

Mr. ATCHISON. Then, perhaps, it would be out of our reach. When it becomes a law, it is beyond the reach of the Senate or the House. But it is sometimes the case that when a bill has passed both Houses, and gone to the President of the United States, a request is made by the House, which last acted on the bill, to the President, to return it. I have known instances of that kind.

Sir, I do not know whether I can satisfy any other gentleman in relation to this claim; nor do I know that I shall take the trouble to do so. I have often discussed the question. It is one of the great questions which have been pending in the Senate during the last eleven years. It was one upon which my former colleague [Mr. BENTON] and myself uniformly agreed.

Mr. PRATT. The only one? [Laughter.]

Mr. ATCHISON. One among the few of late years; not the only one. I have a knowledge of this claim from its inception. A portion of the demand for money against the United States arose, as the claimant alleges, under circumstances which took place in the State of Missouri. He went to the State of Kentucky, and to the State of Missouri, to teach the farmers in the hemp-growing regions of those two States the manner of water-rotting hemp. This is the foundation of his claim. I know what transpired in the State of Missouri. If I mistake not, I introduced the first memorial of David Myerle that ever was presented to the Senate of the United States. I thought, at that time, that his claim was a just one; and I continued to think so until I returned home. Then I was called to account, by my constituents, for presenting the memorial and pressing the claim. I inquired into it, and I found they were of opinion that, instead of his being entitled to damages against the Government, the very reverse was the case.

I do not know, sir, that I shall say anything more on this subject; though, perhaps, if the bill be brought back, I may give my views in relation to it. I may state what I know about it, and I can refer to what my former colleague said upon this matter; and I think if his speeches be duly considered by the Senate, they will settle the claim.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, I confess that I am not very familiar with this claim, although it was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs. The Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. THOMSON;] who is now absent, had charge of it, as a member of that committee. When he left here a few days ago, he urged me to bring it forward and have it acted upon, and he stated to me that the facts of the case would appear in the report accompanying the bill. That report was read to the Senate yesterday, and the bill was discussed. If there is anything wrong connected with this claim, I know nothing of it. If there is anything new, that has not heretofore been brought against the claim, I should like to hear it. But it seems that the two Senators from Missouri opposed it on a former occasion with all the power and effect which they possessed in this body. If there was merit in their opposition, certainly they could have destroyed this private bill when it was fully discussed by them. I believe that the claim is just, and that the bill ought to pass, or certainly I should not advocate it. I take it, however, very much from the representations of others, for I have not gone into its details; but the honorable Senator from North Carolina has, and he yesterday stated briefly the reasons why the bill should pass. If there is anything wrong in the claim there must be something wrong in the report; but I undertake to say, that the statements contained in the report can be verified, because it emanated from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and we are in the habit of examining closely every question upon which we report. The Senator from New Jersey, who made the report, is not here, but I brought up the case at his request; and I am sorry that I am not better informed upon the subject. I undertake to say, however, that although the Senators from Indiana and Missouri think that the Government is not indebted to this individual, I do not believe they can establish the fact that there is anything wrong in the claim, or in the action of Congress upon it.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. President, the question of practice involved in this debate, is, to my mind, one of much more importance than any question as to the amount involved in the appropriation proposed to be made by the bill. My honorable colleague, [Mr. PEARCE,] and the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. WALKER,] suppose it is entirely improper the Senate should send to the House of Representatives for the return of a bill which has passed the Senate. I apprehend that if the effect of the vote upon this occasion be to adopt that as a precedent, as a common rule of action, it would be fruitful of great injury to the interests of the country and to ourselves. But, sir, under our rules, every Senator, who votes in the majority, upon a bill, has three days within which to move a reconsideration. The adoption of the rule of practice contended for by the Senator from Wisconsin would, however, have this effect: if a bill be passed at this period, and before the close of the session, as in this case, it is immediately transmitted to the House; and that right, which is secured to each member who voted in the majority, to move a reconsideration, is entirely destroyed and taken away from him. The result must be that we shall instruct the Secretary in no case to send a bill which has passed the Senate to the other House, until the expiration of the period which the rules of the Senate give to members to move a reconsideration, or we have the power to make the order, which is now proposed to be made by the motion of the Senator from Indiana. That must be the result.

Now, Mr. President, my honorable friend from Wisconsin says, that there is no case in which the Senate has asked for the return of a bill where an amendment is necessary as a matter of substance; and that the only instance of such a request being made, is where the bill requires an amendment in a matter of form, as in the case of the bill returned on the motion of the honorable Senator from Arkansas, and other cases to which he has referred. I submit to the Senator, whether it is reasonable to suppose that we have power to bring back a bill which has gone to the other House for the purpose of amendment, merely in a matter of form, and that we have not power to bring it back to amend it in a matter of substance?

Mr. WALKER. If the Senator will allow me, I will say that I certainly must have expressed myself in such a manner as to be misunderstood, if I said any such thing. I intended not to speak of bringing back a bill for amendment at all. What I said was, that I did not think there was a case where a bill had been recalled by the Senate from the House of Representatives, for the purpose of considering it upon its merits de novo; but that there were instances of bills being recalled for such purposes as correcting them, whether in form or substance, in a material part. I instanced the case of the bill brought back on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas, where we intended to repeal an act, but had recited it by a wrong date, so that it would not have accomplished the object we had in view.

Mr. PRATT. It amounts, Mr. President, as I humbly submit, to the same proposition. Now, my friend from Indiana, who voted with the majority in favor of this bill, is convinced that his vote was wrong, and that the man is not entitled to the $30,000 which is proposed to be appropriated by the Government. As he has correctly stated, if the amount were three millions, the principle would not be altered. He is convinced that he was in error. Under the rules of the Senate he has three days in which to move a reconsideration of that vote. But the bill has been sent to the other House, and by the argument he is therefore deprived of that privilege which the rules of the Senate allow. I submit, that it is important to the body, with a view to its future action, that we should agree to this motion at any rate, and ask the House to send the bill back to us, even if the vote is to be cast as it was before, for the purpose of putting down the idea that we have no power, in the event of the Secretary sending a bill over to the House directly when it has passed, to exercise the privilege given to us under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. I was not present yesterday when the vote was taken upon this bill. Perhaps it would be a strong expression to say the bill was taken out of its order, because I presume it is in the power of the Senate at any time to lay aside any particular business and take up any other; but I will say that I think this bill properly should have been taken up on the day set aside for the consideration of private bills; and to this extent, therefore, I think I am justified in saying that it was taken up, as far as usage was concerned, out of its order, and it was considered at a time when, I presume, many were not prepared to attend to it.

I do not say that I would have been here on Friday, the day on which such bills are usually considered; but I am prepared to say, that many would have been here who were not here at the time it was taken up. I, for one, expected that the Indian appropriation bill would have been under consideration yesterday, and having made up my mind on the provision which was then under consideration, I did not think it important to be present during the early part of the day.

One word more. Three days are allowed for the reconsideration of bills which have passed this House. I regard it as a very valuable and important security against hasty legislation; and I am one of those who are in favor of interposing all proper impediments—I do not mean unnecessary, but all fair impediments—to hasty legislation; and unless we can have this bill brought back to us by this motion, the rule allowing three days for its reconsideration becomes nugatory. I think it ought to be brought back, and I am willing then to hear such arguments as may be submitted in relation to it.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President, I think it is never too late to do right. If there has been an error committed in the passage of this bill, it ought to be corrected. There is a plain way to do that, and it is by sending to the House of Representatives for the bill, according to the ancient usage of the Senate; I say, the ancient usage of the Senate. Though the honorable Senator from Indiana speaks of his recollection of precedents of this kind for eleven years, I can refer to precedents of the same kind twenty years ago. If he will look back to the proceedings of the year 1834, he will find that the light-house bill of that year, after having been defeated in the Senate, was sent back to the House, and then the Senate sent to the House for the bill, and, after considering it again, passed it. That was an example, I respectfully submit to the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, where a bill was reconsidered on its whole merits.

Mr. President, there are but few gentlemen in this body who will take the pains to investigate these private claims; and we ought to be under greater obligations to those gentlemen who do, for the labor which they bestow on those subjects to which the rest of us do not attend. My course has been to pin my faith, in regard to private claims, upon the reports of the committees, for the plain reason that I cannot generally investigate the subject myself. When I find an objection made to a report, and the report is proved to be wrong, then, of course, I vote according to my convictions against it. Now, sir, my colleague, who has looked into this subject, and who has bestowed as much attention upon the subject of claims as any member of this body, desires to be heard in reference to this bill; and other gentlemen express strongly the opinion that an error has been committed. Well, what is there in this particular case that should prevent us from reviewing the decision we have made? If there is any ground to believe that we have committed an error, it is our duty to re-examine the subject. I trust that the motion will prevail.

Mr. BELL. Mr. President, this is certainly a parliamentary motion, and one that is known to the usages of legislative bodies, and particularly in the Parliament of Great Britain. But I venture to say there is no precedent for such a proposition as the present, upon the allegations that are now made, as to the grounds for this motion. This is the case of a claim which has been pending for sixteen or eleven years; which has been discussed over and over again; which a trusted committee of this body—the Committee on Naval Affairs—have carefully considered and weighed; and on which they have made a detailed report, that has been upon our tables, not only during the present session of Congress, but has been on the desks of Senators who have been members of the last two or three Congresses. Now, after it has passed upon a further, or new discussion, it is proposed to ask the House to return it to us, upon the allegation of one, or two, or three Senators, who say they think they can demonstrate, if the bill be brought back to the Senate, that an error was committed in the vote of the Senate in passing that bill. I say the precedent for such a motion, founded only upon such circumstances as are here presented, is not, in my opinion, to be found upon parliamentary records. If there were mistakes, as stated by the Senator from Delaware, that would be one thing. There would be good ground for the application, if the Senate were satisfied there was a gross error; that there was a general misapprehension of the grounds upon which this report was made; that the amount of the claim had been largely exaggerated over any amount which there were any possible grounds for bestowing, or if there had been something like management on the side of the supporters of the bill in taking the body by surprise, simply upon the report coming in on a bill that had not been under consideration before. If such circumstances were pointed out, they would be a good ground upon which to make the application to the other House to return the bill to the Senate. I apprehend that some such mistake will be found to have been alleged in every proposition for the return of a bill. I do not doubt that the honorable Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] who took objection to this bill the other day, is perfectly sincere. No doubt he thinks he shall be able to demonstrate to the Senate that the claim ought not to be allowed.

Mr. CLAYTON. Will my friend from Tennessee allow me to state the grounds on which, in the case of the light-house bill, to which I have referred, the motion was made to send for the bill, and it was returned to the Senate?

Mr. BELL. Certainly.

Mr. CLAYTON. That bill was defeated by the votes of some gentlemen who were in favor of the doctrine of internal improvements. For some reason, two or three of them had joined the opponents of the whole system of light-houses. Then, those of us who lived along the sea-coast and the lakes, thought, if they intended to play that game with us, we would let them know that some things could be done as well as others; and we notified them that they might look out the next time an internal improvement bill came up, and if we were to have no light houses on the coast, we would attend to the internal improvements for which they were very anxious. Having given them fairly to understand that, they agreed to reconsider the light-house bill, and it was very prudent for them to do so. They made the motion to send to the House for the bill on that ground. I may say, to be sure, with my friend, that they made a mistake, but not in the way he has mentioned.

Mr. BELL. Where there is a mistake, it is a legitimate ground for the exercise of this parliamentary privilege. There was a case where those men, who made the motion to send to the House for the return of the bill, did it for fear they would lose other measures which were pending. If so, it is a parliamentary precedent which, I think, should hardly be followed now.

I do not know, sir, that it is worth while to make any other remarks upon this subject; but I wish to say that I voted for this bill yesterday when it passed, though I believe it will be found, on searching the record, that I voted against the same bill upon a former occasion. I do not, however, deem myself bound, on every occasion, when I feel called upon, in my judgment, to change my vote on such a question, to give any explanation; though, of course, if I am called to account for it, I expect to be able to justify myself. If I remember aright, the discussions which took place on the subject at former sessions of Congress, the opposition which was raised to it was chiefly by a former Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. Underwood.] I confess, my sympathies, my feelings, and my judgment were in favor of the course which he suggested; for it was then, or if not then, it might at some other time, be in the power of the body to correct what the Senator from Kentucky considered a gross injustice. If I am not mistaken, however, the whole opposition of that honorable Senator to the bill was not founded upon the idea that great injustice had not been done to this petitioner by the Government, but that he was not the proper person to whom the money should be paid. The Government made a contract with him, which consumed four, or five, or six years of his time, during which he devoted himself exclusively to it. He was still more deeply committed; for he, having but small resources of his own, had gone to the States of Kentucky and Missouri and obtained credit for himself by showing the contract which he had with the Government, and induced a number of hemp-growers in those States to embark in the experiment with him; and I believe in Missouri, as well as in Kentucky, they did embark in it. They were at great expense and trouble in so doing. They changed their former policy in preparing hemp for market, and undertook to water-rot it.

At the time to which I refer, I carefully looked into the case, and examined the evidence pro and con., and my recollection is, that the proof was conclusive, at least it was to my mind, that as good water-rotted hemp as was ever imported into this country from Russia, was prepared by those farmers, and sold to Mr. Myerle, or intrusted to him for sale under his contract; that it was unjustly and unfairly condemned at Boston, and this memorialist, Mr. Myerle, having no resources of his own, it was sacrificed. If I remember aright, though I have not looked into it now for two or three years, the proof was satisfactory, that though this hemp was condemned, there was strong reason to suppose it was condemned unfairly; that it was good hemp, and that it was sacrificed under the circumstances. What was the consequence? Mr. Myerle, having no resources of his own, was unable to satisfy those who furnished it to him. Great excitement and indignation were felt, particularly in Kentucky, and also, I believe, in Missouri. Those farmers of Kentucky and Missouri had been drawn into this scheme by the representations of Mr. Myerle, supposing that he had such credit under his contract with the Government that he could not fail. They entered into his plans, and furnished this hemp; but it was sacrificed, as I have said, and the money did not get even into Mr. Myerle's pockets. His credit was prostrated in consequence, and he was utterly ruined.

This is the proof, as I understand it. After having given, not only his own time, but having contracted these honest obligations with the farmers of Kentucky and Missouri, the indignation and excitement of those farmers against him, under the circumstances, rose to such a height, that they opposed the making of any compensation to him unless they could be secured at the same time.

Mr. TOOMBS. Is the Senator arguing the motion before the Senate?

Mr. BELL. I am only stating the grounds on which I think this is not a fair case, on any argument that can be reasonably presented here, for the exercise of this usage of sending to the other House for a bill.

The Senator from Kentucky, I think, had no doubt whatever but that Mr. Myerle had been deeply aggrieved; but he supposed that some provision could be made legitimately, by which his creditors would be secured in the enjoyment of a portion at least of the indemnity granted by this Government. That question was largely and ingeniously discussed; and it seemed to be difficult to adopt any plan by which that security could be given to them. Even now I suppose that, according to the argument which was urged upon that occasion, we cannot here undertake to decide the relative claims of the farmers who produced this hemp, and Mr. Myerle, to this indemnity. I think, however, that there can be no doubt of the fact that the Government owes this indemnity either to one or the other of the parties; and as Mr. Myerle himself was the contractor, the strongest and most satisfactory view that can be given of the subject is, that we have nothing to do with the creditors of Mr. Myerle, but that they must be left to the courts to decide upon their rights. If Congress shall grant him the proposed indemnity, they can step in, and, by resort to the judicial tribunals, right the wrong which has been done them by Mr. Myerle. I may be mistaken, but I think that this was the ground of opposition offered to the bill by the honorable Senator from Kentucky at a former day, and in that ground I sympathized with him. I believe he never impugned the idea that great wrong and injury had been done to Mr. Myerle, but he considered that greater injury had been done to those who trusted him under the faith of the contract, and that the indemnity ought to go to them, and not to him.

Mr. TOOMBS. Mr. President, the argument of the Senator from Tennessee is one relative to the merits of the claim, and not in reference to the motion before the Senate. The motion before the Senate, made by the Senator from Indiana, is one of right, and not of favor, and ought not to be determined with reference to the merits or demerits of the claim. Under the rules of the Senate, a member voting with the majority has three days within which to move a reconsideration. Shall he lose this right, secured to him by the rules, in consequence of the action of the ministerial officer of this body? That is the question. Strictly, the practice ought to be, that a bill ought not to leave this body as long as that right attaches to it. It ought not to go within the three days, without the special order of the Senate, except, perhaps, towards the close of the session, when it would not be proper to detain a bill for that period. But as long as there is a right over the bill by any Senator, it ought not to go from under the control of this body, under proper parliamentary usage. I am not familiar with the usages of this body; but I know, where the same rule obtains, the usage has been, everywhere, that, as long as this right attaches to any gentleman to move to reconsider, the subject ought not to be taken beyond his reach. Now, as a Senator has this right, the question is, can he be deprived of it by the act of the ministerial officer of this House? I think not; and, therefore, this motion to put him in a condition where he can use the power granted by the rules, is a matter of right, and not of favor. It is of vastly more importance to this body to maintain its rights, than to pass forty such claims as the one now under consideration.

Mr. BRIGHT. It is, perhaps, proper that I should state that it was my intention to make the motion to reconsider yesterday; but I was out of the Chamber at the time the Senate adjourned, as they adjourned earlier than I anticipated, and, consequently, I did not then make the motion. I made it at the earliest time I could this morning. The honorable Senator from Georgia, however, has anticipated the remarks which I intended to make. He has presented to the Senate the point on which this case turns. Under the rule, as a matter of course, having voted with the majority, I have a right to move to reconsider within three days. Suppose the Secretary had not reported the bill to the House, it would have been clearly improper to resist my motion. The motion to reconsider, would then have been the only motion necessary. I do not intend, by making the motion, to reach the merits of the bill; and I deny that, under our rules, the merits of the claim are debatable under this motion. I have a right to make the motion under the rule; and until the rule be altered, the Senate cannot prevent action upon my motion.

The honorable Senator from Wisconsin stated that the precedent set last week was only to correct an error; that it was to correct a matter of form, and not of substance. That is a strange argument. It is, in effect, that the Senate may make the order, for which I ask in this case, for the purpose of correcting an error of date, but cannot make the order to correct a matter of substance. Now, sir, as I remarked before, under the rule I have a right to make this motion; and it should prevail, as a matter of course. I can turn to precedents where, when bills have not only been sent to the House, but where, when they have been passed by the House, they have been returned to the Senate on their request. Yea, I can go further, and show precedents where bills have passed the House and the Senate, and gone to the President, when they have been returned on the request of the House which last acted upon them.

I am violating no rule in making this motion; but, to prevent a similar occurrence, and an extended debate on a subject of this kind hereafter, I intend to move to amend the rules so as to prevent the Secretary from reporting to the House any bill which originates here until at least one day shall have elapsed, unless otherwise ordered by the Senate. There ought to be such a rule. At least, so long as the present rule exists, that a reconsideration can be made within three days, no bill should be sent from this to the other House, unless by order of the Senate, until the expiration of the three days.

I have stated that my object, in moving this reconsideration, was to bring back this bill, that its merits might be reconsidered. If the Senator from Delaware can make it appear that this claim has no merit, as a matter of course, the bill ought not to pass. He is not alone in that opinion. I find by reference to the Journals that when this claim was last before the Senate, it did pass, but it passed, as the Senator from North Carolina has stated, with an amendment. What was that amendment? It was to appropriate $10,000 instead of $30,000; and it passed upon a vote, by yeas and nays, of 24 to 24 on the amendment, the casting vote in favor of it being given by the then Vice President.

Mr. BADGER. That vote was not on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BRIGHT. It was on the amendment appropriating $10,000, which, as a matter of course, affected the merits of the question. I do not wish it to be understood that I have made a motion which is not within the rules. I submitted a motion clearly within the rules, and one that has generally been allowed to pass without opposition. I believe this is the first instance since I have had the honor of a seat in this body where a motion to return a bill under like circumstances has been resisted.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I do not agree with my friend from Georgia, [Mr. TOOMBS,] that the application now made to the Senate is a matter of right. The rule of the Senate is, that a reconsideration may be moved while the subject-matter is before the Senate, or in the possession of the Senate, at any time within two days succeeding the day on which the vote may have been taken; but when the subject has passed out of the jurisdiction of the Senate, the motion to reconsider is not in order, manifestly because the Senate cannot reconsider a vote on any subject of which it has not possession. Suppose, for instance, that the Senate now should pass a vote to reconsider this bill, and then should send to the House of Representatives for the bill, and the House should decline to return it. That shows at once it would be a perfectly idle thing for us to reconsider a subject not before the Senate; but the rule expressly provides for it.

Now, sir, the uniform practice of the Senate has been, I believe, from the time when it commenced its proceedings, that whenever a bill passes this body, so soon as it is engrossed and ready to be sent to the House of Representatives, it is taken by the Secretary, as a matter of course, unless there be some motion to reconsider, or unless some gentleman intimates to the Secretary that he does not wish the bill carried to the House; in which case it is always retained until the time for a reconsideration has expired, or until the Senate order otherwise. So much is that the course of the Senate, that it is an order entered upon the Journal, of course, in every instance, as Senators will find on looking at the Senate Journal, whenever a bill passes, that it shall be taken to the House of Representatives for its concurrence. This is the form:

"Resolved, That this bill pass, and that the title thereof be as aforesaid.

"Ordered, That the Secretary request the concurrence of the House of Representatives in this bill."

This is the order, of course, just like the order when a vote has passed of which it is necessary to inform the House. It is entered, "Ordered, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives accordingly." It is a regular order entered in every instance, and to be executed immediately, unless there be some intimation to the contrary.

Mr. BELL. Will the Senator read the rule?

Mr. BADGER. These are the words of the rule:

"20. When a question has been once made and carried in the affirmative, or negative, it shall be in order for any member of the majority to move for the reconsideration thereof; but no motion for the reconsideration of any vote shall be in order after a bill, resolution, message, report, amendment, or motion, upon which the vote was taken, shall have gone out of the possession of the Senate, announcing their decision: nor shall any motion for reconsideration be in order, unless made on the same day on which the vote was taken, or within the two next days of actual session of the Senate thereafter."

First, it cannot be moved after the matter has gone out of the possession of the Senate; nor can it be moved after the expiration of two days succeeding the day on which the vote was taken.

Now, sir, having said this, although I believe, with my friend from Maryland, [Mr. PEARCE,] that it is establishing in itself rather a dangerous practice for the Senate to commence sending to the House of Representatives for the return of private bills upon which it has passed, for reconsideration upon their merits; nevertheless, under the circumstances of this case, I shall vote for the motion made by the Senator from Indiana. I shall do it for this reason: The remarks made in the Senate this morning have been upon the merits of the measure. The measure has been denounced. It has been asserted that the claim is groundless. It has been said that if an opportunity be offered, gentlemen can show it to be groundless. I believe the claim to be a good one; I have been satisfied of that for years; but if, under these circumstances, and with these denunciations, and with these confident promises of successful destruction of the merits of this claim, I should vote against asking the House of Representatives to return the bill, it might seem as if I were disposed, from an accidental circumstance, to prevent gentlemen from having an opportunity of being heard upon this bill; and thereby, if the Senate should adopt that course, if those of us who voted for that bill, and think it right, should adopt that course, it would be calculated indirectly, in my opinion, to do more injury to the claim before the House of Representatives, than the examinations of gentlemen opposed to it will do it when the question comes under the consideration of the Senate. That is my view of it.

Now, sir, with regard to the practice of the Senate previously, I am aware that since I have been a member of the body, on several occasions votes of this kind have been taken for returning bills. I have, however, no recollection of one, except in the case of a bill, which might be considered as of some national importance. And the Senator from Indiana, I think, is mistaken in supposing that such votes have always passed without opposition. I remember very well a bill for which I voted here, which was introduced, or, at least supported by Mr. Breese when he was a Senator from Illinois, and in which he took a great interest. I had voted for the bill on its third reading, and it was passed. The same thing took place then as takes place every day: The Secretary receiving no notice to the contrary, of course carried the bill to the House. On the next day, Mr. Allen, then a Senator from Ohio, desired to submit a motion for reconsideration, and desired that some Senator who had voted for the bill would do it, as he was absent at the time. It was a bill of very considerable importance; I do not now remember what it was. The difficulty was announced to him at once by the Presiding Officer, that the bill was out of the possession of the Senate; and I thereupon moved an order that a request be sent to the House of Representatives for the return of that bill. It was done; but Mr. Breese, who was interested in the bill, opposed the order; and my impression is that he opposed it very strongly. Certainly, I know it was carried against his opposition. But under the circumstances of this case, I think we should adopt this motion made by the Senator from Indiana, and have the bill returned, in order that his motion for reconsideration may be entered and considered.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. President, I have an appeal to make to the Senate to proceed to take the vote on the motion which has been submitted by my friend from Indiana. I apprehend that when we come to take the vote, there will be no diversity of opinion on that question; and yet, we have been engaged during the last hour in discussing the merits of a bill now pending in the House of Representatives. Everybody knows that, under the rule, if the bill was here in the possession of the Senate, the Senator from Indiana would have a right to move its reconsideration; but the Secretary has taken that bill to the House of Representatives. The act of that officer, as a matter of course, cannot deprive the Senator from Indiana of any rights that are given to him under the rules of the body. He has, therefore, a right to make the motion; and if it becomes necessary to send to the House of Representatives for that bill, in order to enable him to exercise the right, I apprehend there is no Senator here who will deny it to him. But I do appeal to the Senate not to go into a discussion of the merits of a bill which is not pending before us at all. Let us get that bill back before the Senate; and then, if the Senator from Delaware can satisfy me that I voted incorrectly yesterday, I shall immediately proceed to repair the injury I have done. I have no doubt, however, that I shall be able to show conclusively that David Myerle has a just and equitable demand against this Government. At all events, I am willing to hear a full investigation of that question. Let us therefore conclude to pass this resolution, send to the House of Representatives for the bill, get it again in our possession, reconsider it if you choose, and then, unless the friends of the bill can show it to be just and equitable, let it be voted down. I appeal to the Senate, therefore, not to discuss this question, upon which I apprehend there is no difference of opinion; but let us at once send for the bill, get it into our possession, and then decide it upon its merits.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I do not know for what reason honorable Senators have brought me in connection with this bill, except for the fact that when it was casually taken up yesterday, out of what I considered to be its proper order, I, having understood, at a former session of the Senate, when it was before the body, that it underwent the opposition of a gentleman whose argument had great weight on my mind, and which I could not distinctly recollect, I was desirous to have it postponed for the purpose of examination. Well, sir, that courtesy or request, or whatever you may please to call it, was refused to me by a very decided vote. I therefore contented myself with calling for the reading of the report, and with stating my objections to the claim as they appeared on the face of the report. The Senate then decided the bill. It is at no instance of mine that this motion is now made; nor do I care, in any respect, whether the bill be reconsidered or not; nor am I at all sure that, if it be reconsidered, I shall open my lips in reference to it, though I shall certainly take the trouble to look into the papers in the case for my own satisfaction, and in order to govern my own vote.

Sir, I have had some experience here, as to the inutility of the labor of investigating private claims. I do not mean to give to them that labor and time which I have hitherto given, with a view to discussion, though I certainly shall as regards my own individual action. I am not desirous to trespass upon the time of the Senate, in regard to matters which cannot draw the attention of members of the body, because they do not involve popular applause. They are the mere performance of duty, a duty to the public; and though I have been a member of this body for but a short period, I have been here too long not to know that the performance of a duty to the public, which attaches no political importance otherwise, is not one considered of any extensive or prevailing moment here.

But on this question I have a remark to make. I have nothing now to do with the merits of this claim; but the question is on reconsideration, or rather, on the preliminary motion made by the Senator from Indiana, which is necessary before a motion to reconsider can be made. By the rules of the Senate, taken altogether, the intention obviously is, that within three days or two days, whichever you will, a motion may be made to reconsider any bill which has passed this body. I admit the qualification that it has not passed from the possession of the body; if it has, you must, of course, resort to the motion now made. But if you give the construction contended for on the other side, that because a bill has been hurried off, immediately after its passage, to the other House, therefore it shall not be reconsidered, you are leaving the question of the right of a Senator to move a reconsideration entirely to the caprice of your administrative officer. Now, I am not disposed to give any such construction to the rule. In every case, whether I am opposed to or in favor of a bill, whenever a motion is made to reconsider, if it ought to be reconsidered, I shall be always willing to send to the House for it, if it shall have gone there; for I can see no objection arising to that course. I shall vote, therefore, for the present motion, without reference to what course I may take, or whether I will open my lips or not in regard to the merits of the claim when it comes before the body.

Sir, it has pleased the honorable Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] to make the remark—and I suppose from the rest of the current of the debate, I have a right to apply it to myself—that confident promises have been made that this bill could be successfully contested. If that remark was applied to me, (and I only draw the conjectural inference from other remarks in the debate,) I can say to the honorable Senator that I made no such allegation. I did state to the honorable Senator from Indiana that I thought I could convince him—that I felt confident I could convince him—this bill ought not to have been passed. Sir, I should consider it a hopeless task to attempt to convince the honorable Senator from North Carolina that any bill in favor of a private claim against the Government ought not to be passed. I confess, too, that I should have very little confidence indeed of arresting a claim in any case involving a large amount of gratuities to individuals, with the knowledge I have had, and the experience I have gathered, of the individual influences which are brought to bear, and the fact that those who are to act as judges in reference to claims are assailed out of doors by a thousand personal ex parte explanations; and that the whole case itself is always based on ex parte representations—on ex parte evidence. Although this is undeniably the fact, yet, when a Senator undertakes to investigate it, when he desires simply that justice shall be done between the Government and the individual, he cannot get any persons to listen to him. He is considered tedious, though he is investigating questions which he considers a matter of duty, which involves, if you please, even to a minor degree, the interests of the Government, but still involve them extensively as affording a precedent. He can get scarcely a quorum of the body to listen to him. They would rather take their information from the out-door statements of individuals interested in the claim. With the knowledge I have arrived at of the great extent to which the practice of appealing to Senators by individuals who are commissioned and employed, receiving their per centage for that purpose, is carried by operating on the individual votes of members, and knowing, as I do, the indisposition of the Senate to hear the public discussion of a private claim, on the ground that it has not sufficient notoriety to raise the reputation of the individual who chooses to connect himself with it, I certainly feel no disposition, whatever my own convictions may be, to attempt, and certainly I cannot expect, to convince the Senate of the propriety of those convictions; but I did think, and I think still, that I might be able to convince the honorable Senator from Indiana of the impropriety of this claim.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Delaware, I am sorry to say, seems not to be exactly in a good and pleasant humor in relation to this subject. He says that, if I meant to intimate in what I said, that he had announced an ability to show that this claim was not well founded, I made a mistake. He announces, however, that he did say to the Senator from Indiana, that he thought he could convince him; but he says he never did think that he should be able to convince me that any private claim against this Government was not well founded.

Well now, sir, the first proposition which the honorable Senator has laid down, that he will be able to convince the Senator from Indiana, I have no doubt is true, for the reason that the Senator from Indiana has announced this morning, if I understood him, that he is already convinced this is not a good claim, and it will not require any extraordinary skill in dialectics to convince the Senator from Indiana that the opinion which he has now formed is a correct one.

Mr. BRIGHT. I know the Senator from North Carolina would not willingly misrepresent me—

Mr. BADGER. Certainly not.

Mr. BRIGHT. I made no such statement as he attributes to me.

Mr. BADGER. I so understood the Senator.

Mr. BRIGHT. Then the Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. BADGER. At least the Senator from Indiana intimated, if I understood him, that the opinion under which he had voted in favor of the claim had been greatly shaken by something he had heard, or something he had looked into, since the vote was taken. Under such circumstances, perhaps, the Senator from Delaware may be able to produce that conviction in him.

But, sir, the Senator says he has no expectation of ever convincing me that any claim against this Government is unfounded. Well, sir, one thing is very certain; that if, upon an examination of a claim, I am satisfied, on looking into the facts and the evidence, that the claim is well founded, the honorable gentleman's proposition is true; for with the most profound respect for the clearness and acuteness of his understanding, and the regular processes by which he arrives at his conclusions, I must, at last, regulate myself by the deductions of my own judgment. If the Senator means to intimate that I vote for claims because they are claims, and am careless and indifferent whether they are well or ill founded, I have only to say to the honorable Senator, that such a charge as that, come from what quarter it may, I do not think it necessary to remark upon. I should be very sorry if I had not character enough to stand under such an insinuation coming from any quarter. But this I will say for myself, that I uniformly vote for every claim upon this Government which I think has a foundation either in legal justice or natural equity. I adopt precisely the same rules in paying claims upon this Government that I feel myself bound to adopt, as a man, in paying claims upon myself. And as I never stop to inquire, when a sum of money is justly due from me, whether the payment of it can be enforced by law; neither, when I am satisfied that in equity a claim has a foundation against this Government, do I stop to inquire whether it is a claim founded upon what is called strict law.

Sir, I have announced repeatedly a general rule of mine upon this subject, which does not meet the approbation of the Senator from Delaware, which he has stated, on several occasions, did not meet his approbation, and which he thinks is wrong, and the consequences of which he thinks would be ruinous. It is, that where a private claim has been examined by a committee of this body, and the facts of that case are reported to this body with a bill for relief, I will submit my judgment to the decision of that committee, if they are unanimous. I repeat now, that it must be a very extraordinary case where I will undertake, upon an investigation of the facts, to overturn the deductions made unanimously by a committee of this body.

Now, Mr. President, with regard to the remark which I made, and which has been commented on by the Senator from Delaware, let me say that I intended nothing, and everybody understood that I did not, by the observation which I made, except this: I had no reference to the Senator from Delaware; but more than one gentleman—the Senator from Missouri, among others—said this was a bad claim, and could be shown to be so, though he did not know that I should undertake it. I then said, and I repeat, besides other reasons for voting for this motion, I do not choose; I do not think it would be right; it would be unjust to ourselves, to have it supposed that we voted for a claim which we did not believe was correct, or which we feared would not stand the test of investigation; and that such an impression would be far more injurious to this claim in the other House than anything which can be offered against it upon its merits here. I meant to assign that as my reason. It was because I have had some familiarity with this claim; I have examined it; I have discussed it; and every renewed examination has strengthened my conviction of the equity of this demand. It is on that ground that I have uniformly voted for it; and, unless I be satisfied to the contrary, I shall certainly vote for it again; and, although I do not think it likely that the Senator from Delaware will convince me, yet I will say, clearly and undoubtedly, that if he does convince me that this claim is unfounded and unjust, I will join him in voting against it.

Mr. PEARCE. I am very reluctant to say another word on this point, and I should not do so but that I think it necessary. I believe I was the first who suggested that it was not worth while to send a request to the House of Representatives, asking for the return of this bill; but I believe the objection I then made to it has been considered by some Senators—my colleague, I think, among others—as denying to a member the right, which he has under the rules of the Senate, to move a reconsideration within three days. Now I desire to say that I have looked at the rule in question, and I find there are two qualifications to the right to move a reconsideration. The first is, that the bill shall still be in the possession of the Senate; and the second is, that the motion shall be made on the same day that the bill is disposed of, or within two days thereafter. It is manifest that this right is qualified as well by the first clause of the rule, as by the second. It may be very well to modify your rules so as to require a bill to be retained until the expiration of the period within which a reconsideration is allowed to be moved;

but as the rule stands at present, it does not seem to me that this is a matter of right, but it is a matter of favor. In practice, when a bill is passed, it is always indorsed with an order that the Secretary shall take it to the House. There is no limitation of time within which that shall be done. But, sir, as there has been very much earnestness manifested about this matter, I do not think it proper to continue any opposition to the motion of the Senator from Indiana, and I shall vote with the rest of the Senate, in favor of it.

Mr. PETTIT. Mr. President, I shall vote for the motion made by my colleague for recalling this bill, briefly for the following reasons: Being sincerely a friend of the bill, not only from one but from repeated and thorough investigations of its merits, and being desirous that the claim shall pass, I believe, with the Senator from North Carolina, that the discussion we have had here to-day will tend more to retard it or defeat it in the House than the reconsideration of it will here. And for the express purpose that we may remove the impression that the discussion here this morning will be likely to have on the members of the House to defeat the bill there, I shall vote to recall it here, and put it again on its passage. I do not apprehend that anything is to be feared by the friends of this bill from a more thorough and wider examination. I believe it is due to the Senate that it should be recalled under the circumstances. When any Senator says he has been mistaken in whole or in part in regard to a bill, and is satisfied that he should not have voted as he did, within the time limited by the rule, I think it is fair and proper that the bill should be recalled. I think it is right to do it in this case; and in order to avoid the injury which the debate of this morning must necessarily have upon this measure, I shall vote to recall the bill.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I certainly did not intend, in any remark of mine, to make an insinuation as regards the honorable Senator from North Carolina. I meant, however, to express the opinion which I entertain, that the action of his intellect in reference to this class of claims, that his course of action in reference to them in the Senate, was such that I should consider it hopeless in any case for me to endeavor to convince him that a claim in favor of a private individual, (reported, of course, by a committee to the Senate,) was one which ought not to be passed. I drew that conclusion from my observation of his anterior course in the Senate. I have heard that honorable Senator frequently avow the opinion that the report of a committee in favor of a claim should be conclusive, and I think on former occasions he did not even make the qualification he now makes, that the report should be unanimous; but if there was a report, he should consider himself bound by the report, and should vote for it without investigation. Sir, the experience which I have had, (either on committees as to their modes of investigation, or from reading their reports as to the results at which they have arrived) will not justify me in according with his views, and attaching to these reports the weight which he gives to them. I consider that basis of action as one which leads to great injury and great injustice to the public.

The whole mode of the examination of private claims is on testimony which is produced by the claimant at his own suggestion and on his own papers alone, ex parte throughout. Those papers are referred to a committee; and the practice has become such now, that constantly the claim of the claimant is referred to the Representative from his own State, and that claim is investigated under the bias, natural to a representative in favor of a private claim preferred by his constituent in which there are private interests on the one side and the unprotected public on the other. Yet I am asked to take reports so made, when I have examined report upon report and found when I came to examine the testimony that in nine cases out of ten, before any decent, respectable jury in this country, the verdict, on the plaintiff's own evidence, would be unquestionably against him! The Government is entirely unrepresented; the claimant's evidence is altogether ex parte, and from such evidence the report is made up. It may suit the peculiar structure of some minds to take these things for granted; but certainly I differ entirely from the Senator from North Carolina on that point. Therein I may be wrong, but I think not.

I know that it is a very agreeable thing to vote in favor of private claims. I dare say it makes individual friends. I dare say it gets individual popularity. I know very well it is a thankless duty to oppose private claims against the public, because the public care nothing about it, and know nothing about it. I did not come here for any such purpose. But for myself, whenever I have anything to act upon, I mean to endeavor to do it according to my convictions of duty. Sitting here in the light in which I suppose I sit as a Senator on a private claim, to pass my individual judgment upon the propriety of making the United States pay a certain sum of money to the party, I cannot reconcile it to my sense of duty to pass it, without endeavoring to get at the facts of the case and the principle upon which the allowance is to be made. I endeavor to do that in every case where it is possible; and where it is not possible for me to look into it, I inquire for a statement of the facts from some Senator who has taken the trouble to examine them. Usually, I take the trouble to read the report itself. If any thing in the terms or principle of that report attracts my attention, as requiring further investigation, I turn to the evidence of the case in order to see if it sustains the principle upon which the report professes to be based.

Sir, I am so entirely satisfied, in my own mind, of the total incompetency of this body for the decision of these matters; I am so entirely satisfied, in my own mind, that a system of looseness and carelessness has sprung up here in reference to the passage of claims of individuals against the public, that I think I should be safe in the performance of duty if I were to assume that I would vote for no private claim brought before the body. Why, sir, it is a notorious fact—as I am assured by gentlemen of the other branch of the National Legislature, of which body I have never been a member, and of course I do not therefore know the fact personally—that this body, as a body, is so sunk in its character, from the looseness of the mode in which it passes private claims, that, in the estimation of the coordinate branch of the Legislature, the reports of its committees upon such claims are treated almost with contempt, and are considered as entitled to no weight at all. If that be so, is it not right that we should pause in this matter?

Have I not the right to say, when reports of this kind are made the ground for the specific action of Senators, that I cannot hope to convince a Senator when he pins his faith on papers or documents like these? Sir, I shall never make against the honorable Senator from North Carolina, or any other man, any insinuation, either here or outside of this Hall, which I am not willing to make in its broadest and most distinct terms. I used the expression that I never hoped to convince him—in order to express in the strongest language in which I could express the fact, that, owing to the difference in the structure of our minds, he was willing to take upon faith these reports of committees, whereas my convictions, from investigation, had been, that most of the claims you pass here are either utterly baseless, or so grossly exaggerated in amount, that, as between individuals, they would be pronounced extortion.

Mr. DIXON. I voted for this bill, and I certainly did it under the impression that it was founded upon principles that were just in themselves, and such as appealed strongly to the good sense and to the propriety of the Senate. I am still of that opinion. I do not agree with the Senator from Delaware, that the report of a committee is entitled to solittle respect as he seems to think it is. Why, sir, for what do you constitute your committees? You constitute them with a view to investigate all the facts on which their report is predicated. Their report is made to the Senate, embodying the facts on which the Senate is to act. It is not supposed that every member of the Senate can go into the committee room and investigate all the testimony which is brought before that committee. The committee is constituted with the view and for the purpose of investigating the testimony and reporting the facts to the Senate. Then, sir, it is respectful to a committee, when they make a report to the Senate, embodying the facts, at least to consider that they have acted upon fair, correct, and honorable principles, without even casting a suspicion upon the motives by which they may or may not have been influenced.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

THURSDAY, MAY 11, 1854.

NEW SERIES...No. 73.

Mr. BAYARD. I have cast no suspicion upon anybody.

Mr. DIXON. I do not mean to say that the Senator casts suspicion on anybody; but his argument is directly at war with the idea that the committees have done their duty. There is something in the manner, something in the tone of the Senator, which strikes at the propriety of the action of our committees, and which is calculated to make an impression on the Senate that the report made by the committee, in this case, is not founded on the facts; or that the committee is so obtuse in its perceptions of what is right, resulting from the testimony, that it is wholly incapable of arriving at anything like a correct conclusion; and that its members are improper judges of what should be ascertained from that testimony. You cannot understand the Senator's argument as meaning anything else.

Nor, sir, can I admit the honorable Senator's argument in another view of it, viz: that this body is passing claims which have no merit in them. It is a fact, which cannot be disputed, that this Government, instead of doing justice to claimants, is too frequently in the habit of withholding justice from them. Instead of coming to the rescue of those who have claims on her, she tramples their petitions under foot, and treats the petitioners as unworthy of the aid or assistance of the Government they may have served. You have but to look to the history of the past; you have but to look to petition after petition, and memorial after memorial, presented here by the revolutionary soldiers and their descendants, and there you find that the Government, instead of acting upon the principles which the Senator seems to attribute to it, has acted upon motives of parsimony, regardless of justice, defiant of all the great principles which should influence governments which act upon great patriotic ideas. It has, in fact, looked rather at the dollars and cents, than to meting out justice to those who have been foremost in sustaining the great principles upon which all our rights are dependent. I have not found that looseness, which the Senator seems to attribute to the Government, in passing laws for the benefit of its citizens. God knows how many bills are now upon the table, how many petitions are before your committees, how many reports have been made in favor of the petitioners? How, sir, have they lingered here in the Senate, and how have they been delayed after passing this body? Poor claimants may be suffering, yea, almost perishing, for the want of that attention which should be given to their claims, some of which appeal in powerful language to the heart of every man who loves justice, and is grateful to those who assisted in defending the rights and interests of the country.

I shall, Mr. President, vote for the return of this bill, not because I am satisfied that the vote which I gave yesterday was not correct, but because I think it due to the Senator from Delaware, if he desires to investigate the testimony upon which the report has been founded, that he should have the opportunity of doing so. It is due to me, too, because my opinion is predicated upon the report. That report establishes two facts: First, that the petitioner was employed—which was, to all intents and purposes, an employment binding, in my opinion, upon the honor of this country—by one of the Departments of the Government, to make the experiment which was made of water-rotting hemp. He did make it; the committee report that he made it; and they report, not only that he made it, but that, in the making of it, he expended a vast amount of money, so as to ruin and bankrupt him. The committee report another fact—that the commissioners who were appointed by the Government to receive the hemp, and to determine whether or not it was such as, under the contract, he was bound to deliver, did not act upon fair and correct principles—that the hemp strictly came up to the contract—but yet it was rejected.

These are the facts which are reported. Now, whether they be true or not, I shall not take upon myself to determine. All I know is that they are so reported. The Senator thinks he can prove that the facts are not so; that he can prove that the report itself is not properly founded. If that is the case, I shall change my vote. If the Senator can demonstrate those facts to me—and I assure him that I at least am open to conviction—I shall most unquestionably retrace my steps and vote differently from what I have done. On the other hand, I shall not agree with the Senator, that this is a mere gratuity. I do not place it upon any such ground. I do not believe in its being a gratuity. The Government either did, or did not employ this man. If it did, and it agreed to receive the hemp, and then acted in bad faith in not receiving it, and if he was thereby subjected to loss, I say it is a violation of a contract between the Government and the citizen, and to compensate him is only in accordance with the great principles upon which courts act, and upon which justice is administered. For these reasons, I shall vote to bring the bill back to the Senate. Then I shall vote to reconsider it. If gentlemen do not prefer to argue the merits of the bill on the motion to reconsider, which I understand they have a right to do, I will vote to reconsider it with the view that they shall have a full opportunity of arguing the merits of the bill.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I am sorry to trespass on the time of the Senate, but I owe it to myself to make an explanation in reference to the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky. I certainly did not mean to say, for one moment, that in reference to revolutionary claims against this Government, Congress had been over liberal. I am not aware that I have been inclined to oppose any general law in reference to compensation for revolutionary services, or any other provision in the nature of a gratuity for services rendered to the Government, not constituting in themselves a legal obligation. For a general law, I would go almost as far as any man; but I am opposed to this system of special legislation. In this case, as between the honorable Senator from Kentucky and myself, there is a difference of opinion, which depends upon investigation. I have not taken much pains to examine them, but after the experience which I have had I must say, that I have not been able to see any thing like a denial of justice to private claimants against the Treasury of the United States; but that, on the contrary, nine cases out of ten that have been passed, ought never to have been passed. There may have been some cases of a refusal to do justice, but, as a general rule, if that Senator will take the trouble to examine a book which has been recently printed by order of the Senate, the List of Claims, as it is called, and will go through the reports upon them to the extent that I have done, he will find, that where there has only been persistency enough on the part of the claimant, although there may have been one, two, three, or four, or even six adverse reports against the claim, he always ultimately gets it. I find that three or four adverse reports generally insure it to him, and that the result is this: that as between the Government and the claimant, the decision of the Senate has no finality when it is in favor of the Government; but when it is in favor of the claimant it is final, and the money is paid. The result is that you always indicate to parties that they may come forward with further evidence, and if they find that the Senate, at that particular time, is composed of members indisposed to pass such claims, they wait for four, or six, or eight, or ten years, if necessary, and then, when all memory of the transaction is gone, they again bring forward the claim and it is allowed.

And further, it seems to me the more remote a claim is, and the less means we have of acquiring a knowledge of the facts, the more certain it is to pass this body. This has been the result of my examination of claims here. We pride ourselves on our simplicity and purity, and republicanism; but I believe we are the only Government in the world that passes private claims in the manner we do, and on the species of evidence we do—a species of evidence to which, if you were to resort for the purpose of deciding rights between man and man, would be laughed to scorn in any court of justice in the world; and yet, as between a claimant and the public, it is considered all-sufficient for the purpose of disgorging from the Treasury in favor of the man who has the most sagacity in procuring the evidence, and having a partial representation of his case as against even the individual claimant who, with more modesty, may have less energy in order to have explanations made. That is my experience.

The motion to direct the Secretary to request the return of the bill from the House of Representatives was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WELLER. This has resulted just as I expected. We have spent two or three hours in the discussion of a question about which there was no difficulty. I was anxious that my friend from Delaware should have a full opportunity of speaking. I think he has been gratified. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate accordingly proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 10, 1854.

The House met at the usual hour. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I intend before I take my seat to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Before doing so, however, I desire to notify the House that it is my intention to-morrow to introduce a resolution terminating the debate upon the bill to organize the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska.

Several MEMBERS. At what time?

Mr. RICHARDSON. To-morrow morning.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, and other MEMBERS. When do you propose to close the debate?

Mr. RICHARDSON. In reply to the interrogatories made by gentlemen, I have to state that the time at which I shall propose to terminate debate will depend upon the opponents of the bill. If they show a disposition to go on and debate it, I am disposed to allow the utmost time that will be possible, in order to have a final vote on the bill before the special order takes precedence of it. If they do not show such a disposition, then I shall take it for granted that they do not desire further debate, and shall move to terminate it at the earliest hour.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will allow me to ask him a question, as probably this is all irregular. He says "if the opponents of this bill show a disposition to debate the bill." What is meant by that? Does he expect us to continue in session here for ten or eleven hours?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I cannot yield for further inquiries. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I hope, as this is an important question—

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the gentleman from Ohio be allowed to proceed?

Mr. HAMILTON. I object, and call for a vote on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. Then debate is not in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is objection made?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HAMILTON] objects.

Mr. CAMPBELL. After what has taken place; after the gentleman from Illinois has been allowed to go on and make his statement, surely, no one objects to my making an inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the gentleman from Ohio be allowed to proceed?

Mr. HAMILTON. I object.

The question was put on Mr. RICHARDSON's motion; and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. OLDS in the chair), and resumed the consideration of bill No. 236, being a bill to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee last rose, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, said that as an hour was not sufficiently long in which to express his views, he should be disposed to generalize them. The distinct propositions, and the material ones, which, it struck his mind, are involved in this discussion, are: First. Are the principles of the compromise of 1850, in respect to the Territories, the principles of American liberty, and are they repugnant to the Missouri compromise? Second. If so, ought not Congress, with a view of disembarassing the court as to its intention, so to declare? and, Third. Is the principle of non-intervention by Congress embodied by the act of 1850, violated by the Badger amendment?

To make himself properly understood, and to present the subject fairly to the committee, he reviewed the relations which this Government has borne to the question of slavery from the time the several States first came together; arguing to show that, at different times, the principle of non-intervention, or leaving the people to judge for themselves, was distinctly declared. The first occasion on which the doctrine of non-intervention was ever departed from was in the celebrated Missouri controversy, and he defied the historian to show to the contrary.

He traced the progress of the slavery controversy to a later period; and in the course of his remarks, he took issue with gentlemen who had maintained that at the time of the passage of the compromise of 1850, nobody insisted that it abrogated the Missouri compromise. This was a mistake. Over and over again, in presenting this subject, both here and elsewhere, he had declared that the South had gained by the abrogation of the Missouri compromise a better and a truer principle.

He related some facts connected with an interview between Mr. Clay and Mr. Ritchie, pending the controversy in 1850. The former had insisted on retaining the Mexican law, as applicable to the territory acquired from Mexico. He, however, gave this up, as he (Mr. BAYLY) told him it was indispensable he should, because, if that law was declared by congressional authority, it would be virtually the Wilmot proviso. He knew that Mr. Clay gave it up, because it interfered with non-intervention.

Mr. B. proceeded to reply to his colleague, Mr. MILLSON; but, before he concluded, the hour to which he was limited in debate expired.

Mr. GRW said that the bill under consideration provided for the organization of two territorial governments, to be called Nebraska and Kansas, embracing, together, about six hundred and sixty-five thousand square miles, an area twice as large as the original thirteen Colonies; and extending from New Mexico to the British possessions, and from the western limits of Minnesota and the States to the Territories of Washington and Oregon, and containing four hundred and twenty-five millions of acres of land—more than a fourth of all the public domain now owned by the Government. The provisions of the bill were those usually inserted in bills to organize territorial governments, with the exception of the fourteenth section, which proposed to repeal so much of the Missouri compromise as prohibited slavery in the territory purchased of France lying north of the line of 36° 30'.

He then stated his objections to the Clayton amendment. It having been the policy of the Government heretofore to permit all persons residing in a Territory who had declared their intention to become citizens, to participate in the organization of its government, what reason was there for their exclusion in the present instance? The fact that they were residents of the Territory was good evidence that they had settled there with the intention of making it their home; and the oath in their declaration of intention to become citizens absolved them from allegiance to foreign Powers, and clothed them with nationality. The Clayton proviso was inconsistent, he maintained, with the great principle of self-government claimed to be embodied in the bill by its special advocates.

Having argued that the organization of these Territories was unnecessary, he replied to the arguments of the unconstitutionality of the Missouri compromise of 1820. It was not considered unconstitutional at the time of its adoption by gentlemen from the South; no such objection was made to it then.

He claimed for it no more binding force, save the circumstances which surrounded its adoption, than attached to any other legislative act of Congress, and denied that the North had ever abandoned it. He also argued that slavery can only exist through municipal regulation, and quoted from decisions of northern as well as southern courts to sustain this position.

Mr. PERKINS, of New York, after a few preliminary remarks, asked why there are now two acts brought in, instead of one, as heretofore, the object at first being to establish merely the territorial government of Nebraska? He believed that if all the territory should be under one government there would be a large portion of the people from the northern States, who do not subscribe to the doctrine that slavery is the universal and common law of the country, and that the colored man, in order to be entitled to freedom, must show the law.

The intention of these bills was, there should be southern judges for the southern Territory, who will hold and administer the law as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] proclaimed this morning; and in the other Territory judges who will declare that freedom is the law, and slavery the exception. He defied any man to assign any rational reason for the organization of two territorial governments. In other words, the judges are to make the laws. This is the principle on which the measure is founded.

The bill, he contended, does not confer the principle of self-government on the people. There is almost every oppression enumerated in the Declaration of Independence to be exercised in those Territories—the people are to be taxed, and the Governor is to use his veto. It is the height of absurdity to say the people are to rule. It is mere declamation and humbug.

He proceeded to speak on the question of slavery, contending the free colored man is, in substance, a nuisance in a free State, and the existence of slavery in a State crushes out white people. He wanted free soil; and therefore opposed the repeal of the Missouri compromise.

Mr. MILLSON. I desire only to make a brief explanation. If my colleague, [Mr. BAYLY,] instead of replying to an argument of his own creation, had been content to answer that which I had made, perhaps no reply would have been necessary from me. I wish only to say that he did not, in his remarks this morning, correctly state my position. I have not said that there were laws protecting slavery now existing in the Territory of Nebraska. What I did say no gentleman has yet attempted to reply to. All who have undertaken to notice my argument, have answered conclusions which they have themselves drawn, and arguments of which they are themselves entitled to the exclusive credit. This is what I said: I was replying to the statement of Mr. BADGER, who had declared that no laws had ever existed in Nebraska but the old French law and the Missouri compromise. He had said: "These were the only two laws upon the subject, the only two laws that had ever been in force. There was a law authorizing slavery when the Territory belonged to France. By the act of 1820 that law was annulled."

I was replying to this statement, and showing that those were not the only two laws that had been in force there. I showed that there were other laws—laws passed by Congress and by the Territorial Legislature. I showed that those laws have never been repealed, but only their practical operation confined to particular localities. No gentleman has yet undertaken to question those statements. I showed, moreover, that some of those laws are in force over a portion of the territory purchased from Louisiana. No gentleman has answered that. I say confidently, that no gentleman has yet undertaken to answer one of the points that I made, and for which I hold myself responsible.

My colleague says that laws are addressed to persons and not to places. That is the very argument I myself made here four years ago in reference to a position assumed by Mr. Webster. Did my colleague suppose that I had forgotten my own views, or that I had made an argument this session in the slightest degree conflicting with that I made four years ago? Sir, laws are made for persons, not places, as I then attempted to show, but for persons upon and with reference to places. They are made for all persons who now are, or hereafter may be, within particular localities. Wherever the jurisdiction of the law-making power extends, there the laws apply to all persons who may be within it. They apply not only to those who may be there at the time of the passage of the law, but to those also who may go there afterwards. By going into a place which is within the limits of a particular jurisdiction, they become subject to the laws intended to govern persons in such places. This is all I deem it necessary to say in reply to my colleague.

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts, incidentally referred to the present fugitive slave law. He believed, from the bottom of his heart, that the Constitution of the United States never conferred upon the General Government the power to make such a law as the one now in existence for the recovery of fugitives from labor. He, however, did not wish to be understood as saying no law. He stood here as the advocate of the principles of freedom against the aggressions of slavery.

The bill of the Senate stultified the report, in a measure. He could only account for this by supposing that the bill was not agreed upon until after the report was submitted. According to the arguments of the report, the bill should be forthwith rejected. He then argued at length against the repeal of the Missouri compromise.

Mr. SEWARD did not believe that the Missouri act, as declared by the bill, was inconsistent with the compromise of 1850. Each measure stood on its own independent principle. He was opposed to the details of the bill, but nevertheless would vote for it, as the Badger amendment therein would put the Missouri act out of the way.

Mr. ELLIOTT, of Kentucky, argued against the continuance of the Missouri act of 1820, contending that the North had heretofore refused to abide by it. In conclusion, he advocated the doctrine of non-intervention.

Mr. DOWDELL obtained the floor.

Mr. BOYCE. I ask the gentleman from South Carolina to yield me the floor for the purpose of making a personal explanation. It will occupy but a few minutes.

Mr. DOWDELL. I will yield the floor to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. BOYCE. I desire briefly to make an explanation of the facts concerning the visit of Mr. Hoar to the State of South Carolina, to which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Eliot] referred in his speech to day. In 1822, when a civil insurrection was upon the eve of breaking out in South Carolina, and it was discovered that free negroes were coming from the West India Islands to head that insurrection, it was found necessary, for the public safety, to pass an act that no free negroes should come into that State.

Many years passed along, and the Abolition excitement came up, and Massachusetts, which, I am sorry to say, has always been found at the head of this agitation, sent one of her citizens to have the constitutionality of this law tested. As soon as Mr. Hoar arrived in the State, he was looked upon as a fire-brand, and great public agitation ensued upon his arrival; but there was no mob violence threatened against him. Some of the most respectable citizens of Charleston waited upon him, and urged upon him the necessity of leaving the State. The manner in which the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts referred to this matter would lead one to suppose that some infuriated mob had forced him to leave the State; but the facts of the case present the matter in an entirely different light. He was waited upon by several respectable gentlemen of the place, and requested to leave the city; and he did so.

Mr. DICKINSON. I should like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question.

Mr. BOYCE. I am ready to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. DICKINSON. I should like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina whether the municipal authorities of Charleston did not notify Mr. Hoar that they could not protect him, and they would not insure his safety if he did not leave? They allowed him to take his own choice, and so he left.

Mr. BOYCE. I do not know that. I know that some gentlemen waited on him at the hotel, and represented to him that he had better leave, as, though the citizens did not intend to injure him, he might be liable to insult and annoyance.

Mr. DICKINSON. I have got the facts from the official report, and I have no doubt it is true. I do not wish to have my State improperly represented in this matter.

Some little misunderstanding here took place between Mr. Boyce and Mr. Dickinson, as to the language used by the latter gentleman.

Mr. DICKINSON. I rose to make an inquiry of the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. Boyce.] I stated the facts from the official report of Mr. Hoar, of Massachusetts, which he made when he returned. He stated that he was informed by the authorities of Charleston that he could not be protected, and was advised by them to leave, because they could not answer for his safety if he remained. The gentleman from South Carolina replied to my question, substantially, that he did not understand the facts to be so. Sir, there is not a purer man in the United States than Mr. Hoar. He is a man for whose prudence, and judgment, and candor, every one who knows him has respect. He was sent there for the purpose of testing the validity of the law of South Carolina, which we, in Massachusetts, regarded as unconstitutional. He was known to be a person who would conduct himself with great propriety; and he was only asked to have the proper means taken to test the validity of the law in the United States courts. But he was advised that he could not remain there safely, and that he could not try the case. He came home and made that report. I took that report as an official report after it had been acted upon.

Mr. DOWDELL contended that the restriction of 1820 was a naked act of arbitrary power unwarranted by the Constitution. It was wholly indefensible, impolitic, and inexpedient. It was forced on the South as the least of two evils, and acquiesced in by them for the sake of peace and harmony. It has been violated over and over again by the North, who now advocate its sanctity; but he suggested that it did not become the aggressors to teach lessons of morality and justice.

Mr. CARPENTER replied to arguments which had been advanced in favor of the bill, which he said authorized, not in direct terms, but in effect, slavery to creep into this Territory, now free. To this he would ever be opposed.

Mr. TWEED believed the Missouri line is violative of the Constitution, a flagrant wrong and gross injustice, and calculated to produce incalculable mischief. A geographical line is wrong in inception, enactment, and enforcement. The Missouri line, he repeated, is violative of the Constitution, because it encroaches on the rights of the South, who have an equal share with the North in the enjoyment of our domain. By its repeal, let us endeavor to make the Union a political paradise, from which we will never be driven, no more to return. He was in favor of the bill, because it gives to the people of the Territory the power to control their own institutions.

Mr. FARLEY could not forbear to say that, to him it was a source of great satisfaction that his political friends on this floor are in no way responsible for the ill-advised form in which this measure has been presented. The North are opposed to the extension of slavery. This bill looks to the extension of slavery over territory now free. So long as the Missouri compromise remains un-repealed, slavery cannot go there. Repeal it, and slavery can go there. Therefore he opposed its repeal, either directly or indirectly.

Mr. HARRISON addressed the committee in opposition to the bill, taking the ground that the public interests did not justify its passage. He likewise argued against the repeal of the Missouri act of 1820.

Mr. COLQUITT, of Georgia, obtained the floor.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is a strange arrangement; but I understand that the Chair is in the habit of exacting—though I do not know that it is so—a pledge from gentlemen who wish to speak that they will not occupy more than fifteen minutes, or half an hour. If that be so, it ought to be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps the gentleman had better let his colleague make that point.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have heard these things, and think it best that they should be now explained.

Mr. HARRISON. I am perfectly satisfied.

[Cries of "Go on, Colquitt!"]

Mr. CAMPBELL. What my colleague says does not answer the point. I want to know whether it be a condition precedent to the getting of the floor that gentlemen shall pledge themselves to occupy only fifteen minutes, or half an hour? I want to have the question settled. I deem it best to have the difficulty remedied now.

[Cries of "Go on, Colquitt!"]

Mr. CAMPBELL. I appeal to the gentleman from Georgia to let us have this question settled now.

Mr. COLQUITT. I prefer to proceed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Very well, then, go on.

Mr. COLQUITT. It is with great reluctance, Mr. Chairman, that I propose, at this late hour, to speak on the subject under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will yield a moment, that the Chair may set the matter referred to by the gentleman from Ohio right. It is due to the Chair that it should be done. The Chair has exacted no pledge from the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. HARRISON.]

Mr. HUNT. Will the Chair permit me?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has exacted no pledge, and has not called the gentleman down. The gentleman said to the Chair that he wanted fifteen minutes, and would like to have it now—

Mr. HUNT, (interrupting.) In behalf of the people of the United States, and the members of this House, I protest against such proceeding.

[Cries of "Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is called to order.

Mr. HUNT. It is a breach of the liberty of Parliament and our rights in a free and glorious country. I appeal to every American on this floor, by his regard for his country, to protest against it.

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. WHEELER. The gentleman has more right to be heard than those who are calling him to order.

Mr. FLORENCE. I call the gentleman from New York to order.

Mr. WHEELER. And I call the gentleman from Pennsylvania to order; for I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from New York will preserve order.

Mr. WHEELER. I would tell the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I ask no courtesy at his hands.

Mr. FLORENCE. The gentleman from Georgia has the floor, and I call the gentleman to order.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARRISON] be allowed to explain the matter, the Chair is confident that he will do it to the satisfaction of the committee.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I hope that the gentleman from Georgia will proceed with his remarks.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I wish to correct a remark of the Chair. I did not rise on behalf of my colleague, but against his protestation. I rose to state what was the current impression in the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please come to order.

Mr. HUNT. It appears to me, that the question is a privileged one.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls to order.

Mr. HUNT. I ask the committee to be heard on a question of privilege. I appeal to the Chair to hear me.

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. HUNT. I do it in my place.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman rises to a question of order, the Chair will entertain it.

Mr. HUNT. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it, Mr. HUNT. The gentleman who took his seat, saying that he had but fifteen minutes, had the right, under the rules, to proceed for one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the gentleman had the right to proceed for one hour. Several MEMBERS. Nobody denies it.

Mr. HUNT. I would take occasion to ask that the gentleman from Ohio will now use the privilege which is allowed him under the rules, in order that he may protect his own and our rights against any trickery, management, private understanding—

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the gentleman from Ohio is entitled to the floor, if he desires to occupy it.

Mr. HARRISON. I will state that I obtained the floor by the courtesy of the Chair. He told me that he could not afford me my proper time.

Many MEMBERS. "That is enough," and considerable sensation.

Mr. HUNT. The Chair could not afford him his proper time!

[Cries of "Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hopes gentlemen will wait until the gentleman from Ohio concludes his statement.

Mr. HARRISON. It was a particular act of courtesy on the part of the Chair. I desired to speak to-day, and I asked him if he could allow me to speak a portion of my speech, and I would print the rest. He said that he might be able to give me ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. HUNT. That is what I protest against.

[Shouts of "Order!"]

Mr. HARRISON. At the same time the Chairman told me that, having obtained the floor, I should have a right to proceed for an hour, if I chose to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Will gentlemen permit the Chair now to make a statement for the information of the committee, which the gentleman from Ohio will corroborate? My colleague, Mr. TAYLOR, came to me and requested that my colleague, Mr. HARRISON, should have an opportunity to speak to-night. I told him that he must take his chance for the floor with others. He said Mr. HARRISON did not want more than ten or fifteen minutes. I said that I would try to give him that time; but if the gentleman would wait till to-morrow, he could have his full hour; I added, that probably I could give him the floor to-night. My two colleagues afterwards came to me and said that if I would give Mr. HARRISON the floor to-night, he would not occupy much time. I said that I would try to do it, and I have done it.

Several MEMBERS. "That is all right."

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARRISON] claims the floor, he can have it for his hour.

Mr. SAGE. Let me inquire of the Chair if a similar agreement was not exacted from a member from Massachusetts, [Mr. ELIOT,] who addressed the committee to-day?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs that the committee will hear him explain this whole matter; for there seems to be a misunderstanding prevailing in regard to it. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] came to me this morning before the committee commenced its session, and I told him that probably, under the arrangement I had fixed in my mind, I should be able to accord to the members from Massachusetts an hour's speech to-day; that they must settle between themselves who should have the hour to-day, and that I would try to give them another hour to-morrow, but that they could divide the time, if two chose to speak to-day. The gentleman from Massachusetts will corroborate that.

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts. I desire to say one word in addition to what the Chair has stated: When I approached the Chairman this morning, I found him in conversation with one of my colleagues upon the subject of the floor, which my colleague was asking for. Before I came up, the Chair had said to my colleague, who had just stated that he wanted about thirty minutes, that he should have that time. As I approached, the Chair said to me, knowing, undoubtedly, the object which I had in coming, "Now, sir, you shall settle this matter with your colleague; and if you can divide an hour between you, you shall have it to-day." I assented on the spot, for I was glad of an opportunity of being heard even during that time.

Mr. HUNT. I protest against such suggestions from the Chair. There is but one rule, and it is the duty of the Chair to dispense the law of the House fairly and equitably.

[Cries of "Order!" and great confusion.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks he understands the duties of the Chair. If he does not, he will very cheerfully resign the position.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I insist on the regular order. My colleague [Mr. COLQUITT] is entitled to the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia will proceed.

Mr. STEPHENS. Before my colleague goes on, I will state to the House, that the practice which has been disclosed by the Chair has been usual ever since I have been in Congress. I consider, so far from its being an outrage, that it is a great accommodation to those gentleman who desire to speak.

Mr. HUNT. It is a curtailment of time, and therefore it is a retrenchment of privilege.

Mr. KEITT. I insist that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT] shall be allowed to proceed without further interruption.

Mr. COLQUITT then proceeded, and advocated the passage of the bill.

Mr. UPHAM said that if this bill should become a law, it would effect an entire and radical change of the policy on which this Government was formed, and by which it has been administered from the first. The country would be swung from its moorings, and, with all its precious freight, embark on an untraversed and unknown, and, it may be, a stormy if not fatal sea.

He proceeded to show that the Union could not have been formed if the slavery obstruction had not been removed. It was not thought there would be an acquisition of any additional territory, and the Constitution was intended to apply to the country as it at that time existed. He gave an interesting history of the settlement of the Northwest Territory, and spoke of the ordinance of 1787, the Missouri compromise, and the compromise of 1850; and, in conclusion, predicted disastrous consequences from the abrogation of political compacts.

Mr. MAXWELL obtained the floor.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask the gentleman to yield the floor to enable me to move that the committee rise?

Mr. MAXWELL yielded for that purpose.

Mr. CAMPBELL then submitted the motion. The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill (No. 236) to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

• The question was taken; and the motion agreed to; and then

At half past ten o'clock, the House adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

[See Appendix for the above named speeches.]

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 11, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that, in conformity with the request of the Senate, the House of Representatives had directed him to return the bill for the relief of David Myerle.

REPORT FROM A STANDING COMMITTEE.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the legal representatives of the late Colonel John Anderson, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

REPORTING OF THE SENATE.

Mr. BRIGHT. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to contract with the proprietors of the Washington Sentinel for the daily publication of the debates and proceedings of the Senate, provided it can be done on the terms provided by the resolution of the Senate, passed the 11th August, 1848, directing the publication of the debates and proceedings of the Senate in the National Intelligencer and Union.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the subject.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. President, occupying the relations which I do towards the Committee on Printing, I deem it proper to make a few remarks in reference to this resolution. The subject of the reporting of the proceedings of this body has engaged the anxious deliberations of the Committee on Printing for some time past, and it has occupied, to some extent, the attention of the press in this District. Now, sir, if it were a new question, and I were to inquire into it for the first time, I should be opposed to having any reporter in this body but one, and I would put that paper on a suitable footing for the purpose of preserving the debates of the Senate.

It will be recollected that some six weeks, or two months since, the then proprietor of the Union declined, temporarily, the publication of the reports of this body. A change, however, was made in the proprietors of that press; and I understand that the new proprietors have undertaken the reports, and claim the right to publish the proceedings in this body under the contract of the former proprietor. At the time when that request from General Armstrong, then proprietor of the Union, to be released from his contract with the Senate for the publication of the reports, came before us, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] submitted a proposition to increase the compensation allowed the Globe, the allegation being that it could not afford to publish the proceedings of the body at the compensation then allowed it. That subject was referred to the Committee on Printing, and it underwent the scrutiny and deliberation of the committee. About it there was a diversity of opinion, and you have now lying on your table a report on the subject.

In the mean time the subject attracted the attention of some of the press, as I before remarked, and it is yet an unsettled question with this body, whether we shall increase the compensation of the Globe, or whether the Union has a right to report the proceedings at all, and claim compensation. If it be the fact that the proprietor of the Globe cannot afford to report and publish our proceedings at the compensation now allowed him, it seems to me that neither the proprietors of the Union nor of the Sentinel can.

Without attempting to throw any thing like a serious obstacle in the way of this resolution, for the present, I must say that I think the Senate might well pause, and suffer the question to be investigated, before we embark in the expenditure likely to accrue to the Treasury by the adoption of this proposition. We have already two reporters for the Senate, the Union and the Globe, and the only possible ground, it seems to me, upon which an appeal could be made to the Senate in favor of this proposition is, that the proprietor of the Sentinel is printer to the Senate.

I do not suppose any gentleman on this floor will undertake to deny that the reports in the Globe give us all the details, and furnish the country with all the information necessary in relation to our proceedings. The editor of that paper, who has a corps of reporters—and I believe no one will hesitate to award to that corps great ability and great accuracy—alleges that he cannot live at the present prices allowed him; and yet, at the same time, papers recently founded are willing to take the work, I presume, at the same prices. I have deemed it due to the Senate and the committee to submit these remarks in reference to this proposition.

I cannot for my life see the necessity for three reporters to this body. It was the sense of the committee that we should have but one. I know the matter underwent the investigation of the committee, and the only disagreement was as to the compensation proposed to be given to the proprietor of the paper, which we recommended should be the permanent reporter of the body. It seems to me that, with the expensive and well regulated establishment of the proprietor of that paper, and with the ability and accuracy characterizing its reports, there is no necessity for incurring the additional expense of requiring three reporters. I am opposed to the adoption of the resolution, and I am unwilling to saddle the additional expense which it will create upon the country, unless there be an imperative necessity for it.

It occurs to me that the obvious course of the Senate would be to put that paper which we all recognize as the established reporter for the body, and that we hold responsible for an accurate report, upon a solid footing, and to allow its proprietor a compensation by which he can live. If this were done we might dispense with other reporters than those of that paper. It is not a political paper. It is conducted by a gentleman of great experience, and he brings to his aid men of high character and abilities, to give permanence to the reports of that paper, and they become part of the archives of the country to which we are to look hereafter for an accurate history of our proceedings. It seems to me that is all the Senate ought to desire.

So far as the reports now purporting to be made by the Union are concerned, I understand the proprietor of that paper claims the right to do so under a contract with the former proprietor. That question has not been investigated, and I cannot undertake to say what will be the sense of the Senate, if the question were to be raised. But, sir, to add a third, when the Intelligencer declined it, and the Union itself, in the hands of another party, declined the work at present prices, and when we are making an effort to put the Globe upon a stable and firm foundation, seems to me to be remarkable.

I may say further, that one inducement to recommend an increased compensation to the Globe, was the fact that the Union had declined the work, and that the Intelligencer had declined it, and it was deemed necessary to have one stable establishment. That was a strong argument urged by some of the friends of the increased compensation to the Globe why we should agree to their proposition. My impression is, that we should continue the Globe; but if we add another paper to the list of reporters, we thereby weaken, in a corresponding ratio, the ability of the Globe to furnish such reports as are now furnished, which we all concede to be creditable to the body and the country. Such are my views.

Mr. BRIGHT. I am sure that the honorable Senator from Alabama does not understand the facts of this case. When he does, I am satisfied that I shall have his vote for my resolution. In 1848 the Senate, by resolution, directed their Secretary to contract with the editors of the National Intelligencer and Union for printing the debates and proceedings of this body, provided it could be done at a price stated therein. The Secretary accordingly entered into a written contract with the proprietors of each of these papers. That contract, I believe, was carried forward for some six months, or perhaps longer, by the Intelligencer—the time is immaterial. It was then abandoned by that paper, on the ground that it did not pay a profit. Ritchie & Heiss were, at the time the contract was entered into, proprietors of the Union. They subsequently sold out to General Armstrong. General Armstrong, by letter, accepted the terms of the contract made by his predecessor. The only contract existing between the Senate and General Armstrong, is the letter I refer to, saying that he would carry out the same, according to its provisions. He did so until December last, when he wrote the letter which I have on my table, declining a further compliance on his part, on the ground that his contract did not pay a sufficient compensation, and asking the Senate to relieve him from the implied obligation which he had taken on himself by his letter of December, 1853. I have both the letters before me.

There was no legal obligation resting upon General Armstrong to perform this service. He had a perfect right to abandon it whenever he found it was a source of loss or embarrassment to him, and entirely respectful and proper for him to do as he did. The proprietors of the Sentinel thereupon addressed a communication to this body, proposing to perform the same work that General Armstrong declined, at the same price.

Both communications were referred to the Committee on Printing. That committee reported them back, simply requesting that they be discharged from the further consideration of the subject. I understand that the then chairman of the committee, about that time, directed Mr. Nicholson (the Union newspaper having, in the mean time, passed into his hands) to perform this service, assuring him that he should be paid at the same rate as was allowed and paid to his predecessor.

Now, sir, neither the late nor present proprietors of the Union had or have any contract with the Senate. The Senate may, with the greatest propriety, employ any one else; and whom can they employ with so much propriety as the printer whom they have elected for this body?

My resolution, however, does not propose to interfere with existing relations between that paper and this body—not at all. It simply proposes that the Sentinel shall perform like service, provided its proprietors will perform it on the same terms.

The honorable Senator from Alabama is mistaken, when he says, that by the adoption of my resolution this work will be paid for three times. The publisher of the Globe only, I believe, is paid for reporting the proceedings of this body, and even he is complaining that the price paid is not sufficient, and asks for an increase of compensation. Mr. Nicholson, also, in his letter requesting to be continued as publisher, &c., to the body, asks for increased compensation, and I have no doubt there is much justice in the request.

But the proprietors of the Sentinel make no such request. Rather than occupy the outside position they now do; rather than deprive their readers of a full and complete report of the proceedings of the body of which they are officers, they offer to accept the terms of your resolution, and will, I have no doubt, comply with the very letter of its provisions, if it shall be the pleasure of the Senate to pass the order.

Mr. BROWN. I am very glad to hear the Senator from Indiana say there is no contract with the editor of the Union to do our reporting, for certainly the reporting is done in that paper, in my judgment, in an exceedingly unsatisfactory way; but we have no right to complain if we are under no contract, and therefore under no obligation to pay for it. He who contracts with the Senate to report its proceedings, ought to do it, and do it promptly; but who does not know that the proceedings of the Senate are deferred in the columns of the Union, sometimes for seven or eight days, and even longer? I believe, in fact, some are not published at all. The questions to which they relate lose all their interest when the publication is deferred, and then, when the public has been allowed to make up its mind and come to a conclusion, on insufficient evidence, on one side of the question, the other is sent out to it. This, I think, is a just cause of complaint, if we are paying the editors to publish the proceedings of the Senate. If, however, they are doing it on their own account, they have a right to select such matter as they think proper to print, and to print it at such times as they think proper. I believe that the debate which sprung up here incidentally the other day, on the President's veto message, has not yet appeared in the Union. The message has appeared, and has gone to the country. The editors of that paper have thought proper to make their comments on it; but if the debate which occurred in the Senate on the subject has appeared in that paper, it has escaped my observation. I think a paid reporter of the Senate has no right to act in this way, but that he ought to publish the proceedings, and publish them promptly; and if he cannot do that, he should throw down his contract, and cease to ask pay for doing that which he does not do at all, or which, at least, he does not do in a proper way.

Before we enter into a contract with another paper, I should certainly like to know from some who are conversant with the subject, whether it is going to do this work in a more prompt way; whether our proceedings are to appear in some reasonable time after they have transpired; because, if they are not, I shall be just as much opposed to paying him as anybody else. When questions are discussed here, it is of the first importance to Senators themselves that the debates should be published, and published promptly, so that, while the matter is before the country, it may have a fair opportunity of making up a just and proper judgment in regard to it. It is not fair, it is exceedingly unjust, to defer the publication of our proceedings until the public mind is made up on the question to which they relate; for, in this go-ahead age of ours, when the mind has once concluded upon a subject, it cannot be reopened, unless by some very powerful appeal, or an altogether new presentation of the question. For these reasons I should like to know from my friend from Indiana, whether there is a prospect that the proprietors of the Sentinel will keep up the publication with the proceedings of the Senate, or in some reasonable time, say within a day or two after they occur?

Mr. BRIGHT. I will answer the question by saying that I have no means of knowing that fact; but these persons are employed at the will of the Senate, and they can be dismissed at any time. If a person employed under an order which we make, neglects his duty, it is in the power of the Senate to dismiss him at any time; but I take it for granted, as a matter of course, that if this service be undertaken by the proprietors of the Sentinel, they will perform it faithfully. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, I shall move to refer this resolution to the Committee on Printing, and I wish to give my reasons for doing so. It is well known that some three years since—I think last March three years ago—the editors of the Intelligencer, an old-established paper here of many years' standing, threw up a similar contract with the one now proposed to be made, because they could not afford to fulfill it at the price allowed them. It is also known that the late proprietor of the Union did the same thing. It is further well known that the editor of the Globe, who certainly prepares the debates of this body and of the other House of Congress with an ability and accuracy that cannot be surpassed, has made a publication lately, which I have seen, in which he shows that he loses a large amount of money by reporting at the present rates. Now, I know what will be the result of all this. These gentlemen will not print for nothing, nor without a profit; and at the close of this session of Congress, we shall be called upon to make up to them what they have lost by this contract.

Mr. President, I think that one official paper for the Senate and the House of Representatives, is enough. We have the Congressional Globe, which is ably conducted, with a reporting corps, in my opinion, equal to any in this country, and my impression is that we had better dispense with the rest of the papers which report our proceedings fully, and have but that alone. I think the proposition of General Armstrong to decline his contract, should have been accepted, as that of the National Intelligencer was accepted. I think it is better not to have the reporting and printing of the debates of the Senate and of the House, connected with the political papers of this District any longer. Originally our reporting was given to one paper of each party. Subsequently, the editor of the Globe, who has for a long time printed the proceedings of Congress, came into the reporting.

I move, now, to refer this resolution to the Committee on Printing; and I hope the committee will give the subject a thorough investigation. I think the proper course for us to pursue, is to have but one official paper for the Senate; and let that be the Globe. I believe further, that at the end of this session of Congress, all these printers who are printing for nothing, and finding themselves, will come in for additional compensation, and claim twenty or thirty per cent. for what they have done, in addition to the prices they have received. I have seen that done heretofore; and I have no doubt it will be done again. I think, however, that we should be doing our duty to the country by having one official paper in which the proceedings are to be published. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think my honorable friend from Indiana is laboring under a mistake, when he says that the Globe is reporting without claiming compensation.

Mr. BRIGHT. I did not say the Globe.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I should have said that the Senator's remark applied to the Union. He asserted, as I understood, that the Union was publishing our proceedings without claiming compensation.

Mr. BRIGHT. Not at all. I said I understood the Union was continuing the publication of reports under an arrangement with the Committee on Printing.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not at all.

Mr. BRIGHT. Then I should like to know by what terms, or on what authority it is proceeding?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I will explain. The former proprietor of the Union requested the Senate to release him from his obligation to report the proceedings. His communication was referred to the Committee on Printing, but before that committee acted upon it the proprietor died, as is known to the Senate. We then concluded to defer action until the paper was placed in the hands of some other person; at least we did not act upon it until after the present proprietor got possession of the Union. He then addressed a communication to the Committee on Printing, claiming the right to report under the contract made with a former proprietor. That contract was examined by the committee, and we regarded it as a judicial question, and signified to him that if he considered himself entitled to report under the contract, he could proceed, but that we were not called upon to say whether he was entitled to claim the benefit of the former contract or not; hence we reported a resolution to the Senate, asking simply to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject. We believed that it was a question between him and the accounting officers, whether they would recognize him as legally authorized to report our proceedings, and receive compensation for doing so. I understand, that since that period he has assumed the character of reporter, and has received compensation for reporting the debates of this body from that time until the present. Such I understand to be the facts; and this is the history of the matter.

Now, sir, if this were a new question, and I had to select a reporter for this body, I should certainly be willing to confer the reporting on the gentleman who has been selected by the majority of this body to do its work. But I sympathize, as I remarked before, with the sentiments of the honorable Senator from California, and I believe it was the deliberate opinion of the committee that we should have but one person to furnish reports, and put him upon a footing that will enable him to have the reports done correctly, and in a manner that will be creditable to himself and to the country.

I think the evidence which we have before us, is sufficient to satisfy the mind of every Senator that the reports in the Globe are equal to any in any country. Where, then, is the necessity to appoint an additional reporter? We already have two. Is it to afford information to the members of this body? By no means, because we have the Globe and the Union laid upon our tables every morning; and in the absence of the Union, if it is the judgment of the Senate that that paper is not an authorized reporter, here is the Globe. What then, I repeat, can be the object of creating the additional expense of $20,000? I am not accurate as to the amount; but I think it is near that sum. I ask the Senate, where is the necessity for adding the additional expense of $20,000, when we have reports, made in the style in which they are made in the Globe, and when we are informed by the proprietor of that paper, that unless he receives increased compensation, he cannot continue to give those reports?

Divide the annual expense of between $60,000 and $70,000 between several, and your reporting will not be on as good a footing, and not so calculated to give satisfaction to the country, or to this body, as if you were to take half the amount, or less than half the amount, and appropriate the money for the payment of a solitary reporter.

These are the reasons which have influenced me in coming to the conclusion which I have expressed to the Senate. I reiterate, that we had better dispense with all the reporters but one; and such was the opinion of the Committee on Printing when we investigated the matter. We came to that determination; and, after we had reported the facts, recommended an increased number of the Congressional Globe to be taken for each Senator.

The present proprietor of the Union says that he is entitled to the contract of the former proprietor of that paper, and under that contract he has gone on making reports, and is receiving compensation for them, as I am assured. It is a matter of indifference to me whether the Senate refer the resolution to the Committee on Printing, or dispose of it now. Whichever the Senate prefers will suit me; but my deliberate judgment and conviction is that which I have expressed, that we had better confine the reporting to one paper, and place that upon such footing as that it can live, and perpetuate the records of the Senate. I have no objection to the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Printing; and if it be so referred, I pledge myself to investigate it thoroughly, and endeavor to do ample justice to all parties. It is from no prejudice or prepossession for or against any paper, that I have expressed myself in the way I have done. The one which I intimate should be selected is the permanent reporter of this body. That paper has no connection with politicians or politics. It is laboring for the compensation which it receives for the reporting, and to rear up for itself a reputation as a faithful and carefully prepared record of Congressional proceedings.

These remarks I have deemed it proper to make, in answer to what was said by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. GWIN. I desire to amend the motion which I made to refer the resolution to the Committee on Printing, so as to instruct them to report on the expediency of abolishing all contracts for reporting the proceedings of the Senate, except that made with the Congressional Globe.

Mr. BRIGHT. I am opposed to the amendment, and to the reference. I consider that a reference of the resolution to the committee would defeat it. The honorable Senator from Alabama speaks about the expense resulting from three reporters. This body pays but one reporter; and he is paid through the compensation allowed to the Globe, as I am informed, at least. I see no reporter for the Union seated in that desk as heretofore. If I am correct, then the only reporting done here is paid for by the Globe, and the reports of the Globe are carried into the Union.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Do I understand the statement of the Senator from Indiana, to be that the Union newspaper is not paid for our reporting?

Mr. BRIGHT. It is paid so much per column, but nothing extra for reporting.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The price received by the Globe, per column, if I am correctly informed by the Secretary, is received by the Union. Am I right in that, Mr. Dickens?

Mr. BRIGHT. The Union and the Globe are now paid the compensation contemplated by the original resolution; nothing more. What they receive is so much per column.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I understand that to be the fact with all the papers. I mean by reporting, receiving so much per column; and I undertake to say that the Union receives the same compensation as the Globe receives.

Mr. BRIGHT. The Senator is correct in that. Now, Mr. President, the object of my resolution is nothing more than this: to give the editors of the Sentinel newspaper the same compensation, for publishing our debates and proceedings, as has hitherto been paid, and is now being paid to other papers in this city.

Mr. DAWSON. Do I understand from the Senator from Indiana that the Union and the Globe receive the same compensation?

Mr. BRIGHT. They do.

Mr. DAWSON. And your information is, that the Union copies the proceedings from the Globe?

Mr. BRIGHT. I understand that to be the fact, but I beg leave to be understood as not censuring or complaining of this course.

Mr. DAWSON. That is all I wanted to ascertain.

Mr. BRIGHT. I am very sorry that the debate has assumed the shape it has. It may be construed into hostility to one paper and partiality for another. I can say, however, in all sincerity, with the honorable Senator from Alabama, that I have neither prejudice nor partiality in this case. I am for meting out even-handed justice to all parties interested, and as we have elected a printer to this body, who is the publisher of a daily paper of general circulation, in justice to him, so long as we continue to publish our proceedings, we ought to give him the same privilege that we have given the proprietors of the Globe and Union. If we are not prepared to treat him and his readers with that respect, I would advise him to resign the position which he occupies as an officer of this body.

There is no force, Mr. President, to my mind, in the argument that we are extending this service beyond the wants of the community; each of these papers have different readers. It is to the papers of the capital the public look for a full and accurate report of our doings, and the additional expenditure resulting from selecting a third channel of communication is insignificant compared to the convenience and advantage resulting from it. I would be far from appropriating money to any such object, if the only end to be attained was a pecuniary benefit to those we employ. We have no right (let our private feelings be what they may) to apply the public funds from any such considerations. I approve a reasonable expenditure of public money for the object indicated in the resolution before us, believing the public get value received for it.

From what has been said by the honorable Senator from California, and the honorable Senator from Alabama, one might infer that this was an issue made between the Union and Sentinel. No such issue was intended by me. If my resolution had proposed to accept the offer of the proprietors of the latter, and refuse that of the former, then there would have been some ground for such an inference; but it does no such thing. It was to avoid any such imputation, and to place both on an equal footing, believing at the same time, the public interest would be subserved by so doing, that I offered the resolution under consideration, and I must be permitted to say that I am surprised to see opposition from the quarter it comes. As to a reference of it to the Committee on Printing, I am utterly opposed. There are but two members of that committee present. One of them, the honorable Senator from Alabama, has already avowed his opposition to the employment of more than one reporter, and his argument would justify the belief that he was opposed to printing generally.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I said I was for having but one reporter.

Mr. BRIGHT. The honorable Senator's view, he will permit me to say, is behind the age. That argument would have answered a quarter of a century ago; but the honorable Senator is opposed to my proposition; and therefore I do not consent to send it to be cared for by its enemies. How the chairman of that committee, the Senator from Arkansas, views this matter, I know not, but I hope in a more friendly light than the honorable Senator from Alabama. I doubt not he does; but I should object to a reference, under the circumstances, if I knew a favorable report would follow, because it is a plain, simple proposition, and needs no explanation from any one. Every Senator is as well prepared to say now whether he will or will not make the Sentinel the equal of the Union, so far as regards its relationship to this body, as he will be after the Committee on Printing shall have reported.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no doubt the Senator from Indiana wishes to do justice to the Union, so far as he is concerned, and I wish to see justice done to them all, so far as I am concerned. The Union has its reporters here. We will correct that at once; but as to the manner in which they discharge the duties that are imposed upon them as reporters here I have nothing to say, though I have heard the manner in which they do discharge their duties questioned. With reference to the proposition of the Senator from Indiana, I have to say that it strikes me as eminently just and equal. If we give the reporting and printing of the debates of this body to the Union, it is nothing more than fair and just that they should be given to the Sentinel also. If, sir, the public desire neither, let them both be stricken out.

Mr. GWIN. I am in favor of that.

Mr. JOHNSON. If I am to vote for the retention of the one, I shall certainly vote for the establishment of the other; but if I am called upon to reject one, I shall certainly advocate the rejection of the other. The Union has it. The validity of the contract with that paper is a matter which I see is questioned seriously upon this floor; so that some seem to regard it as scarcely having a contract at all—that there is no validity in the contract. The other, which is the recognized organ—as printer—of the body by our own election here, asks that it may have it, and report the proceedings of the body.

There is yet another consideration, and that is this: If it be just to go on and give the printing of the proceedings and debates of the body to two Democratic papers, where is the justice, if it be demanded, of refusing to give it to a paper of the Whig party? I shall feel myself equally bound, in all fairness and justice, to the other side of this body, if application be made upon the part of a Whig journal to print the proceedings, to support the proposition, and to give it the printing also.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Such a proposition is before the Senate?

Mr. JOHNSON. What proposition?

Mr. BRODHEAD. A proposition to pay the Intelligencer.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Intelligencer declined to continue the reporting, but may renew it again. If it is profitable to the Sentinel, I conceive it would be so to any paper; and the question resolves itself into this: do we need any other paper of this city to print our reports other than the one which has had the whole contract for reporting, and has discharged its duty so well to this body and the other branch of Congress? If we do, it seems to me clear at once, in accordance with justice and good sense, that the papers of both political parties in the city should all have a chance if they make the application. I see no other way to proceed in order to do justice.

I have been recently placed upon the Committee on Printing, and that is my excuse for joining in this debate at all, particularly as this resolution has not been before the committee since I have been a member of it.

The Senator from Indiana says the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Printing will be the death of it. I assure him that, if it goes before that committee, it will meet with no prejudice on my part, either for or against it; but it will meet with a simple disposition, to evolve and establish some principle by which the whole matter may be disposed of justly.

I call the attention of the Senate to another matter. Before I was a member of the Committee on Printing, I offered a resolution—and subsequently investigated the subject to a very considerable extent—as to whether the Globe newspaper was receiving a sufficient compensation. One of the members of that committee, [Mr. HAMLIN,] who was disposed to leave it, was anxious that I should take his place; but I could not accede to the solicitation until they had disposed of the resolution which I had offered on that subject. The investigation which I originated has been disposed of by the committee. Their report was made before the former chairman of the committee resigned his place; and it is now upon your tables for consideration. With the consideration of the question of increased compensation to the Globe, which every one certainly will be anxious to sustain, must necessarily come up the consideration of all the expenditures that are involved in reporting and printing the debates of this body. To consider this resolution, therefore, now, and thus to settle the question, will hardly be fair to the subject, for it embraces but a very small part of it. It is impossible to act upon this resolution, with justice to yourselves and the subject, without having the whole case before us. This I respectfully submit to the Senate. I do not advocate the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Printing; but if it is thought better to refer it, I have no objection to do what is my duty in regard to it. Yet I maintain, that all these resolutions, and the report of the Committee on Printing, in regard to the necessity of increasing the compensation to the Globe, should be considered at the same time, so that some permanent settlement of the matter may be made by which it shall be determined that both of these papers (the Union and the Sentinel) shall be appointed to report and print the debates of the body, or that both shall be rejected from that service. I do not know that I am right in those views, but it seems to me that I am.

There is another question, one of fact, and to that I call the attention of the Senate. The fact is this: I do not know but that it is supererogation to call the attention of the Senate to it at all, for it is notorious to every one; and it is uttered by me in no unkindness toward any one. The printing that is done outside the columns of the Globe, in the shape of printing the reports of the proceedings and debates for this body, whether done in the Union, or done formerly in the Intelligencer, or any other paper, is very generally done with reference to profit, and not with reference to the occasion, and to speedy, immediate, direct, and correct execution of their task. That is so. It is notorious that the Globe, working night and day, constantly and incessantly, keeping full bodies of reporters and of type-setters ready, whether they have services to perform and are furnished with matter by the reports of our proceedings and debates or not, brings out the matter the next day in almost every solitary instance; and it is a very common thing that a Senator rises here, and makes a speech, and by the time he gets down into the city, he has a printed copy of it in his hands ready to read.

That is the manner in which the reporting is done for that paper; but the speed with which the reports are got out, as a necessary consequence, coerces and compels the proprietor to go into a very heavy disbursement of money. It is notorious again, on the other hand, that when the public papers and daily journals undertake this kind of service, days elapse before you see any particle of the report, and the reporters that they employ here are useless, so far as any necessity exists for them, because they may give a full report, and that too corrected by Senators themselves, if they will go to the columns of the Globe. That they do go there I do not allege, because I know that the Union has its reporters; but I know also that I have heard the allegation that, in many instances, from the extraordinary similarities of the reports, they must have gone there. I know also that they have their reporters; and, in one instance, when I called for my own remarks, they made an accurate report of them.

But, sir, it is notorious that the reports of these papers do not come up to the expectations of this body, and meet the call for them from the public, and that the reports of the debates of the body go forth to the world through the columns of the Globe. It is the received and recognized organ, and it is the one to which Senators go for the purpose of correcting their speeches. It is the legitimate and authorized enunciation of the debates that take place upon this floor. Whether it is necessary, or right, or appropriate, that we should continue the publication in the Union, I do not know; but satisfied am I that if it is proper to continue it, we should continue to publish in the whole of them; and if the Intelligencer, or the Whig organ should come in, I should feel bound to say that they should have their reporters upon this floor, as well as the others.

Mr. BRIGHT. I merely desire to say, in reply to the Senator from Arkansas, that it is my intention, when the Sentinel shall be placed upon an equal footing with the other papers, to introduce a resolution devolving upon the committee, of which that Senator is chairman, the duty of seeking to systemize the reports of our proceedings here. Until, however, the Sentinel is placed upon an equal footing with the other papers, I shall not make the motion. After the Senate shall have voted on my resolution, and adopted it, as I have no doubt they will, I promise that I will offer a resolution referring the entire subject to the Committee on Printing; and, from what the Senator says, I have no doubt we shall get a fair report.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to ask the Senator a question. It is questioned whether the Union newspaper has any contract at all by which it has a right to call for pay. Of course, gentlemen will not refuse to pay for its services, as far as they have gone. We know that, without any kind of doubt, they will be paid for, whether the services are contracted for or not; but the matter ought to be investigated and determined, and they either should not be permitted to go on at all, or should be permitted to go on with power to draw pay. But the question which I desire to ask the Senator is, if, while the matter rests in that attitude, we should order a contract to be made with the Sentinel, will it any longer rest in our power—will the editor so frame the contract—to dispense with the whole of them?

Mr. BRIGHT. It is in the power of the Senate to dispense with all the contracts. They are on the table, and can be read. They are at the will of the Senate, and the parties can be dismissed at any time. The order of the Senate would dismiss them all this morning. There can be no objection on that score.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I agree with what the two Senators, who have just spoken, have said. I think we ought to put the Sentinel upon an equal footing with the other papers. I do not concur in the idea that we should have three reporters. I think there should be but one corps of reporters, and that that corps should be under the direction of the Globe, as it now is; and that the other papers should copy their reports from it. There would be many advantages resulting from that course. If we have three corps of reporters, we have a variance in their report, and a Senator has to correct three different copies, or be liable to misconstruction in having wrong, unrevised copies put in circulation.

I believe, therefore, one corps of reporters, who would publish their reports the next morning, and then have them copied into the other political papers of the city would be the best plan. With that view, I shall vote to put the Sentinel on an equality with the Union and the Intelligencer. I shall then vote for the motion of the Senator from Indiana, to refer the whole subject for revision to the Committee on Printing, in order to make such changes as they think proper. To refuse to put our own printer on an equality with the other political papers of the city, strikes me as remarkable. I did not vote for that printer, but I am not willing to give a vote here that would make us show an invidious distinction against him, as would seem to be a mark of condemnation to the country; and especially as a Democrat, I would not do it, when we have not hesitated to give the same printing to a Whig paper. But I hold that politics have nothing to do with the question. It is proper to put all on an equality, and then adjust the pay and duties in such a manner as we shall see proper, after the report of the committee has been made.

Mr. GWIN. It must be evident to the Senate that the proper course to pursue is to agree to the motion which I have made, to refer the whole subject to the Committee on Printing. I withdraw the instructions which I added to that motion; but the whole question certainly should go to that committee. I know the fact, and it is known to all Senators who have inquired into the matter, that the conductor of the Globe is losing now $1 50 a column by the printing of the reports of this body. I do not make my motion because I wish to show any invidious distinction against the printer of the Senate, nor do I wish to deprive him of any legitimate profits of the reporting for the Senate. Mr. President, there is no profit in it. It is notorious, the fact cannot be disputed, that the price we pay does not pay the expenses of the reporting and printing. No paper in the country is conducted on a more economical plan than the Globe, and it is well known that the conductor of that paper cannot pay his expenses, and we cannot expect our printer to print the proceedings of the Senate, unless we anticipate giving him a profit upon what he will do now at a loss.

I am entirely opposed to continue adding to the papers which are to report our proceedings. It is perfectly well known that it is a losing business to all the papers. The Senator from Illinois refers to the Intelligencer. Its editors get nothing from us. They gave up their contract more than two years ago, and they have not received one dollar from us since. I think their reports—their abstract reports of our proceedings—are equal to any that I have seen.

But I am clearly of opinion that the whole subject should go to the Committee on Printing. Before we appoint another paper to print our proceedings, we ought to ascertain from the official report of that committee, the true state of things in reference to the papers that have been publishing our debates. I do not wish to throw anything in the way of the printer of the Senate. His journal is a well conducted paper; and he should receive all the patronage which he is entitled to as the printer of this body; but that is entirely outside of the reporting and printing of the debates of the Senate. It is not connected with the reporting at all. I think the subject ought to be thoroughly examined by the proper committee of the body, before we add another large item to our expenditure, the amount of which none can anticipate now. I withdraw the instructions, but insist on the reference, and ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The argument of the Senator from Indiana would imply that I had prejudged this question; and that it was from some opposition to the Sentinel that I have interposed resistance to his resolution. Now, it is due to me to say that there was no motion to refer the resolution to the committee when I addressed the Senate; and I was content that the Senate should dispose of it without a reference. I was also perfectly willing to avow my opinion in reference to the manner in which the reporting should be conducted. I trust no gentleman would mistrust me for a moment, and think that I would do other than impartial and even-handed justice to all. The editor of the Sentinel is a gentleman for whom I have a high regard; and, standing as he does, as the printer of the Senate, I have been prepared, at all times, to do him ample justice. But my object is not to favor this or that individual. It is to save the additional annual expenditure which I believe to be unnecessary. I have sent for an estimate of the annual amount which it costs to do our printing. If it is the sense of the Senate not to refer the resolution to the Committee on Printing, I will present that estimate when I receive it. I want the Senate to know the amount of additional unnecessary expense which it will throw upon the Government.

The Whig paper of this city, if I am not incorrectly informed, voluntarily abandoned its contract some three years ago. It declined to make the reports of the proceedings of the body, and hence the editor was willing to be released from the contract. The Union did the same thing at the commencement of this session; but after the paper got into new hands—the moving cause is better known to them than to me, for I never passed a word with the editor in my life—he proposed to resume the contract. The subject was referred to the Committee on Printing, but we did not undertake to determine whether he could proceed with the reporting or not.

I repeat, it is not to favor this or that individual that I have submitted these remarks; for, if the question were submitted to me to bestow equal patronage upon all the papers, if I know myself, I am prepared to mete out even-handed justice to the Whig party as well as to my party, in proportion to their relative strength upon this floor; but I am not looking at that. I am going behind it, and I want to protect the Treasury from a large additional expense when there is no necessity for it.

In reference to the Union—I was, perhaps, in error in not noticing the fact before—it is boldly charged that the Union has no reporters here. Often as I have seen those two gentlemen there in their seats, I declare to the Senate that I did not know which was for the Union, and which for the Globe, until I inquired a few moments ago. I understand that the gentleman furthest from me is the reporter for the Union. I think my friend from Indiana has done that paper injustice, for I understand that their reporters have been here regularly reporting all the time. In reference to the accuracy of their reports, to which allusion has been made by the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. BROWN,] I cannot undertake to speak. Whether the reports in the Union are made with the same accuracy as those in the Globe, I will not undertake to say, because I have never scrutinized them to ascertain the fact. So far as my knowledge extends, the reports are accurate. As to their time of publication, I cannot speak.

Mr. BROWN. I did not complain of the inaccuracy of the reports in the Union, but of the slowness of their publication.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That may be the fact. I am not, however, sufficiently informed to speak in regard to it, for I have generally gone to the Globe, and adopted the Globe in regard to any remarks which I have made; and since I have been in the Senate, I have had no cause to complain of that.

If it is the pleasure of the Senate to act upon the matter now, I will state in a few minutes the expense of reporting. At the first session of the Thirty-Second Congress, the Globe received $16,708 15, and at the second session $8,318 76, making an aggregate of $25,026 91. The Union received $15,849 36 the long session, and $7,788 60 the short session, being an aggregate of $23,637 96. I understand the discrepancy results from the fact that the length of the columns in the two papers is different. In addition to that, we have furnished a certain number of the Congressional Globe and Appendix to Senators, at a cost of $7,416 for the two sessions. Add these amounts together, and it makes an expenditure of $58,080 87 for the two sessions of a Congress; and to that it is now proposed to add the amount—supposing the columns of the Sentinel to be about equal to the Globe—of $25,000, which would make upwards of $80,000 for reporting for each Congress of two sessions.

If it be the sense of the Senate to enter into that expenditure, I have discharged my duty. I trust the Senate will not consider that I have obtruded my opinion upon the Senate. If a motion had been made at first to refer it to the Committee on Printing, I would not have opened my mouth. I was willing that the Senate should dispose of it. I entertain these opinions; I have not concealed them. I am indisposed to have more than one reporter for the body. I am willing to adopt the paper which does not belong to either political party, which we may hold responsible for accurate and correct reports. I think I show my disinterestedness in that. I have no prepossession for one paper more than for another. I was, however, disposed to disclose these facts to the Senate; and, so far as I am concerned, if it is the sense of the Senate to refer the matter to the Committee on Printing, to investigate it, I will investigate the subject, and come to as correct a conclusion as I can.

Mr. HUNTER. If Senators are disposed to take a vote now, I shall not submit the motion; otherwise I must move that the Senate take up the bill which has been returned from the President.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I hope we shall take the vote; the matter is not so momentous a one, and we all know something about this printing. I think we are all prepared to vote to-day.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on referring the resolution to the Committee on Printing; and on that question the yeas and nays have been called for.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STUART. I have no disposition to enter into the discussion of this subject now, if the Senator from Virginia wishes to submit his motion to proceed to the consideration of the Executive message; but before the question is taken I desire to present my views upon the subject.

Mr. HUNTER. Then I hope the Senate will permit me to make the motion to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the bill which I have mentioned.

The PRESIDENT. This resolution must first be disposed of before such a motion can be entertained.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I hope we will proceed with and dispose of this small affair.

Mr. BRIGHT. I hope the Senate will vote upon the proposition. It has been fully discussed.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Let us hear the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BRIGHT. I hope the Senator from Virginia will not press his motion, if the Senator from Michigan desires to go on.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I hope the Senate will not consider this matter now. We have no right to force its consideration at this time, and I hope its consideration will be postponed until to-morrow. I think sufficient has been already disclosed to justify its being sent to a committee, at least to prevent its being hastily passed upon by the Senate; for we shall hereafter be called upon to make large payments for the work that this resolution may authorize to be done. I am perfectly satisfied now that there ought to be but one reporter of the proceedings of the Senate; and I hope, at any rate, that my friend from Indiana will allow the resolution which has thus suddenly been brought before us to lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. BADGER. Let it lie over.

Mr. BRIGHT. If the Senator from Iowa wishes to be heard on this matter, of course I will not object.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. The Senator from Michigan does.

Mr. BRIGHT. The Senator from Michigan, I understand, is ready to go on now.

Mr. STUART. I wish to be heard; but the Senator from Virginia wishes to proceed to other business. I therefore move to postpone the further consideration of this resolution until to-morrow.

The question was put; and the PRESIDENT decided it not to be agreed to.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have no objection to the postponement.

The motion was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion by Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That Francis Meir have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

PETITION.

Mr. NORRIS presented the memorial of Edward Riddle, of Boston, praying the reimbursement of expenses incurred by him as agent of the American contributors to the Industrial Exhibition at London in 1851; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

DAVID MYERLE.

Mr. BRIGHT. I desire to submit the motion that the vote on the passage of the bill which we yesterday requested to be returned from the House of Representatives, and which has been returned this morning—the bill for the relief of David Myerle—be reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT. The motion will be entered on the Journal.

PRINTING PATENT OFFICE REPORT.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I desire to move a reconsideration of the vote yesterday adopting the resolution authorizing the printing of thirty-seven thousand five hundred copies of the agricultural portion of the Patent Office report.

Mr. GWIN. Did the Senator vote in the affirmative?

Mr. BRODHEAD. No division was had upon the question, and I acquiesced in it.

Mr. GWIN. Has the Senator the right to make the motion?

Mr. BRODHEAD. I acquiesced in the vote; and I believe the practice of the Senate is, that in such a case a Senator has the right to submit the motion.

The PRESIDENT. Was the Senator from Pennsylvania in the Chamber when the vote was taken, and did he acquiesce in the vote?

Mr. BRODHEAD. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair decides that the Senator has the right to submit the motion; and the motion will be entered on the Journal.

AMENDMENT OF SENATE RULES.

Mr. BRIGHT submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That hereafter, unless otherwise ordered, on bill, resolution, or other business, requiring to be communicated to the House of Representatives, shall be taken to that House by the Secretary until two days of actual session after that on which the same shall have been passed shall have intervened; but he shall then communicate every such bill, resolution, or other business to that House.

TORTUGAS FORTIFICATIONS.

Mr. MALLORY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to report to the Senate on the expediency of promptly completing the fortifications at Tortugas and Key West.

INDIGENT INSANE BILL VETO.

On the motion of Mr. HUNTER, the Senate proceeded to the reconsideration of the bill making a grant of land to the several States of the Union, for the benefit of indigent insane persons, which had been returned from the President of the United States, with his objections.

Mr. BADGER addressed the Senate, reviewing the several positions taken by the President in his veto message. [The speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. BUTLER. I do not propose to deliver my views on this question just at this time.

Mr. WELLER. If my friend from South Carolina consent, I will move an adjournment.

Mr. BUTLER. I was about to say that I should prefer to hear others; but as I intend to submit my views on this subject in justification of my vote at some time, I may perhaps as well do it at this stage of the debate. I will occupy perhaps an hour on this subject—not more.

Mr. WELLER. It is not probable that the Senate will take up this subject for consideration to-morrow, as to-morrow is private bill day. I shall insist on the Senate proceeding with private bills to-morrow. Therefore, with the consent of my friend from South Carolina, I will move that the further consideration of this subject be postponed until Monday next.

Mr. FOOT. Remembering that Monday has been assigned, by common consent, to the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CASS.] on another subject, I would suggest to the honorable Senator from California so far to modify his motion as to fix Tuesday.

Mr. WELLER. I understand that my friend from Michigan will not probably occupy the attention of the Senate on Monday for more than an hour or an hour and a half. I move, therefore, to postpone this subject to Monday; but I will not call it up on that day until the Senator from Michigan has been heard, in accordance with the agreement or understanding of the Senate.

Mr. FOOT. Then I have no objection to the motion to postpone until Monday.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 11, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury upon the condition of banks; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

DAVID MYERLE.

The SPEAKER. The Senate passed a bill for the relief of David Myerle, which came to the House yesterday. They, however, subsequently sent us a message requesting the withdrawal of the bill.

Mr. HAVEN. I move that the Clerk be directed to return the bill.

Mr. FLORENCE. I have great confidence in the justice of that claim, and I hope, under the circumstances, the bill will be returned.

The SPEAKER. It can be done only by unanimous consent.

There was no objection, and the Clerk was directed to return the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that all further debate in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on House bill No. 236, to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, be closed to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.; and on that motion I call for the previous question.

Mr. MACE. Will the gentleman allow me to make a single suggestion? I would ask that he move to postpone the closing of debate—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have made the motion, and it is now with the House to do what it pleases with it.

[Cries of "Yield to the suggestion!"]

Mr. MACE. I desire to suggest that the gentleman from Illinois will move to postpone the closing of debate on the Nebraska-Kansas bill until some day next week, so that every man in this House may have an opportunity of discussing it, inasmuch as it has never had any discussion before the people.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is a special order for Tuesday next. It is desirable that this bill should be disposed of this week, so that it may be taken out of the way of other pressing business. I have made my motion, and now ask for the question.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I ask to put a single question to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, with the consent of the House, will indulge the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Tennessee, in whatever explanation they may desire to make.

Mr. TAYLOR. I wish merely to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether I misunderstood him yesterday? I understood him to say, when he gave notice that he intended to make this motion to close debate, that he would not press it if the enemies of the measure desired further time in which to submit speeches on the subject?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman misunderstood me. He will find my remarks correctly reported in the Globe, and I refer him to them. The remarks I then made are as follows:

"I have to state that the time at which I shall propose to terminate debate will depend upon the opponents of the bill. If they show a disposition to go on and debate it, I am disposed to allow the utmost time that will be possible, in order to have a final vote on the bill before the special order takes precedence of it. If they do not show such a disposition, then I shall take it for granted that they do not desire further debate, and shall move to terminate it at the earliest hour."

Mr. CAMPBELL. I was of the impression that there was nothing said about the special order. [Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. GIDDINGS. I trust that the chairman of the Committee on Territories will permit me to say a single word.

The SPEAKER. If not objected to by the House, the gentleman from Ohio will be permitted to propound an interrogatory to the gentleman from Illinois.

[Cries of "I object!"]

Mr. GIDDINGS. We occupied seven months in admitting California as a State into the Union. I now understand that it is determined to close debate on this important bill in four days.

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I insist that my motion be put to the House.

Mr. MACE. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is aware that the subject is not debatable.

Mr. MACE. I am aware of it. I move to lay the motion to close debate on the table; and on that motion call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would appeal to my colleague to withdraw his motion for awhile.

Mr. GIDDINGS. As the yeas and nays are called on the motion to lay the motion to close debate on the table, I withdraw the motion which I made that there be a call of the House.

Mr. ENGLISH. I renew the motion that there be a call of the House.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to ask the Chair a question in relation to this matter.

The SPEAKER. If not objected to, the gentleman can proceed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I object, unless both sides are to be heard.

Many other MEMBERS objected.

The SPEAKER. It is objected to, and the Chair must execute the rules. The gentleman from Alabama cannot proceed.

Mr. HOUSTON. Have I not a right to ask the Chair a question in relation to the vote I am about to give?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to make a question of order; but he has no right, by interrogatories or otherwise, to debate a proposition of this kind.

Mr. HOUSTON. If I am not permitted to ask a question, so as to bring before the House a fact connected with the movement now being made, I will state it myself. If we postpone the time for closing the debate upon this bill until next week, or to a period so late that the opponents of the bill can, under the five-minute debate, prevent action upon it before next Tuesday, we may not be able to get it for weeks, if not months.

Next Tuesday the Pacific railroad bill comes up as a special order, and it will not be in order to move to postpone it if any one member objects. It being Tuesday, it will not be in order to move to suspend the rules; and if it were in order, it would require two thirds to carry the motion, which we have no hope of obtaining. Hence, if we do not get a vote before Tuesday, there is no telling when we will get it.

The question was then taken on Mr. ENGLISH's motion; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 88, nays 97; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bell, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Breckinridge, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Gamble, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Harrison, Haven, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lane, Linsley, McCulloch, Mace, Macy, Matteson, Maurice, Meacham, Middleswarth, Morgan, Murray, Noble, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, Puryear, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seymour, Skelton, William R. Smith, Snodgrass, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, and Wheeler—88.

NAYS—Messrs. Abernethy, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Boccock, Bridges, Caskey, Chamberlain, Chrisman, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craig, Curtis, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Eddy, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Florence, Franklin, Fuller, Green, Greenwood, Hamilton, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, Johnson, George W. Jones, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Lindley, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, May, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Packer, Parker, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Rowe, Rufin, Seward, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Richard H. Stanton, John J. Taylor, Vail, Vansant, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Wells, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zoll-coffer—97.

So the House refused to order a call.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. MACE to lay the resolution upon the table, on which the yeas and nays had been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 95, nays 100; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Caskey, Chamberlain, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Curus, Cutting, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Gamble, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Harrison, Haven, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Kerr, Kittredge, Knox, Lindley, Linsley, McCulloch, Mace, Matteson, Maurice, May, Meacham, Middleswarth, Millson, Morgan, Murray, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pratt, Pringle, Puryear, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seymour, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Daniel B. Wright—95.

NAYS—Messrs. Abernethy, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Boccock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Chrisman, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craig, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Eddy, Edmundson, English, Florence, Fuller, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Hamilton, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, Johnson, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Mace, Maxwell, May, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Noble, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Preston, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Rowe, Rufin, Seward, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Straub, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Witte, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—100.

So the House refused to lay the resolution on the table.

The question recurred on seconding the demand for the previous question.

When the name of Mr. SNODGRASS was called on the above vote, he stated that he had paired off with Mr. CORWIN, of Ohio, or he should have voted "No."

Mr. SLANTON, of Tennessee, stated that he had paired off with Mr. YATES, of Illinois.

Mr. EDGERTON. I would ask the gentleman from Illinois if he will consent to any modification of his resolution?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have already stated that there is no change that I can make so as to enable the bill to be disposed of before the special order comes up next week. Eighty speeches have already been made upon this question, which is more than have ever been made on any question in Congress.

Mr. EDGERTON. Well, sir, there are two hundred and thirty-three men here.

A MEMBER. Two hundred and thirty-four.

Mr. EDGERTON. Yes, two hundred and thirty-four men here, who have a right to speak if they see fit; and I know of no reason why ten men, or forty men, should be cut off from debate. If the gentleman will consent to a modification of his resolution in such a manner as to enable gentlemen to speak who desire to—

Mr. RICHARDSON. I decline to modify the resolution, and call for a vote on the previous question.

A MEMBER, (to Mr. EDGERTON.) How much time do you want?

Mr. EDGERTON. Say till Saturday at twelve o'clock.

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. EDGERTON. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Being slow of mind, I have not been able to make up my opinion on the motion offered by my colleague; I therefore ask to be excused from voting.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the gentleman from Ohio be excused from voting.

Mr. FARLEY. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I move to lay the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CULLOM] upon the table; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WENTWORTH] moves to lay the motion to excuse the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] upon the table. The Chair decides that that motion is not in order, for the reason that nothing can be accomplished by it. The motion to excuse the gentleman from Ohio must be taken without debate. Upon that motion the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 88, nays 102; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Ball, Barksdale, Bell, Benton, Bridges, Campbell, Chrisman, Clark, Cobb, Colquitt, Craig, Cullom, John G. Davis, Dick, Disney, Dunbar, Eddy, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Flagler, Florence, Goode, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Hamilton, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kurtz, Lane, Latham, Lilly, Lindley, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, May, John G. Miller, Millson, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, Phelps, Pratt, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Riddle, Rogers, Rowe, Rufin, Sage, Seward, Seymour, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, John J. Taylor, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Warren, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Witte, and Hendrick B. Wright—88.

NAYS—Messrs. Abernethy, Willis Allen, Banks, Barry, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Boccock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Brooks, Bugg, Carpenter, Caskey, Chamberlain, Chandler, Churchill, Clingman, Crocker, Curtis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dean, De Witt, Dickinson, Dowdell, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Franklin, Gamble, Giddings, Grow, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Roland Jones, Kerr, Kidwell, Kittredge, Knox, Lamb, Letcher, Linsley, McCulloch, Mace, Macy, Matteson, Maurice, Meacham, Middleswarth, Smith Miller, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Noble, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Phillips, Powell, Pringle, Reese, Richardson, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Tweed, Upham, Wade, Walker, Walley, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburne, Wells, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Daniel B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—102.

So the House refused to excuse the gentleman from Ohio from voting.

Mr. DEAN. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to lay the resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] upon the table. I appeal to the gentleman from Illinois to extend the time for closing debate until Saturday next, so as to give the opponents of the bill a fair opportunity to be heard.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HAMILTON. I rise to a question of order; that the motion made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEAN] is not in order.

The SPEAKER. For what reason?

Mr. HAMILTON. Because it accomplishes nothing.

Mr. ORR. No legislative end is gained by it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion to reconsider is not in order. The object which the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEAN] has in view could be attained quite as well by voting against the adoption of the resolution moved by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON], or by moving again to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Is the motion to reconsider debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. SAGE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to excuse the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] from voting, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SAGE] did not vote with the majority, and therefore cannot make the motion.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I voted with the majority, and I make the motion to reconsider.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. SAGE. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 109, nays 62; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Abernethy, James C. Allen, Ashe, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Barksdale, Belcher, Bell, Benton, Bocoek, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Bugg, Caskie, Chamberlain, Churchwell, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craig, Cumming, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Eddy, Edmundson, English, Etheridge, Florence, Goode, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Hamilton, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Hunt, Ingersoll, Johnson, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Knott, Kidwell, Kuriz, Lane, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Lindley, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, Meacham, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milston, Oids, Monceni Oliver, Orr, Parker, Peck, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Thomas Ringley, Robbins, Rogers, Ruffin, Seward, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Alexander H. Stephens, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, John Wentworth, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollieser—109.

NAYS.—Messrs. David J. Bailey, Bail, Barry, Bennett, Benson, Campbell, Carpenter, Chrisman, Clingman, Crocker, Culmon, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Evins, Farley, Fenton, Franklin, Gamble, Giddings, Grow, Howe, Daniel T. Jones, Kerr, Kittredge, Knox, Lindsley, McCulloch, Matteson, Maurice, Mayall, Middlebush, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Pennington, Pringle, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabine, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Stratton, John H. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Tappan Wentworth, and Wheeler—62.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

Mr. KERR. I desire to make a suggestion, which I think will prove satisfactory to the House, if they will allow me to make it.

[Cries of "Hear him!" "Hear him!"]

My suggestion is this: I am not disposed myself to curtail the debate, as everybody knows. I am disposed to see the rules of the House fairly executed, and the public business transacted. I propose that debate shall be extended through the present week, with the understanding that it shall be likewise extended so as to close during the next week. I ask the general consent of the House that this arrangement be made, and that the consideration of the Pacific railroad bill be postponed one week. I think that a fair proposition. I appeal to gentlemen by their love of order, and their regard for the interests of the country, to acquiesce in this proposition to extend the time of discussion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to gentlemen that on next Tuesday, and from day to day, until disposed of, the Pacific railroad bill is to be considered as a special order. That special order cannot be postponed except by unanimous consent; but if unanimous consent is given, it can be postponed to a particular day, when it will be the special order at that particular day.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Will the House permit me to make a suggestion and statement to the House? I am one of those who would resist, in any reasonable manner, all efforts to stifle debate upon the question which has been discussed for the last week or ten days. I desire that all gentlemen should have a hearing upon this subject who are disposed to speak. My proposition is this—and I think all will see its fairness and its practicability—to go on with the debate, and then, when all the gentlemen have been heard who desire to speak, those who propose to close the debate will certainly have good reason for doing so.

And if the proposition that has been made to close debate on this question to-day or to-morrow, be carried, there will be then many members who desired to speak, but who could not be heard. Now, it appears to me, that if we were allowed to go on with the discussion of this bill, we might close in four or five days. Let us, therefore, go on with debate in a proper spirit, and then when members who desired, have made their speeches, debate may be closed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair presumes that the gentleman from Tennessee did not understand the statement of the Chair; and if he will indulge him, the Chair will repeat his explanation. When Tuesday comes, the special order, to take up the Pacific railroad bill, will supersede all other business; and the proposition submitted by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. KERR.] is to postpone the consideration of that measure for one week.

Several gentlemen addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ETHERIDGE] still has the floor.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. It seems to be conceded by the friends of the bill, as well as by its enemies, that a fair discussion is all that is required. Now, there are many gentlemen, no doubt, who feel a personal solicitude upon this measure, and who desire to be heard. If that is the case, it is very hard to have debate closed within one, or two, or three days. Suppose we should go on and consume another week, and then debate should not be concluded on this bill, we might see that it could be closed in one or two days more. Suppose that, when we adjourn on Saturday evening, there should be half a dozen gentlemen desiring to speak, and who have not been heard, then, when we meet on Monday, we might well postpone the special order for a day or two; and if, on Tuesday morning, one or two gentlemen more desire to be heard, we might, by unanimous consent, postpone that special order for another day. And when every gentleman has thus had a fair opportunity of making known his sentiments on the subject of the Nebraska bill, a proposition to shut down debate will come with good grace from any quarter, and will not be resisted. If gentlemen insist on the proposition to close debate to-morrow, or Saturday, I shall vote against it, for the reason that I do not know whether myself or my friends, who desire to speak on the bill, may have an opportunity in that short interval to do so.

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the gentleman from Tennessee permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. WRIGHT. Does the gentleman from Tennessee make a proposition to dispose of the special order of Tuesday next by postponing it to a specified day?

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I do not feel authorized to make any particular proposition of the kind.

Mr. WRIGHT. If you are desirous that debate shall continue, make the proposition to postpone the special order to a certain day, and the friends of the bill will vote in favor of that proposition.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. I think, Mr. Speaker, that my proposition addresses itself to the understanding of every gentleman here. I am willing, as far as I am concerned, that debate shall be closed in a reasonable time next week. I am not authorized to make any proposition as to the postponement of the special order; but I am simply desirous that debate shall be closed after every gentleman who now desires to speak on the bill shall have been heard, and not before.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Mr. Speaker, I was determined to urge the consideration of the Pacific railroad bill when it should come up for consideration under the special order. And I still am determined to urge its consideration, unless under these circumstances. I am not disposed to stifle proper debate on this Nebraska question; and if the House unanimously desire the postponement of the special order on the Pacific railroad bill, and make that bill the special order for Tuesday week, or any specific day—if this be the unanimous desire of the House, for the purpose of discussing fully this question, I will consent to it.

Several Members. That is fair; let us do that.

Mr. SAGE. I object.

Mr. WHEELER. I appeal to the gentleman from New York to withdraw his objection.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I barely wish to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ETHERIDGE.] I would willingly unite in the proposition of the gentleman from California [Mr. McDOUGALL] to postpone the special order for one week, in order that this Nebraska bill might then, after the fullest discussion, be voted upon, if that was what those gentlemen acting with the gentleman from Tennessee really wanted; but I am certain that that is not what they want. We have been willing from the beginning to discuss this Kansas and Nebraska bill thoroughly and fully. It has been thoroughly discussed already. No question before this body since the foundation of this Government has been more thoroughly discussed than the leading questions involved in this bill. I think I may venture the assertion that more speeches have been made upon the bill than upon any one measure since I have been in Congress. We have been willing, and are still willing, that more may be made. We are willing to set and hear gentlemen as long as we can under the special order. We have been willing to sit here all night. Infirm in health as I have been, I have been willing to sit here. I was here last night, and the night before, to do so. But I ask the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ETHERIDGE,] who broke up the debate night before last? Who moved that the committee rise last night? From which side did objection to going on with debate come? It came from those acting with the gentleman who is now asking further time to speak. There has been liberality in this case, great liberality, unusual liberality, already. It is exceedingly liberal in the gentleman from California [Mr. McDOUGALL] to consent to postpone the special order—the Pacific railroad bill. This, I say, is exceedingly liberal on his part. We are willing to accede to it. But the friends of the gentleman from Tennessee will not. Nothing will satisfy them, I apprehend. Why do they not accede to it, if debate was what they wanted? We, the friends of the bill—a majority of the House—will sit here all night, and to-morrow night, and the next night, and all next week, if that will satisfy them! If you want free and liberal debate, say so, and accede to terms that will allow it, and then allow a vote to be taken. But if factions opposition is what you are after; if you wish to thwart the national will, constitutionally expressed, let us know it, and we will meet you as factions opposition in this House always has been met. The friends of the bill must sit the question out, if it takes to-night, to-morrow, the next day, and even the next.

Mr. DAVIS, of Rhode Island, was here recognized by the Chair.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House this discussion is out of order. It is suffered only by unanimous consent.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I will make the point of order which I desired to make upon one of my own friends, and not upon the gentleman from Rhode Island, [Mr. DAVIS.]

Mr. DAVIS, of Rhode Island. In reference to this question now under consideration, the gentleman from Georgia says it has been discussed more than any other which has ever been presented to this House since the foundation of the Government. He should bear in mind, and the House should bear in mind, that a deeper interest is felt in it, than has ever been felt in any other; and it is a more important question, too, than any which has been before this House, in the estimation of a large portion of the members of this House. And, sir, I am in favor, and I believe the country is in favor, of giving to every gentleman upon this floor, who desires it, a chance to be heard, and in favor of giving a sufficient time for that purpose, without involving us in night sessions until eleven or twelve o'clock. I do not think it is right to deny us that privilege; and I do not recognize the right of any man upon this floor to curtail me in the enjoyment of that right. I think an attempt to do so is an infringement of privilege of every gentleman in this House. If it has taken a long time to discuss this question fairly, I will say it was not brought before this House by those who want to discuss it. It has been thrown upon the House, and forced upon them, and I, for one, should be glad to get it out of the way at any time. But the country expects that this question will be discussed, and fully discussed; and they further insist upon all the forms of business of this House being observed, if liberty is to be sacrificed. They want it to be guarded to the last, and, when the last struggle comes, they want us to use all the powers and rights which we have to defeat it. They are determined to defeat the passage of this bill, and they are determined to do it, because it is right to do so.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I would inquire of the Chair what the question is?

Mr. ORR. I rise to a question of order. Both sides have been heard, and further discussion is out of order.

to take place? We shall then be brought to act within some eight days upon this great question. After we have terminated the general debate—if it shall be terminated—then we shall be in committee under the five-minute rule, and sometimes questions of not half, of not a tithe the importance of this one, are debated for a whole week under the five-minute rule, and this bill ought to be so discussed, for the most valuable debate will undoubtedly be then. The amendments will then come up—the House bill, the Senate bill, the bill offered as a substitute by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] and the bill of last session; then, the Utah and New Mexico bills are also talked of as amendments to this one; and there are various other amendments that will be offered, and ought to be offered, and that ought to be discussed. But just so sure as you tell us that we are to constrain ourselves within the limited time between now and a week from Tuesday next, every one here knows—he is sure in his own mind—that we cannot have that discussion which is desirable—that we ought to have.

Sir, if gentlemen insist upon having action upon this bill—although I do not consider it as important that there should be such action as they do—let them put it off until the Pacific railroad special order, and the other special orders, have been disposed of. Is it not of as much consequence and importance to the country that all those important acts of special legislation, such as the French spoliation bill, the Pacific railroad bill, and of public interest, as the deficiency bill—the passage of which is a matter of imminent and urgent necessity—and some of the general appropriation bills, should now be acted on, as that this question, which gentlemen themselves contend is, after all, but the establishment of an abstract principle, should be decided to-day or to-morrow? As we have lived under this great wrong, if such it be—this abstract wrong—for thirty-four years—

The SPEAKER, (interrupting.) The Chair must remind the gentleman from Maine that he is wandering far beyond the boundaries prescribed by the leave of the House.

Mr. WASHBURN. It seems to me that I am stating reasons—

Mr. CRAIGE. I rise to a question of order. I understood that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] was permitted, by the unanimous consent of the House, to make a suggestion. I did not understand that he had a right to make a speech.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had arrested the gentleman from Maine in the course of his remarks before the gentleman from North Carolina rose to his point of order.

Mr. WASHBURN. My suggestion is—

The SPEAKER. The Chair respectfully suggests to the gentleman from Maine that beyond very brief remarks explanatory of the proposition before the body, this debate is not strictly in order.

Mr. WASHBURN. I respectfully submit to the Chair that I made this suggestion, if gentlemen desired to have this question discussed as it should be discussed, that it must be put over beyond the time in which the special orders are to come up. I was stating the reasons why that suggestion was a wise and prudent one, and, among other reasons, I urged that there was not sufficient time to consider and discuss this subject before the special orders came up—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say, in reply to the gentleman from Maine, that he must be well aware that the proposition to put the special order over one week has been absolutely refused by the House. The gentleman must also be aware that his proposition was met by half a dozen voices objecting to putting over the consideration of this subject until the Pacific railroad bill was disposed of. The Chair must decide, therefore, that there is no legitimate object for the course of remarks in which the gentleman has indulged.

Mr. WASHBURN. Will the Chair allow me to say, I did not understand that there was any objection to the suggestion I made.

The SPEAKER. Objection was made by twenty gentlemen, if the Chair could determine from the number of voices.

Mr. WASHBURN. I did not hear the objections, arising probably from the fact that I was speaking.

The SPEAKER. The Chair reminded the gentleman from Maine of the fact that objection was made to his proposition to postponing the consideration of this bill beyond the time agreed upon for the consideration of the special orders.

Mr. WASHBURN. Very well; I will not trespass further upon the time of the House.

Mr. GOODRICH. Will the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] allow me to say one word?

[Cries of "I object!" "I object!"]

Mr. CRAIGE. I rise to another question of order. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] has been decided to be out of order, and I understand by the rules that when a gentleman is declared out of order, that he cannot proceed in order unless by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would say, in reply to the gentleman from North Carolina, that the gentleman from Maine cannot proceed, if objection be made, except by a vote of the House.

Mr. CRAIGE. I object to the gentleman from Maine proceeding further with his remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the gentleman from Maine proceed in order?

Mr. SAGE. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is the question whether the gentleman from Maine shall proceed with his remarks?

The SPEAKER. It is whether the privilege to do so shall be given by a unanimous vote of the House.

Mr. JONES. There is no question. I do not see how the gentleman from Maine can proceed in order, as he has been called to order for proceeding out of order.

The SPEAKER. If there was an appeal from the decision of the Chair, the question would be upon sustaining the decision of the Chair in ruling the gentleman from Maine out of order in the course of remarks in which he has indulged. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CRAIGE] goes beyond that, and objects to his proceeding at all. The Chair decides, that if the House authorize the gentleman from Maine to proceed and make suggestions in connection with the course of proceedings on this bill, it will be in order for him to do so.

Mr. CRAIGE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order, that after the Chair decided that the gentleman from Maine was out of order in his remarks, he cannot then proceed in order, unless by the unanimous consent of the House.

The SPEAKER. He cannot proceed in order unless he is permitted to do so by a vote of the House. He does not require unanimous consent.

Mr. CRAIGE. I object to his proceeding.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope the objection will be withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided that the gentleman from Maine could not proceed unless in the way of making suggestions in reference to the course of proceedings of the body on this bill; and the Chair called the gentleman to order for not confining his remarks to that purpose. He may proceed in order.

Mr. DRUM. I call for the reading of the 35th rule of the House.

The rule was read, as follows:

"If any member, in speaking, or otherwise, transgress the rules of the House, the Speaker shall, or any member may, call to order, in which case the member so called to order shall immediately sit down, unless permitted to explain; and the House shall, if appealed to, decide on the case, but without debate; if there be no appeal, the decision of the Chair shall be submitted to. If the decision be in favor of the member called to order, he shall be at liberty to proceed; if otherwise, he shall not be permitted to proceed, in case any member object, without leave of the House; and, if the case require it, he shall be liable to the censure of the House."

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the gentleman from Maine may make a suggestion in reference to the proceedings of this body on the subject of the bill under consideration—

Mr. CRAIGE, (interrupting.) Then the rule goes on to say, that a member, if called to order, shall not proceed in order unless by consent of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina has not looked with care into the rule; for the rule declares that if the Chair decides that the member is in order, and if no appeal be taken from the decision of the Chair, the member may proceed without the vote of the House, in order. That is the rule, as it has been read just now.

Mr. CRAIGE. I was under the impression that the Chair decided that the gentleman from Maine was out of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did so decide; and the gentleman from Maine submitted to the decision of the Chair, and proposes now to proceed in order. The Chair decides he has a right to do that.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Under the suggestion of the Chair, declaring that I was not in order in the remarks which I was proceeding to make, and with the full knowledge of the fact that the members of this House would not have accorded me the consent which they did to make a suggestion if they had supposed I would speak on the question generally, or in such manner as the Chair should declare out of order, I submitted to the decision of the Chair. But I had supposed I was in order, or, at all events, I was endeavoring to be in order. I shall not now trespass any further on the House than to say—

Mr. GOODRICH, (interrupting.) Will the gentleman from Maine permit me a word of explanation?

Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. WASHBURN, (resuming.) I will not trespass on the House any further than to say that if gentlemen are not willing to give us this full and ample time for discussion—such as we ought to have—by extending the debate to the hour and day indicated in my suggestion, then I must feel obliged to object to any other proposition to close debate sooner.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Speaker, I intend to make a general objection to all proceedings out of order, and to insist upon the question before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has a right to do that; and the Chair will sustain him in taking objection as well as he can.

Mr. GOODRICH. I simply wish to ask a question, and to make a suggestion in reference to this matter; and I hope I will be allowed to do so.

The SPEAKER. Only by the unanimous consent of the House.

Several MEMBERS objected.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the motion that there be a call of the House; and upon that motion the yeas and nays have been demanded.

Mr. SAGE. I ask to be excused from voting upon that motion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that the gentleman be excused; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put; and there were—yeas 59, nays 93; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Ball, Brockbridge, Bridges, Clark, Cobb, Colquitt, Crocker, John G. Davis, Eddy, English, Florence, Green, Greenwood, Hamilton, Haven, Hendricks, Hemi, Hillyer, Houston, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lane, Lilly, McDonald, McNair, May, John G. Miller, Mortimer Oliver, Orr, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Puryear, Rendy, Riddle, Ruffin, Seward, Seymour, Shaw, Shower, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Walbridge, John Wentworth, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—59.

NAYS—Messrs. Abernethy, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Boccock, Boyce, Brooks, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Caskey, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clingman, Craige, Cumming, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Dowdell, Dunbar, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Feuton, Gamble, Goodrich, Harrison, Hibbard, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Ingersoll, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Roland Jones, Kerr, Knox, Latham, Lindsey, McCulloch, Macy, Matteson, Middleworth, Milson, Morgan, Murray, Norton, Olds, Packer, Parker, Pennington, Pringle, Reese, Richardson, Robbins, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Stratton, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Vail, Walter, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, Tappan Wentworth, Witte, and Daniel B. Wright—93.

So the House refused to excuse the gentleman from voting.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the gentleman from New York was excused from voting; and upon that I call the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York was not excused from voting.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I meant to say the vote by which he was not excused.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman vote in the affirmative?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I voted no. I voted with the majority.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman has the right to make the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 29, nays 124; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Ball, Bennett, Benson, Campbell, Culion, Dickinson, Eastman, Flagler, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Lally, McCulloch, Mace, Macy, Mencham, Morgan, Parker, Peimington, Pratt, Pringle, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Hester L. Stevens, Wade, and John Wentworth—29.

NAYS.—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Barry, Belcher, Ball, Boycock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Carpenter, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chandler, Christian, Churchwell, Clark, Cobb, Cox, Craige, Crocker, Cumming, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dowell, Dunbar, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmunds, Edmundson, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Florence, Gamble, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Hamilton, Wiley P. Harris, Haves, Hendricks, Hillyer, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Klutledge, Knox, Kurtz, Lane, Lindley, Lindsley, MacDonald, McNair, Matteson, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milson, Morrison, Murray, Noble, Norton, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Rogers, Ruffin, Sage, Seward, Seymour, Shaw, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Alexander H. Stephens, Stratton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Walley, Warren, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, Tappan Wentworth, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—124.

So the House refused to reconsider the vote.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. I move that the House do now adjourn; and upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MACE. I ask to be excused from voting upon the motion to adjourn.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I submit that that is not in order. If that were to be allowed, we might not come to the motion to adjourn before to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules that the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana is not in order.

The question was taken; and decided in the negative—yeas 69, nays 109.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. DRUM. I move that when this House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Saturday next, at twelve o'clock, m.; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn over; and decided in the negative—yeas 49, nays 109.

So the House refused to adjourn over to Saturday.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the motion that there be a call of the House, upon which the yeas and nays have been demanded.

Mr. SAGE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken upon Mr. SAGE's motion; and decided in the negative.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question then recurred upon the motion that there be a call of the House, upon which the yeas and nays had been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken upon the motion; and decided in the negative—yeas 60, nays 80.

So a call of the House was not ordered.

Mr. CAMPBELL, pending the call of the roll, when his name was called, said he paired off with Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana, upon this vote.

The question then recurred upon seconding the demand for the previous question upon the resolution closing debate upon the Nebraska bill.

Mr. GOODRICH. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. FARLEY. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken upon Mr. GOODRICH's motion; and decided in the negative—yeas 40, nays 66; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER announced that no quorum had voted.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. SAGE. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I ask to be excused from voting upon that motion.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is not in order, is it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain any such motion. The rules prescribe that when the House finds itself without a quorum, no motion shall be entertained except a motion that there be a call of the House, and a motion to adjourn.

Mr. WASHBURN. I withdraw the request.

The question then recurred upon the motion that there be a call of the House.

Mr. SAGE. I move that the House do now adjourn; and upon the motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken upon Mr. SAGE's motion; and decided in the negative—yeas 47, nays 67.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Pending the call of the roll,

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, stated that for a short time he had paired off with Mr. DE WITT.

Mr. BALL stated that he had paired off with Mr. Cox.

Mr. BUGG stated that he had paired off with Mr. BAILEY, of Georgia.

Mr. HOWE stated that he had paired off with Mr. HILLYER.

The question then recurred upon Mr. RICHARDSON's motion that there be a call of the House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I ask to be excused from voting upon that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain the proposition, for the same reason that he refused to entertain a similar one made by the gentleman some time since, that no quorum has voted.

Mr. WASHBURN. I thought there was a quorum upon the last vote.

The SPEAKER. No quorum has voted.

The question was then taken upon Mr. RICHARDSON's motion; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 75, nays 44.

So it was ordered that there be a call of the House.

Pending the call of the roll,

Mr. DEAN asked the unanimous consent of the House to have his vote recorded, he having been outside the bar when his name was called.

Mr. WHEELER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The next business in order is the execution of the order that there be a call of the House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken on the motion to adjourn; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 52, nays 84.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Pending the call of the roll on the above question,

Mr. MACY stated that he had paired off until to-morrow morning with Mr. DISNEY.

The SPEAKER. The House having ordered a call of the House, the Clerk will now proceed to call the roll, and note the absentees.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I ask to be excused from voting on that question.

The SPEAKER. There is no question before the House.

The Clerk then called the roll, and found the following members absent:

Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Appleton, Banks, Bell, Bennett, Benton, Bissell, Bliss, Brooks, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chase, Chastain, Christian, Cook, Corwin, Cullom, Cumming, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dent, Dick, Disney, Dunbar, John M. Elliott, Ewing, Faulkner, Franklin, Fuller, Gamble, Goodrich, Green, Grey, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Harrison, Hastings, Hiestler, Hill, Howe, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Kurtz, Lamb, Latham, Lyon, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Smith Miller, Nichols, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Peck, Peckham, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Preston, Ready, David Ritchie, Rowe, Sapp, Shannon, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, Sollers, Frederick P. Stanton, Walbridge, Wells, Westbrook, Yates, and Zollcoffer.

The SPEAKER. The officers of the House will now close the doors.

The doors were then closed.

Mr. DRUM. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. STUART. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I desire to state, on behalf of Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana, that he, desiring to go to dinner, being unwell and hungry, I have paired off with him: I have answered on a call of the House.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 26, nays 131.

So the House refused to suspend all further proceedings under the call.

Pending the call,

Mr. HILLYER stated that he had paired off for the present with Mr. Howe.

Mr. LINDSLEY, also stated that, for the present, he had paired off with Mr. MILLER, of Missouri.

Mr. EDMANDS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CROCKER. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. HENN. Is the motion to adjourn now in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it is. Mr. HENN. After the House has refused to suspend further proceedings under the call?

The SPEAKER. That is the decision of the Chair. The motion is in order.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 64, nays 86.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I would ask the Chair whether, after the doors have been closed by order of the House, and proceedings under the call are in progress, it is in order to allow members to enter or go out?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. It is a question of order. I call the attention of the Chair to the execution of the order of the House.

The SPEAKER. A moment's reflection will satisfy the gentleman from Ohio that the gentleman from Kentucky is in order, he being on the floor to a question of order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will remark, with the leave of my friend from Ohio, that it being in order to alternate between motions to suspend further proceedings under the call and motions to adjourn, the House never can complete the call unless the doors be kept closed, and members prevented going out or coming in. I call the attention of the Speaker to the fact that the order is not enforced.

The SPEAKER. The officers of the House must enforce the order of the House rigidly. There is no authority drawn from the rules that the Chair knows of which would, under a call of the House, allow members to go out or come in. The practice, however, the Chair is aware is different. There are cases of emergency when gentlemen must go out.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. That is the only way by which we can get gentlemen to do anything.

The Clerk then proceeded to call the list of absentees for excuses.

JAMES C. ALLEN. No excuse.

WILLIAM APPLETON.

Mr. WALLEY. My colleague is detained from his seat in the House by severe sickness in his family. I therefore move that he be excused.

Mr. SAPP. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Allow me to ask the Chair a question. If Mr. APPLETON is not excused for the reason given, will not the order of the House be imperative on the Sergeant-at-Arms to go and bring him here?

The SPEAKER. That will depend on the action of the House.

Mr. BAYLY. If he is not excused, would not the Sergeant-at-Arms be bound to bring him here?

The SPEAKER. Then it would be imperative on the Sergeant-at-Arms to bring the gentleman here.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORRISON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a statement, before the call of the roll, upon the question before the House.

No objection was made.

Mr. MORRISON. I will state that Mr. APPLETON and Mr. AIKEN, a member from South Carolina, paired off upon the question pending in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—the bill to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas. I paired off with a member from Georgia, Mr. CHASTAIN, upon the same question. After my return, and during the day, there has been a consultation between myself and the member from South Carolina, and between the friends of the member from Massachusetts and the member from Georgia, the absentees, and at that consultation, as the member from South Carolina and myself both desire to vote upon that bill, it was arranged that the gentleman from Massachusetts shall be considered as paired off with the gentleman from Georgia until one of those gentlemen return. When either of the absentees return, the arrangement will be at an end.

The question was then taken on Mr. WALLEY's motion; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 141, nays 2.

So Mr. APPLETON was excused.

Pending the call on the above vote,

Mr. HILLYER stated that he had paired off with Mr. HOWE.

Mr. HILLYER. I move that all further proceedings in the call be dispensed with.

Mr. SAGE. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HUGHES. It being now half past six o'clock, p. m., I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MATTESON. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 64, nays 80.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon suspending further proceedings under the call, upon which the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered.

Mr. MAURICE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Hon. Mr. APPLETON was excused; and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I rise to a question of order, that there being a proposition pending to suspend all further proceedings under the call, it is not in order to move to reconsider the vote by which Mr. APPLETON was excused.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from North Carolina, and rules that a suspension of proceedings under the call would set aside the question with regard to Mr. APPLETON.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That motion would not be in order, the House having just voted upon that question.

The question was then taken upon Mr. HILLYER's motion; and there were—yeas 79, nays 70. By the order of the Speaker the doors were then opened.

Mr. SAGE. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next, and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The Clerk having proceeded to call the roll—

Mr. MATTESON. I ask to be excused from voting upon that motion?

The SPEAKER. It is too late. There has been a response to the call, and the Chair decides that the motion is not in order.

Mr. MATTESON. I did not know that there had been any response, as in that case I was aware that the motion would not be in order.

The SPEAKER. The motion would not be in order for a further reason, that a gentleman cannot ask to be excused from voting upon a motion to adjourn; but upon questions other than a motion to adjourn such a motion would be in order.

Mr. MATTESON. I supposed that upon a motion to adjourn over the rule would be different.

The question was then taken upon Mr. SAGE's motion; and there were—yeas 48, nays 111.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move that the House adjourn; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 59, nays 86.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. GOODRICH. I move a call of the House, and upon that motion, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MAURICE. I ask to be excused from voting.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that the gentleman from New York be excused from voting.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise to a point of order. The 42d rule reads:

"Every member who shall be in the House when the question is put, shall give his vote, unless the House, for special reason, shall excuse him."

I suppose it is necessary that a gentleman asking to be excused, should assign some special reason for such request.

The SPEAKER. The motion to be excused from voting is in order; and every gentleman will determine for himself the reasons he has for making such a request.

Mr. WHEELER. I rise to a point of order. I would like to know whether the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAURICE] is obliged to give his reasons for asking to be excused?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated that every gentleman can determine for himself the reasons he has for asking to be excused.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I really wish to be informed upon this matter. I never intend to raise a question of order from captious motives; but in regard to this matter, I desire to be really informed about the proper construction of the 42d rule, a portion of which I have already read.

The SPEAKER. The rule seems to contemplate giving some special reason; but the Chair, without reflection, supposes that it would be competent for gentlemen to ask to be excused, with or without assigning a reason therefor.

Mr. BANKS. I think the reasoning of the Chair is correct. If I am asked to vote to excuse or not excuse the gentleman from New York, the special reason for my vote is, that he asks to be excused. I can then either vote in the affirmative or negative, as I may think necessary.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I suppose it is manifest, if the rule which I have read means anything, that it ought to be enforced.

Mr. BENSON. I rise to a question of order. Does the gentleman from Virginia appeal from the decision of the Chair?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia has not appealed from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. MAURICE. If the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] will give way, I will state to the House my reasons, which will perhaps obviate the necessity for any further discussion.

Mr. SMITH. With the permission of the House, I will read another portion of the 42d rule.

"All motions to excuse a member from voting shall be made before the House divides, or before the call of the yeas and nays is commenced; and the question shall then be taken without further debate."

There is an amendment to the rule, which reads as follows:

"That part of rule 42, which allowed a brief verbal statement of reasons to be given by any member for requesting to be excused from voting, rescinded January 2, 1845."

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that it is discretionary with a member whether he will give his reasons or not for asking to be excused from voting. The Chair thinks that the rules and practice taken together will bear him out in the decision he has made.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the note to the 42d rule states that that part of the rule which allows a brief verbal statement of reasons to be given by any member requesting to be excused from voting, was rescinded January 2, 1845. Since the rescinding of that part of the rule they have not been permitted to give reasons, but they could ask to be excused without assigning any reasons. That has been the practice ever since that part of the rule relating to this subject was rescinded.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask to be excused from voting upon the motion to excuse the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAURICE] from voting.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that that proposition is out of order, believing that propositions to excuse gentlemen from voting cannot be thus accumulated.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will not insist upon my motion, although I do not wish to be understood as waiving the right to make it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I make this point of order for the consideration of the Chair, that a call of the House, and a motion to adjourn, take precedence of all other questions; and the gentleman cannot make the motion to be excused, pending a vote on these.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided today that a motion to be excused from voting upon a proposition to adjourn cannot be made. He cannot, therefore, entertain such a motion.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I now make the point of order, that a motion for a call of the House will take precedence of anything but a motion to adjourn, and therefore, that you cannot entertain a motion to excuse a member with any more propriety than you can a question touching any other proposition. Suppose we did not have a quorum. You could not excuse a member from voting with less than a quorum present. In this way you might stop up a call and get a quorum, and therefore a call of the House must take precedence of any other motion, except a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] is correct. It is within the recollection of the House that the Chair permitted that motion to be made, and a vote to be taken, but it was done inadvertently upon the part of the Chair.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Journal is full of decisions upon this point. I think it will be shown by reference to the Journals, that in 1849-'50 no person made that motion oftener than the honorable gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I am obliged to the gentleman from Ohio. I will remind the gentleman that upon the memorable day to which he refers, the Speaker decided that a call of the House was not in order, and, therefore, that there could have been no motions to excuse gentlemen upon that proposition. The motions were upon other propositions. A motion for a call of the House was not in order, and we had no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER. It would be in order for gentlemen to give as a reason why they would not vote upon a motion to adjourn, that they would rather have a full House. The reason of this is very obvious. The Chair having had his attention called to this matter, decides that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAURICE] is not in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair; and upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move to lay the appeal upon the table; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair certainly has no disposition to make any decision here that will have an improper bearing upon one side or the other in this controversy. He seeks only to enforce and adhere to the rules as they are. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] appeals from the decision of the Chair. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] moves to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. WHEELER. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is but a repetition of the same question, and I make the same point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain appeal upon appeal; such is the rule.

Mr. PERKINS, of New York. I am in hopes that I can make a proposition that will put an end to the contest which has been going on here all day. If the House see fit to entertain the proposition I desire to present, I will afterwards reduce it to the form of a resolution. The proposition is this—to allow the debate to proceed one week, and in the mean time, direct the Clerk of the House to notify the three thousand clergymen who lately sent a remonstrance against the passage of the Nebraska bill, that they will be heard if they will come on here, an hour each, in prayer for the successful dispatch of our business here. [Laughter.] But they must come on at their own expense. I propose, also, as soon as they get through with their prayers, that then the question upon this bill shall be taken without further debate. I think by that time the House will be in a proper temper and disposition to do justice to this bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of expressing my astonishment—

[Cries of "Oh!" "Oh!" and "Order!"]

Mr. SMITH. I simply want, Mr. Speaker, to express my astonishment at the manner in which—

[Renewed cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia is aware that debate is not in order.

The Chair will state to the House the question as it now stands—

Mr. CLINGMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to explain on a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first state the question. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MAURICE] asked to be excused from voting on the motion that there be a call of the House. The Chair decided that the motion to be excused was not in order. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] takes an appeal from that decision. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] moves to lay that appeal on the table. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MAURICE] again rises, and asks to be excused from voting on the appeal—

Mr. MAURICE, (correcting.) On the motion to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. Yes; and the Chair decides that the gentleman's proposition to be excused is out of order, the whole being based on the original proposition.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I take an appeal to the House from that decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that no appeal can be taken until the previous one is disposed of. This is the principle established under the rule.

Mr. WASHBURN. I wish to understand by an appeal, whether the Chair decides correctly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated that one appeal cannot be piled upon another. There has been an appeal taken from the decision made by the Chair, that the proposition made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. MAURICE], to be excused from voting, was not in order. If this last appeal were entertained, it would be but an appeal upon an appeal, the whole being based on the correctness of the decision first given.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to withdraw the motion which I made to lay on the table the appeal taken by the gentleman from Ohio, and to make a point of order that an appeal could not be taken pending the motion for a call of the House, which takes precedence of all other business, in the same manner as a motion to adjourn. The question to be decided by the appeal could not be decided unless there was a quorum present; and it is to ascertain whether there be a quorum present that a call of the House is made. The very reason on which I took the first exception applies to this, that, upon either a motion for a call of the House, or a motion to adjourn, these preliminary or collateral questions cannot be made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order raised by the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I ask for the yeas and nays on the appeal.

Mr. WHEELER. And I renew the motion to lay the appeal on the table; and on that motion I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FLAGLER. I move that the House do now adjourn; and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The roll was then called; and there were—yeas 68, nays 90.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Saturday next; and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask if this question has not been passed upon before?

The SPEAKER. Very true, it has. But the lapse of time—whether it be a day or an hour—sometimes brings reasons for a change of purpose. The Chair therefore holds that a motion to adjourn over is in order any time before adjournment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MAURICE. Upon this motion to adjourn over, I ask, Mr. Speaker, to be excused from voting.

Mr. WHEELER. And upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that it is not competent for the House to excuse a member, and that a member has no right to ask to be excused from voting on a motion to adjourn.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the Chair will allow me, I will ask a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio will state his question of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would ask the Chair whether there is a distinction between a simple motion to adjourn and the motion to adjourn over one day or more?

The SPEAKER. The difference is, that the latter, if carried, carries an adjournment for a little longer time. But the subject is not debatable, as the gentleman from Ohio cannot but be aware; and the Chair should be saved from enforcing the rule on the subject.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then I reluctantly and respectfully ask to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair; and upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that the appeal made in this case by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] is not legitimate. The Chair dislikes to be forced to make what may seem to gentlemen to be an arbitrary decision. But if gentlemen will reflect for a single moment, the Chair thinks he will not be charged with having made any arbitrary decision in the matter. There is an appeal already pending on a case very like the one in question. It is not competent under the rule, nay, it is forbidden under the rule, to pile appeals one upon another. The Chair, therefore, most respectfully declines to entertain the appeal made by the gentleman from Ohio.

The roll was then called; and there were—yeas 47, nays 104.

So the House refused to adjourn over.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion to lay the appeal of the gentleman from New York on the table.

Mr. WALLEY. I move to reconsider the vote just taken by which the House refused to adjourn over.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that that motion is not in order, for the reason—and a very palpable one it is—that the motion may be renewed at any time; and where that is the case, a motion to reconsider cannot be in order.

Mr. WALLEY. I move that the House do now adjourn; and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 61, nays 81.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon laying the appeal upon the table.

Mr. MATTESON. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order, for the reason, that since that motion was last submitted, the House has not transacted any business, except upon motions to adjourn over, or to adjourn, in immediate connection.

Mr. MATTESON. Then I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order at this time.

Mr. SAGE. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair reminds that there is already a call of the House pending, and arising out of that question is an appeal which is pending. The question, therefore, first recurs upon laying the appeal taken from the decision of the Chair upon the table, and upon that proposition the yeas and nays were ordered. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was then taken; and decided in the affirmative—yeas 104, nays 51.

So the appeal was laid upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the motion that there be a call of the House.

Mr. MAURICE. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the appeal was laid upon the table; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

A Voice. Did the gentleman vote in the affirmative.

Mr. MAURICE. I did. I voted with the majority.

Mr. ORR. I move to lay the motion upon the table.

Mr. MATTESON. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides the motion made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAURICE] to be out of order. The Chair could point the gentleman to similar motions made during this session, which were ruled to be out of order, and which decisions were sustained by a very large majority of the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. As there is now no appeal pending from the decision of the Chair, I take an appeal from that decision.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain that motion, as it is competent for the House, at any time, to reverse its own decision.

Mr. HAMILTON. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk here commenced to call the roll.

Mr. MATTESON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the motion is out of order, as the Clerk had commenced to call the roll.

Mr. MATTESON. Had any response been made before I submitted the motion?

The SPEAKER. The response was made before, or at least, simultaneous with the motion, and the Chair decides that the roll shall be called.

The question was then put; and there were—yeas 95, nays 43.

So the appeal was laid upon the table, and the decision of the Chair sustained.

Pending the call,

Mr. FARLEY asked to be excused from voting.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order, pending the call of the roll, to ask to be excused. That request must be made before the Clerk commences to call the roll.

Mr. FENTON also gave notice that he had paired off with Hon. MIKE WALSH for a short time.

Mr. MATTESON. I move that when the House adjourn, it adjourn to meet on Monday next; and upon it I demand the yeas and nays.

Several MEMBERS. Adjourn now.

Mr. MATTESON. I am desired by some of my friends to move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot submit both motions at once.

Mr. MATTESON. I withdraw the former motion and submit the latter one; and upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 72, nays 83.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Pending the call,

Mr. MORTON gave notice that he had paired off with Mr. Grow.

Mr. LETCHER also gave notice that he had paired off with Mr. TAYLOR, until he shall return.

A Voice. When will that be.

Mr. LETCHER. I do not know; but until he does return I have paired off with him.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the motion that there be a call of the House.

Mr. SAGE. I think the question is upon a motion to adjourn over until Monday.

Mr. RICHARDSON. At this point I raise a question of order. The House have refused to adjourn over to Monday, and I submit that it is not competent for gentlemen to make the motion over and over again.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion is in order, unless made in such a connection as to make it out of order. That has been the practice heretofore, and the Chair will so rule.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and decided in the negative—yeas 54, nays 95.

So the House refused to adjourn over.

The question then recurred upon the motion that there be a call of the House.

Mr. DEAN. I believe the morning hour has expired. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. That motion cannot be entertained, for the reason that there is a motion pending to close debate in committee, which must take precedence.

Mr. DEAN. I think my motion ought to be entertained by unanimous consent.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MEACHAM. I wish to be excused from voting.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the proposition of the gentleman from Vermont cannot be received.

Mr. MEACHAM. I know that has been the decision of the Speaker; but I wish to suggest to him a decision upon this point made in a previous Congress different from that the Chair now makes. I send the Journal containing the decision to the Chair.

Mr. PHELPS. What is the question before the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is stating a question of order. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Vermont, that during the Twenty-Ninth Congress the Journals show that a motion to excuse a member from voting upon a motion that there be a call of the House was entertained; but the Chair has doubts whether it was not done inadvertently, as was the same thing done this morning. The Chair decides that a motion to excuse a member upon a motion that there be a call of the House is not in order.

Mr. MEACHAM. The motion was not only entertained, but the member was excused from voting by the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state, further, that the rules at that time permitted a member to give his reasons for asking to be excused from voting. Since that time the rule has been changed in this respect. The Chair has decided that such a motion is not in order, and he has been sustained in his decision by a very large vote of the House. He makes that decision now, and declares the question, that there be a call of the House.

Mr. SAGE. In order to ascertain whether the House will not conform to precedents set by previous Congresses, I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair. After the precedent which has been quoted, I wish to have a decision of the House upon the subject.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would be a very liberal construction of the rules to allow an appeal to be taken; but he will entertain it. The question will therefore be, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?"

Mr. SAGE. Upon that question I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. COBB. If the House will allow me at this late hour, I desire to tender the olive branch—

[Cries of "Yes!" "No!" "Hear him!" "Let's have the olive branch!" and considerable confusion.]

Mr. HOUSTON objected.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois, also objected.

Mr. COBB. What I have to say is connected with the business before the House.

[Cries of "Let's hear what it is!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot proceed so long as objections are made.

Mr. COBB. I appeal to gentlemen to withdraw their objections.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not withdraw mine.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman from Alabama cannot proceed. The gentleman from Vermont submits the motion that he be excused from voting upon the proposition that there be a call of the House. The Chair decides that the motion cannot be made, and from that decision the gentleman from New York takes an appeal. The same decision has before been made to-day upon a similar motion, and sustained by a vote of the House. The Chair thinks it is a very liberal construction to suppose that the House would reverse its own decision within two hours, but in this one instance he will, nevertheless, give that construction, and permit the appeal to be taken. He will not say what may be his course in the future, if such cases again arise.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the appeal do lie upon the table.

Mr. SAPP. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. GOODRICH. I move to be excused from voting upon that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the motion is not in order, and he further decides that in this case the gentleman cannot appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The question was then taken upon Mr. RICHARDSON's motion; and decided in the affirmative—yeas 160, nays 34.

So the appeal was laid upon the table.

MODIFICATION OF RESOLUTION TO CLOSE DEBATE.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I propose to modify the motion submitted by me this morning to close debate in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the Nebraska bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The question is upon ordering a call of the House, is it not? I think we had better have the regular order of business.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If I have not the right to modify my motion, I will not ask it as a privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will remind gentlemen, and they will see upon a moment's reflection, that the mover of any bill, resolution, or of any original proposition, has the right to withdraw or modify it as he may please, before any action shall have been taken upon it by the House. The Chair certainly thinks the gentleman from Illinois has the right to modify his resolution as he may think proper.

Mr. BANKS. I desire to ask the Speaker if the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois is before the House at this time? Is there not another question pending?

The SPEAKER. It is before the House. It would be necessary for the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw his demand for the previous question before he could make any modification, but the Chair thinks it would then be competent for him to accomplish his purpose. It is true there are other propositions intervening. There is a motion for a call of the House, which must be first put; but the Chair holds that it is still competent for him to modify his motion.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will then submit my modification.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his demand for the previous question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do. And I now so modify my motion as to close debate upon the Nebraska bill in five minutes after its consideration shall have again been resumed in committee.

Mr. DEAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WHEELER. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 65, nays 78.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that when the House adjourns, it be to meet on Monday next; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask to be excused from voting on that question. * I move that I be excused.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the gentleman cannot be permitted.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that it has been decided heretofore—

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is upon the floor on a question of order.

Mr. SEWARD. I wish to have the question settled whether the gentleman can ask to be excused without furnishing reasons. It is an abuse of the privilege of the House. I put the question on that ground.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order raised by the gentleman from Ohio. Unless the gentleman takes an appeal, the question is settled.

Mr. ORR. The question is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would say, in reply to the gentleman from Georgia, that matters of abuse are matters between me and my constituents, and not between that gentleman and myself.

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. SEWARD. The question involves the character of this House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair trusts that the House will allow the gentleman from Ohio to present any authority he may have on the question.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The question cannot be debated.

Mr. WHEELER. The gentleman does not ask to debate it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I appeal from the decision of the Chair; and refer to a case where the question was presented to the House on a motion to adjourn, in 1847. I send the Journal to the Clerk's desk that it may be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair makes no question but what the gentleman may find some precedent for his position; but it was an error, and ought to have been corrected long ago. [Great laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. INGERSOLL. And I move that that appeal be laid upon the table.

Mr. HIBBARD. I would make the point of order whether an appeal from the decision of the Chair is in order on a motion to fix the time to which the House shall adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the House may fix its own rules. If it contradicts itself every day it is not the fault of the Chair, but its own fault. [Laughter.] The Chair will go further: If the House is disposed to do a foolish thing, the Chair must indulge it. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. HUGHES. I move that the House do now adjourn; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CUMMING. Is the motion of the gentleman from New York in order? We have just voted down a similar motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn is in order. Since the House last refused to adjourn there has been a motion made for adjournment till Monday, a question of order, and an appeal from the decision of the Chair. It is narrowing the question down pretty closely; but the Chair holds the motion must be entertained.

The question was taken; and the motion was decided in the negative—yeas 71, nays 86.

So the House (at five minutes after eleven o'clock) refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion to lay the appeal from the decision of the Chair upon the table.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 108, nays 33.

So the appeal from the decision of the Chair was laid upon the table.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the House do now adjourn; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

SATURDAY, MAY 13, 1854.

NEW SERIES.....No. 74.

Mr. GROW. I move that when the House adjourns, it be to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. There is already pending a motion to that effect.

Mr. CULLOM. If a motion be made to adjourn over for a longer period than that to Monday, would it not have precedence?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. FENTON. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote of the House by which the appeal of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] from the decision of the Chair was laid upon the table; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays. I voted in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that he hastily decided to-night that that motion was not in order. It was a hasty and improper decision, in the opinion of the Chair, and he reverses it. The motion to adjourn over will supersede the motion to reconsider. The Chair could explain so that he thinks the House would agree with him that the decision is now a correct one, and that the other was hasty and incorrect. The yeas and nays were ordered on the motion to adjourn over.

The question was then taken; and decided in the negative—yeas 55, nays 92.

So the House refused to adjourn over till Monday next.

The question recurred upon the motion to reconsider the vote by which the appeal from the decision of the Chair was laid upon the table.

Mr. FENTON. On that question I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ORR. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. WHEELER. On that I demand tellers.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BENSON, (at ten minutes past twelve o'clock.) I move that the House do now adjourn; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. PARKER. I ask for tellers.

Mr. BENSON. I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays, and will let the question be taken by tellers.

Mr. SEWARD. I desire to know what the motion is?

The SPEAKER. It is a motion to adjourn.

Mr. SEWARD. Then I raise a question of order. The question just taken was in reference to an adjournment.

The SPEAKER. That was a proposition to adjourn over till Monday; and since that time two or three motions have intervened.

Mr. SEWARD. What motions have intervened? The motion to reconsider was made before the question was taken on the adjournment.

The SPEAKER. There was a motion made to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; and the yeas and nays were ordered upon that proposition.

Tellers were ordered on Mr. BENSON's motion; and Messrs. WHEELER, and HARRIS of Alabama, were appointed.

The question was then put; and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes 78.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 65, nays 77.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. ORR to lay upon the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the appeal from the decision of the Chair was laid upon the table; and being put, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 102, nays 34.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

Mr. EDMANDS, (at a quarter to one o'clock.) I move that the House do now adjourn; and I ask for tellers on that motion.

Mr. TWEED. I call for the yeas and nays.

We may as well take them at once, or we shall have tellers and the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 65, nays 78.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question recurred on the motion that there be a call of the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 57, nays 79.

So the House refused to order a call.

The question recurred upon seconding the demand for the previous question on Mr. RICHARDSON's resolution to close debate.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that when this House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Saturday next; and upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MAURICE. I ask to be excused from voting upon that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. ORR in the chair.) The temporary Speaker will conform to the decision made by the regular Speaker, and decline to entertain the proposition of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DRUM. I believe that nine tenths of the members of this House are in favor of having one week's more debate on the Nebraska bill. I believe that can be accomplished by adjourning till to-morrow.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. DRUM. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call for tellers on that motion.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I would ask if the first question is not on the motion to adjourn till Saturday?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman from Ohio to withdraw that motion.

Mr. WASHBURN. Not at all. He demanded the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and then withdrew the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the Chair cannot entertain the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. DRUM.] The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. I withdraw that motion.

Mr. DRUM. Then I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CUMMING. May I be allowed to ask if this motion can possibly be in order? Can the rules of this House be so complicated that every moment we may be called to vote upon an adjournment or a non-adjournment? [Great laughter.] I cannot believe it, and I therefore move that the motion to adjourn be laid upon the table. [Roars of laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not feel at liberty to entertain the motion of the gentleman from New York. [Renewed laughter.] Mr. BANKS. I desire to ask the Chair what is the main question before the House at this time—the principal question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEAN] that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BANKS. I understand that; but the previous motion—is it not the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] proposing to close the debate on the Nebraska bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. BANKS. Then I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw the motion to adjourn, that I may move to lay the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois upon the table.

Mr. DRUM. I withdraw the motion to adjourn for that purpose.

Mr. BANKS. I move to lay the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois upon the table; and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I ask to be excused from voting on this question.

[Cries of "No objection!"]

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, sir, I object.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. Then I move that the gentleman from Maine be excused from voting; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Is it in order to move to amend that motion so as to excuse the gentleman from voting for the rest of the session? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the House do now adjourn; and upon that motion I ask for tellers.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 65, nays 83.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. CASKIE. I rise to submit a motion to which we might as well come first as last; and I hope that nobody will vote for it who does not mean to stick to it to the bitter end. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. SAGE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the House do now adjourn; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 64, nays 80.

So the House refuse to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CASKIE] for a call of the House.

Mr. SAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to be excused from voting on that motion.

Mr. CASKIE. I will withdraw for a time my motion for a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion now before the House is to excuse the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] from voting on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] which is to lay on the table the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON.]

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I renew the motion for a call of the House; and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that I may be excused from voting on that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Speaker decided that that question cannot be entertained. From that decision an appeal was taken, and the decision was affirmed. The Chair conforms to that decision.

Mr. GOODRICH, (at five minutes past two, a. m.) I move that the House do now adjourn; and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The roll was called; and there were—yeas 58, nays 74.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentlemen from Ohio [Mr. STUART] for a call of the House; and on that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Clerk commenced to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next. I think we have done quite enough of work to-day to justify us in adjourning over; and on that motion I ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, is it competent for the gentleman from Tennessee to make that motion after the call of the roll has commenced?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There has been no response; and the Chair is of opinion that the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee is in order.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CRAIG and CAMPBELL were appointed.

Mr. TWEED. Is it in order, Mr. Speaker, to call for the yeas and nays on that?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported fifty-five in the affirmative, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 51, nays 80.

So the House refused to adjourn over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STUART] for a call of the House; and on that motion the yeas and nays have been ordered.

PROPOSITION TO EXTEND DEBATE, AND TO POSTPONE THE SPECIAL ORDER.

Mr. DEAN. Mr. Speaker, we have been now in session about fifteen hours, and I think it is time for us to adjourn. I therefore want my colleague [Mr. SAGE] to withdraw the objection which he made this morning to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] and to ask that this debate may be extended until next Thursday, and that the special order on the Pacific railroad bill be postponed until the Monday following.

[Objections, and cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House for leave to introduce certain bills, of which previous notice has been given.

[Laughter, and objections from all sides of the Hall.]

The question recurring on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. STUART,] for a call of the House,

Mr. SAGE. I ask to be excused from voting on that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has declined once before to entertain that motion, on the ground that the Speaker has decided it out of order, and the House sustained him in that decision.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I think there is a mistake in that.

Mr. PECK, (at thirty-five minutes past two, a. m.) I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SAGE. And on that motion I ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. WHEELER. And I ask tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PRINGLE, and HARRIS of Alabama, were appointed.

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported forty-six in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk commenced to call the roll—

Mr. RICHARDSON, (interrupting.) Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is not in order; the roll is being called, and there has been a response.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I addressed the Chair before the call was commenced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is true, the gentleman from Illinois addressed the Chair before the call was commenced; but the Chair did not recognize him until after he had heard a response.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No matter. I can make the statement which I intended after the roll is called.

Mr. DRUM. The gentleman from Illinois certainly did address the Chair before the calling of the roll was begun.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is of no consequence. The question was then taken on the motion to adjourn; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 65, nays 78.

So the House refused to adjourn.

PROPOSITION FOR COMPROMISE.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to say, with the permission of the House, that the proposition which has been made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEAN] to postpone the special order on the Pacific railroad bill, and to terminate this debate some time next week, meets—as I am advised—with no opposition from the friends of the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I object, Mr. Speaker, to that statement, for the reason that—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. COBB, (in his seat.) Why, it was all fair; what use in objecting now? You cannot keep the statement off the reporter's notes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I was refused, yesterday, the privilege of saying a word when this matter was up, and I shall not ask that privilege again; but I simply enter now my protest against that statement being allowed to be made.

Mr. COBB, (in his seat.) Oh, say on, whatever you want. We need some lively matter; something spicy. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL's remarks were objected to.

Mr. HUGHES. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a statement.

[Interruptions, and cries of "Order!"]

Mr. HUGHES. Inasmuch as the gentleman from Illinois has made a proposition on one side of this question, it seems right to state the sentiment of the other.

[Objections, and cries of "Order!" and "Let him go on!"]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I made no proposition. I said that I accepted the proposition which was made on the other side by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DEAN.]

Mr. HUGHES. I simply desire to say—

Mr. WHEELER. Well, I object now, in advance, to all that comes from the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. STUART.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the question which is pending.

Mr. WHEELER, (at ten minutes to three o'clock, a. m.) I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not now in order.

Mr. WHEELER. Then I move that when this House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next; and on that motion I ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. KERR. I demand tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. FENTON, and SMITH of Tennessee, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported forty-seven in the affirmative, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 50, nays 86.

So the motion to adjourn over was not agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES. I again, for just two minutes, ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a single suggestion.

Mr. WALSH. I object. Who wants to hear the gentleman?

Mr. KERR. Withdraw the objection. Hear him.

[Cries of "Hear him!" and "I object!"]

Mr. HUGHES. I only ask a single moment.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!" and "Hear him!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made, and the gentleman cannot proceed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. (Three o'clock and twenty minutes, a. m.) I move that the House do now adjourn.

[Cries of "Yeas and nays!"]

Mr. HUGHES. I heard no objection to my proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair heard an objection very distinctly.

A Voice. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not heard the objection withdrawn by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WALSH,] who made it standing in his place. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. WASHBURN,] and upon that motion the yeas and nays are demanded.

Mr. BRIDGES. I ask for tellers upon the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. STRATTON. I would inquire of the Chair if it is in order to take a recess until nine o'clock in the morning?

Mr. COBB, (in his seat.) Oh, no; we do not want a recess.

Mr. STRATTON. I think we ought to take a recess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. WASHBURN,] that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. PRINGLE. I would inquire of the Chair, if the House should now agree to adjourn, to what time would the House be adjourned, it being now three o'clock in the morning?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair supposes it would be adjourned until the next twelve o'clock; but the Chair will decide that question when the House next meets. [Laughter.]

Mr. PHELPS. I call for tellers upon the demand for the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. DAVIS, of Rhode Island, and JONES, of Louisiana, were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—yeas 49—

[Cries "Give it up!" "Give it up!"]

Mr. WHEELER. I do not give it up. Count the other side.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. WHEELER. Count the other side.

Mr. TWEED here made a remark inaudible to the reporter.

Mr. WHEELER. I am not talking to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. TWEED,] but to the Chair.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers report forty-nine in the affirmative, a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was then put, and decided in the affirmative—yeas 57, nays 74.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. HUGHES. It is some time since we have had a call of the House, and I now move that there be a call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the motion now pending.

Mr. BRIDGES. I call for tellers upon the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The yeas and nays have already been ordered.

The question was then taken; and was decided in the negative—yeas 55, nays 74.

So the House refused to order a call.

Pending the call of the yeas and nays,

Mr. FLORENCE requested his name to be recorded, as he was asleep when his name was called.

After the call,

Mr. CULLOM said: I rise to a question of order. It is this: The gentleman over the way [Mr. FLORENCE] notified the Speaker that when his name was called he was asleep. I raise the question that the gentleman, being asleep, has no right to have his name recorded.

Mr. FLORENCE. I submit to the Speaker, that I awoke before the next name was called. [Roars of laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the question of order raised by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GOODRICH. I appeal from the decision of the Chair upon the question raised by the gentleman from Tennessee. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is not in order. The question recurs upon the motion to excuse the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] from voting upon the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts to lay upon the table the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois; and upon that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. MEACHAM. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Saturday next; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

[Cries of "Tellers!" "Tellers!"]

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. KITTREDGE and CHURCHWELL appointed.

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported thirty-nine in the affirmative, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken upon the motion to adjourn over; and decided in the negative—yeas 65, nays 79.

So the House refused to adjourn over to Saturday.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the motion to excuse the gentleman from Maine from voting upon the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] to lay upon the table the resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON.]

Mr. BENSON, (at half past four, a. m.) I move that the House do now adjourn; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. KERR. I demand tellers upon ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WHEELER and GREENWOOD appointed.

The House was then divided upon ordering the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported forty-nine in the affirmative, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken upon Mr. BENSON's motion; and decided in the negative—yeas 61, nays 72.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. STUART. I move a call of the House; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. KERR. I demand tellers upon ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WHEELER and HENN appointed.

The House was divided; and the tellers reported forty-seven in the affirmative, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAGE, (at a quarter before five o'clock, a. m.) I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. OLDS. I rise to a question of order. I notice gentlemen sitting in the Hall, and passing between the tellers with their hats on. I call for the enforcement of the 39th rule, which is as follows:

"While the Speaker is putting any question, or addressing the House, none shall walk out of or across the House; nor in such case, or when a member is speaking, shall entertain private discourse, nor, while a member is speaking, shall pass between him and the Chair. Every person shall remain uncovered during the session of the House. No member or other person shall visit or remain by the Clerk's table while the yeas and nays are calling, or ballots are counting."

Mr. WHEELER. I demand the yeas and nays on the enforcement of the 39th rule. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I am decidedly in favor of the enforcement of that rule.

The SPEAKER. It is not a question upon which any motion can be made, or any vote taken. It is not in order for gentlemen to come into the Hall with their heads covered while the House is in session. The rule expressly forbids it. The Chair trusts gentlemen will observe the rule. The question is upon the motion that there be a call of the House, upon which the yeas and nays have been demanded.

Mr. GROW. I demand tellers upon ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WHEELER and PRESTON appointed.

The House was divided; and the tellers reported forty-five in the affirmative.

While the House was dividing,

Mr. CUMMING said: I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. There can be no question of order while the House is dividing.

Mr. CUMMING. It is with reference to the division that I rise. I want to know how long a time is to be allowed for gentlemen to pass between the tellers? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. WHEELER. There is evidently no quorum present. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. SAGE. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from New York is not in order, for more than one reason. In the first place, a motion to adjourn is pending, which would cut off the gentleman's motion; and in the second place, a motion for a call of the House is already pending.

Mr. PHELPS. I rise to a question of privilege. I move that a copy of the rules be presented to the gentleman from New York, in order to save him the trouble of making all these motions out of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. The gentleman from Missouri need not trouble himself about the gentleman from New York. The gentleman from New York is competent to take care of himself now, and at all times.

Mr. HUGHES. I rise to a question of order. As the motion of the gentleman from Missouri involves an expenditure of money, I submit that it must be first considered in the Committee of the Whole. [Renewed laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is out of order.

The question was taken upon the motion to adjourn; and decided in the negative—yeas 58, nays 72.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. McCULLOCH. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on the first day of December next.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order.

Mr. HUGHES. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order, it having been just decided by the House.

Mr. WHEELER. The motion just taken was to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is very well aware of that fact; but it is not in order to make the motion over and over again, with the simple motion to adjourn intervening.

Mr. WHEELER. I move, then, that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. That motion is already pending, and the yeas and nays have been ordered upon it.

The question was then taken on the motion that there be a call of the House; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 99, nays 21.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House ordered that there should be a call of the House; demand the yeas and nays, and on ordering the yeas and nays demand tellers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides the motion to be out of order.

Mr. WHEELER. Is a motion to adjourn in order?

The SPEAKER. Being of that character of motions, it may be repeated; it is evidently out of order in the spirit of the rule.

Mr. ORR. I will make a suggestion. After the House has ordered a call of the House, is it in order to move that the House adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has made no such decision, and will make none such.

Mr. WHEELER. I did not make the motion to adjourn. I only asked the Chair whether it was in order.

The roll was then called, and one hundred and thirty members answered to their names.

The list of absentees was then called.

The SPEAKER. The officers of the House will now close the doors.

The doors were closed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

[Cries of "No!"]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes! Yes! gentleman; and, further, I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. BRIDGES. And I demand tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. LILLY and BUGG were appointed.

The House was then divided, and the yeas and nays were ordered, the tellers having reported—ayes forty-three, more than one fifth of a quorum.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 39, nays 75.

Mr. RITCHEY, of Ohio. I move that we take a recess until twelve o'clock this morning.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not in order.

Mr. McCULLOCH. There is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is aware of that fact; but fifteen members can order a call of the House.

The list of absentees will now be called for excuses.

The Clerk proceeded to call the list of absentees, with the view to excuses.

WILLIAM AIKEN.

Mr. KERR. I simply rise, Mr. Speaker, to make an inquiry for the purpose of information. I submit whether the proper course is not, when the name of an absentee is called, and no excuse is rendered, to send the Sergeant-at-Arms to bring him in?

The SPEAKER. During my service here it has been the usual practice to call through the entire list and hear excuses. Then the Sergeant-at-Arms was by a general order compelled to bring the absent members into the House. If it be the pleasure of the House to make a special order, the Chair sees no reason why it may not do it.

[Cries of "No special order!" "General order!"]

Mr. WHEELER. I object to a general order; I want special orders.

Mr. KERR. Is it necessary that a motion should be made for special order?

The SPEAKER. It is necessary to have an order of the House.

Mr. KERR. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms bring Mr. AIKEN here.

Mr. PURYEAR. I hope that there will be no special order. It would be an endless work to get absent members present, if a special order was made for each. I trust that the course suggested by the Chair will be adopted.

Mr. STRAUB. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is upon the floor to a question of order.

Mr. PURYEAR. I move a general order. I move that the list of absentees be called through for excuses, and that, when through, those for whom no excuse has been offered be sent for under a general order to the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is no objection to that.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I would most respectfully put an inquiry to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is upon the floor to a question of order. The Chair has stated, in reference to the power of the House to send for individual members, that it is very clear, while the practice has been otherwise.

The uniform practice heretofore has been to hear excuses, and then make a general order in reference to those absentees for whom no excuse was offered. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PURYEAR] moves that there be a general order to compel the attendance of absentees without hearing excuses at all.

Mr. PURYEAR. No, sir; the Chair misunderstands me; I intended to suggest that those for whom no excuse has been offered be sent for by general order of the House.

The SPEAKER. That is the old practice. The Chair misunderstood the gentleman. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR] moves that the Sergeant-at-Arms compel the attendance of Mr. ASHE. The usual order is, that the Sergeant-at-Arms take him into custody, and bring him to the bar of the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. CASKIE. I have a suggestion to make to my friend from North Carolina, and that is that he withdraw his proposition for the present. Let us wait until we can see whether those with whom we have been contending during the night intend calling the yeas and nays on every proposition to excuse men whom everybody is willing to excuse. Then—

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am reluctant to call my friend from Virginia to order.

The SPEAKER. This debate is irregular, and out of order.

Mr. KERR. My habit is to act in concert with those who are engaged in the same cause with myself. I withdraw the motion which I submitted, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia.

WILLIAM APPLETON.

Mr. DRUM. On a call of the House, yesterday, Mr. APPLETON was stated to be absent from his seat in the House, on account of severe sickness in his family. I therefore move that he be excused.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I demand tellers on that motion.

Mr. JONES, of New York. I demand tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. ORR. I submit that the House has already determined the matter. By a vote already taken, Mr. APPLETON has been excused for his absence.

Mr. CULLOM. That was at another time. Mr. ORR. He was excused at this sitting. He was excused yesterday, and we have been in session since.

The SPEAKER. The House may be in a very different humor at this moment. [Laughter.] While it was willing to excuse him yesterday, it may not to-day. [Renewed laughter.]

Tellers on the yeas and nays were ordered; and Messrs. JONES, of Louisiana, and WHEELER were appointed.

The House was divided; and the tellers reported—yeas forty-three, more than one fifth of a quorum.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken on Mr. DRUM's motion; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 107, nays none.

So Mr. APPLETON was excused.

Mr. CASKIE. I now withdraw the request which I made of my friend from North Carolina; and I hope he will make his motion.

WILLIAM S. ASHE. No excuse offered.

Mr. KERR. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be instructed to take Messrs. AIKEN and ASHE into custody, and bring them before the House, to show cause of absence.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that Mr. ASHE be excused; and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina takes precedence of that.

Mr. DRUM. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 66, nays 51.

So the motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM S. BARRY. No excuse offered.

Mr. ENGLISH. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to take Mr. BARRY into custody, and bring him before the House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I desire to make a statement respecting my colleague.

Several MEMBERS. "Oh, no!" and "Never mind it!"

Mr. FARLEY. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. GREENWOOD, and WASHBURN of Maine, were appointed.

The House was then divided on the demand for the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported forty in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put on Mr. ENGLISH's motion; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 66, nays 51.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, in order to avoid the consumption of time by having the yeas and nays upon the question of sending for each gentleman whose name is called, I move, in accordance with what I believe to be the rule of the House, and the precedent which I find on the Journal, that the absent members be sent for, and taken into custody, wherever found, by special messengers to be appointed for that purpose, according to the 63d rule of this House.

Mr. GOODRICH. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. DRUM. I do not believe this whole ceremony will amount to anything. I therefore move that all further proceedings in the call be dispensed with.

Mr. PURYEAR. I ask here to make an explanation in reference to my colleague, [Mr. ROGERS,] who was obliged to leave the House last night, after midnight, in consequence of indisposition.

The SPEAKER. There is no question with reference to the gentleman's colleague.

Mr. PURYEAR. I was aware that I was not strictly in order, but I desire the fact to be known, that I am ready to make an excuse for my colleague whenever I shall have an opportunity to do so.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. DRUM,] to dispense with all further proceedings in the call.

Mr. FENTON. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. TWEED. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. SAPP and TWEED were appointed.

The House was then divided on the demand for the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported forty in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GROW. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MATTESON. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. SAPP. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. SAPP and TWEED were appointed.

The House was then divided on the demand for the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported thirty-two in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COBB. I was taught in my youth never to be weary in well-doing. I am going to make another proposition of peace.

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. COBB. I should like to know who has called me to order. I want the man to rise, and then we can fix it on somebody. Who was it?

Mr. SEWARD. I was the man.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I also call the gentleman from Alabama to order.

Mr. COBB. Now I know who it was. That was all I wanted to know. I know which side the objection comes from; it comes from ourselves.

[Loud cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is out of order.

The question was then taken upon Mr. GROW's motion; and there were—yeas 57, nays 77.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. SAPP. I move that when this House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. We are now acting under an order of the House, which takes precedence of any other motion except a motion to adjourn. The Chair thinks the spirit of the rules will be carried out by confining gentlemen to the order under which we are acting.

Mr. PURYEAR. I ask permission of the House to make a suggestion.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, the gentleman from North Carolina will be permitted to make the suggestion which he desires to offer.

Mr. PURYEAR. I cannot see that any good is to result from this course of proceeding. Some of the gentlemen who are absent attended faithfully here until after midnight, but were then obliged to leave the Hall from indisposition, being physically unable to remain here any longer. The course of proceeding we are now taking goes home to their constituents, and stamps upon them the charge of neglecting their duties. In justice to the absent members who have attended to their duties faithfully from the beginning of the session until the present moment, I believe it to be our duty to stop these proceedings, open the doors, and proceed with the regular business. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. That is the motion now pending, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 44, nays 77.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I rise to a question of order. I understand the motion now pending is to have an order issued for the arrest of the absentees. I make this point of order: The rule clearly contemplates that there shall be an opportunity given to offer excuses for absentees. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] refers to a precedent for his motion. The Speaker well remarked, during the evening, a mere precedent has not much force in it, especially when it comes in conflict with the positive provision of a rule. To sustain the point which I make, I call for the reading of the 63d rule of the House.

The 63d rule was then read, as follows:

"Upon the call of the House, the names of the members shall be called over by the Clerk, and the absentees noted; after which the names of the absentees shall again be called over; the doors shall then be shut, and those for whom no excuse, or insufficient excuses, are made, may, by order of those present, if fifteen in number, be taken into custody as they appear, or may be sent for and taken into custody, wherever to be found, by special messengers to be appointed for that purpose."

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio take an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do, if the Chair decides that the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] is in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that that motion is in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, because no opportunity has yet been given to offer excuses, so that the House might determine, in the language of the rule, whether they were sufficient or insufficient.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Is this question of order debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. BAYLY. The time to make excuses is clearly upon calling the absentees before the doors are opened.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] is mistaken. The proposition made by the gentleman from North Carolina is in order, for the reason that no excuses have been offered even.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The names of the absentees have not been called, and the custom always has been to call over the names, and hear and decide upon the sufficiency of excuses.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated that to be the custom, but the House could pursue its own course to compel the attendance of its members. It is a constitutional right. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] submitted a resolution that the absentees be sent for. The Chair entertained that motion, considering it to be in order, and he has now no doubt that it is in order. From that decision the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] takes an appeal.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The point of order I make is this, that an appeal from the decision of the Chair ought to have been taken when the Chair entertained the motion. It is too late to make it now.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have my reasons for being compelled to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, which I will state, if the Chair will allow me. I think it a case of exceeding hardship that an excuse cannot be offered for an absent member before sending the Sergeant-at-Arms to arrest him. Now, in the case of my colleague, [Mr. CORWIN,] He was telegraphed the other day that a member of his family was very sick, and he has gone home to Ohio. Another member was called home in consequence of the death of a child. Other members are upon sick beds—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] is not in order in making any remarks.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would ask the Chair for information, whether I may be permitted now, before the vote is taken, to offer excuses for some absentees?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the gentleman has that right. That is a very different proposition.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Has the roll of absentees been called for excuses?

Mr. PURYEAR. Will the House permit me to make a simple suggestion?

The SPEAKER. If no objection is made, the gentleman from North Carolina will be at liberty to make his suggestion.

Mr. PURYEAR. By the permission of the House, I simply wish to make this suggestion—that the roll shall be called, and that gentlemen who have excuses to offer for their friends shall rise and make them, and then, that we shall send for the remainder of the absentees for whom no excuses have been offered.

The SPEAKER. That mode can be adopted by the House; and, by unanimous consent, the roll can be called.

Mr. CRAIGE. Would it be necessary to have a separate vote in each case?

The SPEAKER. That will depend upon the will of forty members. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I object to calling the roll.

Mr. PURYEAR. I ask permission of the House to say one word more.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I rise for the purpose of making a motion in conformity with what I understand to be the ruling of the Chair; that the roll be called for the purpose of enabling members present to offer excuses for those who may be absent.

Upon that motion the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. That motion would be in order, having immediate connection with the motion now pending.

Several Voices. What is the proposition?

The SPEAKER. The proposition is, that the names of the absentees be called, so that excuses may be offered for each gentleman as his name is called. The Chair stated, in reply to the suggestion from the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. PURYEAR,] if no objection was made, that the course proposed by him would be pursued; but objection was made by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE.] The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] then submitted a motion that that course be pursued.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I would inquire of the Chair what becomes of my resolution by this process? If the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is in order, then my motion goes by the board.

The SPEAKER. The resolution of the gentleman from Kentucky will be superseded by the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana, as having immediate connection with the motion now before the House; it will take precedence of any other motion.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I rise to a question of order. I would call the attention of the Chair to the effect, that the object in offering a resolution to send for the absentees in a body, is to avoid the delay consequent on making a point upon each individual member.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. The Chair has decided that the proposition made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is in order.

Mr. PURYEAR. I desire to make this suggestion: That all the absentees shall be excused, and that the doors shall be opened. My object is to bring this matter to a close.

The SPEAKER. The House have just refused to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

The yeas and nays were then ordered upon Mr. CHAMBERLAIN's motion.

The SPEAKER. There is a question of privilege, as the Chair understands, which must be first disposed of before the question is taken upon the motion of the gentleman from Indiana. The Chair understands that there are several gentlemen in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and that that officer is now ready to make his report. [Cries of "Bring them in!" "Bring them in!"]

The Sergeant-at-Arms then reported that, according to the order of the House, he had in custody Mr. WILLIAM S. ASHE, and that he was now present.

The SPEAKER. Mr. ASHE: It seems that you have absented yourself from the House without its leave and contrary to its order. You are now at liberty to make such explanation or excuse for such absence as you may think proper.

Mr. ASHE. I have no excuse to offer except that I was very much exhausted, and that I had paired off with the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DE WITT.] I was obliged to go home on account of indisposition in my family.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ASHE] be excused.

Mr. WHEELER. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I think that the gentleman from North Carolina should be excused. I am opposed to excusing any member without a sufficient cause. Now, if the gentleman from North Carolina had sufficient cause for an excuse—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California is not in order.

The yeas and nays were ordered upon Mr. WHEELER's motion.

Mr. HAVEN. Is it in order to say a word in reference to this matter?

The SPEAKER. The Chair hardly thinks that it is in order.

Mr. HAVEN. I do not wish to say anything out of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that, according to the practice of the House, it is hardly in order for the gentleman to make any remarks, although he does not know of any express rule which would restrain him from doing so.

Mr. HAVEN. I only desire to say this: that the excuse offered by the gentleman from North Carolina is a most rational and reasonable one, and I am ready to vote to excuse him, unless there is to be made here a question of physical endurance, and then it would not be fair to impose upon one what you would not impose upon another.

Mr. ASHE. I withdraw my application for excuse. I do not wish anything from the charity of the House.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I merely wish to say that no man in this House has more kind feelings towards the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ASHE] than I have; but he has offered no satisfactory excuse, and if it is to be taken, we had better dispense with this call at once.

Mr. ASHE. I do not desire to be excused.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I made the motion to excuse him, and I do not withdraw it.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 95, nays 24.

So the House agreed to excuse Mr. ASHE.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN,] that the roll be called for the purpose of hearing the excuses of the remaining absentees; upon which the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered.

A MEMBER. I would ask if there was any objection to the course indicated by the gentleman from Indiana? Was not universal consent given to the mode of procedure upon which the yeas and nays have been called?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had a right to ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I did not understand the facts to be as they are now represented. Before I rose to make the motion I did, I understood that there were decided objections to a suggestion of the same character made by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. PURYEAR.] Upon that very ground it was I made the motion to obtain a vote of the House.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I rise simply for the purpose of explanation. Since the motion was made, and a vote ordered upon that motion, it has come to my ears that there is no objection to the mode of proceeding suggested by me. I would withdraw my motion, but I suppose it has gone beyond my control.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent, the demand for the yeas and nays can be withdrawn. The question was then taken; and decided in the negative—yeas 43, nays 53.

So the motion for a call of the roll to allow absent members to be excused was not agreed to.

Pending the announcement of the result, Mr. ZOLLICOFFER asked to be permitted to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman from Tennessee within the bar when his name was called, or before the next name on the roll was called?

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. I was not in when my name was called; but my name is the last on the list, and so there was none other called. I submit, therefore, that I have a right to vote. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then, if no other gentleman addressed the Chair before the gentleman from Tennessee came within the bar, he will be entitled to vote.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. No other gentleman had addressed the Chair before I came in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the Chair thinks that, under the circumstances, the gentleman has a right to vote.

The vote was accordingly registered.

The Clerk proceeded to call the names of the absentees for excuses.

DAVID RITCHIE, RUFUS W. PECKHAM.

Mr. JONES, of New York. I rise to what I think I may term a privileged question. I ask to make an excuse for two members who are absent from this House by my advice as a physician. I mean the Hon. DAVID RITCHIE, and the Hon. Mr. PECKHAM. Mr. RITCHIE is naturally feeble; and he was sick yesterday, and, to my certain knowledge, unable to sit in the House all day; to say nothing of the night. Mr. PECKHAM has been under the care of Doctor Hall, of this city, for the last four or five days. He came here yesterday; and he would have remained, but that I advised him to go home.

The question was taken; and Messrs. RITCHIE and PECKHAM were excused.

WILLIAM S. ASHE.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have also a question with respect to a case which has been partly disposed of previously, but on which I now desire to make a motion, as I think we had better finish up as we go along. I refer to the case of Mr. ASHE. Under the rule he is supposed to be still in custody; or, at least, the provisions of the rule have not been, as yet, fully complied with. I refer to the 64th rule of the House, which provides that when a member shall be discharged from custody, and admitted to his seat, the House shall determine whether such discharge shall be with or without the payment of fees. This has not been passed upon by the House in the case in question. I therefore ask that Mr. ASHE shall not be required to pay fees; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The universal practice of the House is to take the question on the discharge of a member who had been absent; and unless the point on the payment of fees is raised, and there is a motion to divide the question, the discharge is considered to be ample and without the payment of fees. Now, in the case of Mr. ASHE, the House has already ordered his discharge, without requiring him to pay fees, and therefore the motion of the gentleman from Ohio is not in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But, Mr. Speaker, the rule is peremptory and positive. The House shall determine whether the discharge is with or without the payment of fees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. When the House excused Mr. ASHE, it excused him in toto without requiring the payment of fees.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, I am not very particular, provided Mr. ASHE is not required to pay anything.

The SPEAKER. The question then recurs on the resolution offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE.]

GEORGE BLISS, WILSON SHANNON, JOSEPH R. CHANDLER.

Mr. SAPP. Mr. Speaker, I ask for permission to offer excuses for three gentlemen who are absent.

Assent was expressed by the House.

Mr. SAPP. Mr. BLISS, of Ohio, my colleague, has paired off with Mr. EWING, of Kentucky, and has gone home by the advice of his physician. He is in very poor health, and it was highly advisable for him to return home.

Mr. SHANNON, who is also one of my colleagues, has been called home on professional business. At the court, which is now in session, he is engaged in some very important causes; but he is expected back every day. It was absolutely necessary for him, under the circumstances, to leave his seat for a short time.

Mr. CHANDLER, of Pennsylvania, left here last night in very poor health. He paired off with Mr. CLINGMAN.

I ask that these three members be excused by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Any member may ask for a division of the House on these several excuses, if he thinks proper. By the general consent of the House, the question will be taken on excusing all of them at once.

Mr. RIDDLE. I desire to offer an excuse for Mr. FRANKLIN, of Maryland.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is first to be decided on the excuses offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SAPP.]

Mr. WHEELER. And on that motion to excuse I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, all that has recently occurred at that side of the House has been entirely inaudible in this part of the Hall. Members therefore do not know what they are called upon to vote for.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAPP] rises to make excuses for three members of the House who are absent. Two of them are his colleagues, [Messrs. SHANNON and BLISS,] and the third is the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CHANDLER.] The question is on excusing these gentlemen for the reasons offered by the gentlemen from Ohio.

Mr. PURYEAR. I move, Mr. Speaker, by the permission of the House, that all gentlemen on this floor who have excuses to make for absentees, shall be permitted to make them; and that the whole be included in one motion.

[Objections, and cries of "No!" "No!"]
The SPEAKER pro tempore. This can only be done by the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. CASKIE. I move to divide the question on the motion to excuse, made by the gentleman from Ohio; and, at the same time, I move that the question be first taken as to excusing the member who was first named by that gentleman. I suppose there is no necessity for unanimous consent about that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that any member of the House has a right to call for a division of the question. Therefore the question will be put on excusing the gentleman first named in the motion of the gentleman from Ohio. That is Mr. BLISS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. On what ground is he to be excused?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That he went from the House unwell.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. On the motion to excuse Mr. BLISS, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CASKIE. I hope that, before the yeas and nays are called, we may be at liberty to go along and do something. Let gentlemen in the House be now permitted to state why their colleagues and friends are absent, and ask that they may be excused. I ask that the yeas and nays may not be called, as it is evident to everybody that it is the unanimous desire of the House to excuse members, when any excuse is offered.

Mr. SAPP. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] asks that a statement be made, such as can be heard by all the members, as to the absence of the gentleman whom I asked to be excused. Mr. BLISS, of Ohio, my colleague, has paired off on this bill with Mr. EWING, of Kentucky. Mr. BLISS is in very bad health. He has not been able to sit in the House for the last two weeks; and under the direction of his physician he went to Ohio—pairing off, as I said, with Mr. EWING.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unless objection be made, it will be considered the unanimous determination of the House that Mr. BLISS be excused.

There was no objection; and Mr. BLISS was accordingly declared excused.

Mr. STUART. Mr. Speaker, I asked for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair heard no objection made.

Mr. STUART. I objected in time, and called for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the gentleman as objecting. It is too late for him to object now.

The question recurring on the motion to excuse Mr. SHANNON,

Mr. SAPP. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. SHANNON of Ohio, left this city two weeks since to-day. He went home to attend the court which was then in session, and before which he had some very important business as a member of the bar. It was absolutely necessary for him to be in attendance in the court, to transact his professional business. I therefore ask that Mr. SHANNON be excused.

Mr. CASKIE. I object.

Mr. BANKS. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to excuse.

Mr. TWEED. And I ask for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PHILLIPS and KERR were appointed.

The House was divided; and the tellers reported thirty-five in the affirmative, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask a question which would have an effect on governing my vote. If the House refuse to excuse Governor SHANNON, will it not be imperative to send to Ohio after him?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a question for the House to determine. The House can make its own order about that.

Mr. FARLEY, (at half past eight o'clock, a. m.) I move that the House do now adjourn; and that will answer the purpose of taking the yeas and nays.

Mr. BANKS. Upon that I ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. TWEED. And I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CHURCHWELL and EDMUNDSON were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported thirty-four in the affirmative, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The roll was then called.

Pending the announcement of the result, the Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar, having in custody an absent member.

WILLIAM S. BARRY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before the Chair announces the result of the vote on the motion to adjourn there comes up a question of privilege. The Sergeant-at-Arms of this House appears at the bar with one of the absentees.

The Sergeant-at-Arms reported to the Chair that WILLIAM S. BARRY, who had been absent from the House, was then present in his custody.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, is it in order now to make a motion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not, there being a privileged question before the House. (Addressing Mr. BARRY.) Mr. BARRY, on a call ordered by the House, it was found that you were absent without the leave or consent of the House. The Sergeant-at-Arms was ordered to have you brought forward, and now you are at liberty to make an excuse for your absence.

Mr. BARRY. I have not been very well, Mr. Speaker, and I was apprehensive of the consequences to my health which might result from sitting up all night. Besides, Mr. Speaker, I have paired off with a gentleman on the other side of this question. But, at all events, I was afraid of sitting up all night; as, if I did, I could not be assured from getting an attack of rheumatism.

Mr. HUGHES. I move that the gentleman be excused.

The motion was put and agreed to.

The yeas and nays were called for.

Mr. WHEELER. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair heard no objection made to the motion to excuse the gentleman from Mississippi; and it is now too late.

Mr. FARLEY. Do I understand the Chair to state that no objection was made in time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The final vote of the House was given in favor of the gentleman being excused before objection was made; at least the Chair did not hear objection in time. The gentleman from Mississippi stands excused.

The Chair then announced the result of the vote previously taken on the motion to adjourn to be decided in the negative—yeas 46, nays 69.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now arises on the motion to excuse Mr. CHANDLER.

Mr. KERR. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with, and that the doors be opened.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, there are a number of gentlemen now at the doors, who cannot gain admission to the floor. All we want is to get an attendance of members here; and that can be effected by opening the doors.

Mr. MATTESON. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Massachusetts. I ask tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HARRIS, of Alabama, and WENTWORTH, of Massachusetts, were appointed.

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported—yeas forty, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 47, nays 53.

So the House refused to suspend all further proceedings in the call.

Pending the call of the roll,

Mr. GREENWOOD said: I rise to what I consider a question of privilege. It is in reference to the rights of members to take part in these proceedings in reference to call. I would inquire of the Chair if gentlemen whose names appear among the list of absentees should find their way into this Hall through any means, I care not how, whether they would have a right to participate in any proceeding in relation to this call of the House, until they shall have been brought in and excused?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that such members as have been excluded from the bar by an order of the House have no right to participate in the proceedings in reference to a call of the House, until after the order which excludes them has been rescinded; but the Chair cannot take notice of individual cases of violation of this rule, unless his attention is called directly to them.

The question recurs upon the motion made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAPP] to excuse his colleague, [Mr. SHANNON,] upon which motion the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to offer an excuse for my colleagues, [Messrs. MACE and LANE.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that it is not in order to do so at this time, as a motion to excuse a member [Mr. SHANNON] is already pending. After that question is disposed of, it will be in order to offer further excuses.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. My principal object in rising at this time, was to ascertain what the practice of the House would be in that respect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds that every gentleman has a right to an opportunity to make an excuse for his colleague or colleagues, if he chooses to do so, provided he obtains the floor in a regular manner. The Chair also holds that a member may insist upon having every vote taken separately. The question now is upon the motion to excuse Mr. SHANNON.

Mr. KERR. Before I am called upon to vote upon that question, I desire to know whether I understand correctly the reasons which have been given for his absence? I understand it is alleged that he is at home attending to necessary professional business before the courts of his State. Am I right in my understanding?

The SPEAKER. That was the alleged excuse.

Mr. BALL. It is now past nine o'clock, (a. m. Friday,) and in order to give members an opportunity to get shaved and to clean up, I move that the House adjourn until twelve o'clock, m.

Mr. WHEELER. I call for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

Mr. TWEED. Tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rise to a question of order. The motion just made is to adjourn until twelve o'clock, a time certain. I submit that such a motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the question of order, and rules the motion out of order.

Mr. WHEELER, (at nine o'clock and forty minutes, a. m.) Then I move that the House do now adjourn; and upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

Many Voices. Tellers upon the yeas and nays. Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WHEELER and FLORENCE appointed.

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported forty-eight in the affirmative (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 43, nays 63.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. HUGHES. I desire to offer an excuse for the absence of my colleague, [Mr. SIMMONS.]

The SPEAKER. A motion is already pending to excuse the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHANNON.] After that motion shall have been disposed of other excuses will be in order.

Mr. WHEELER. I call for the yeas and nays upon the pending motion.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have already been ordered.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Will it be in order to submit a motion that all further proceedings in the call be dispensed with?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. HOUSTON. Would it be in order to move that the doors be open, and that the absentees be allowed to come in and render their excuses to the House?

[Cries of "No!" "No!" "Oh, no!"]

Mr. CRAIGE. That would not be in order, Mr. Speaker, without unanimous consent, would it?

The SPEAKER. It could not be done as long as any gentleman objects to it.

[Cries of "Oh! let it be done!" and "Yes!" "Yes!"]

Mr. PURYEAR. I hope no objection will be interposed to taking such a course. It will facilitate the business of the House very much. I suggest that all objection to such a course be withdrawn.

Mr. CRAIGE. I object to such a course because it would be unjust to one of my colleagues, [Mr. ASHE.] He was sent for by order of the House, and all other absentees ought to be treated in the same way.

The SPEAKER. As long as any gentleman objects, the course proposed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] cannot be pursued.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. If I recollect aright, upon the vote which was last taken no quorum voted. Now, I would inquire of the Chair, if we now suspend the proceedings under this call, will we not have to renew the call?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would reply to the gentleman, that a motion for the call of the House, or for an adjournment, does not require a quorum at all.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. Is it then proposed to suspend the call for the purpose of submitting a motion that the House adjourn?

The SPEAKER. That is for the House, and not for the Chair, to determine.

Mr. HUGHES. There seems to be an universal desire that the absentees should be permitted to come in informally, and to render their excuses to the House in propria persona.

Mr. RUFFIN. I object.

Mr. HUGHES. Very well; I only spoke of it because the proposition came from that side of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the motion that all further proceedings in the call be dispensed with.

Mr. HUGHES. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 45, nays 53.

So the House refused to suspend further proceedings in the call.

Mr. SAPP. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will suspend for a moment, until a question of a highly privileged character is disposed of. The Chair understands that the Sergeant-at-Arms has another member in custody.

Mr. JONES, of New York. A very high privilege.

The Sergeant-at-Arms then reported to the House that, in accordance with the order of the House, he had taken in custody WILLIAM AIKEN, and that he was then present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman [Mr. AIKEN] will present himself before the body.

Mr. AIKEN presented himself at his seat.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman stands charged with having left the House without leave, and contrary to its orders. The gentleman is at liberty to make his excuse.

Mr. AIKEN. I plead guilty to the charge. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that the gentleman be excused; and upon that motion I ask the yeas and nays.

[Cries of "No!" "No!" "Oh, no!"]

Mr. COBB. There is no objection to excusing the gentleman, and what do we want of the yeas and nays. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon them.

A VOICE. CAMPBELL, do not insist upon them.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If there is no objection to excusing the gentleman, I do not insist upon the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ASHE. I wish to make a suggestion. I think that the best mode we can adopt, in order to get along with the business, is to allow the absentees to come in, and render to the House their separate excuses, without the necessity of going through the formality of having them brought in by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. KEITT. I hope it will be done.

The SPEAKER. By the unanimous consent of the House, the absentees will be allowed to come in before the body; and render their excuses.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that all further proceedings in the call be dispensed with.

[Cries of "Let them come in!" "Let us set it out!"]

Mr. HUGHES. I hope it will be allowed to be done by unanimous consent.

[Cries of "Yes!" "Yes!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] moves that all further proceedings in the call be dispensed with.

Mr. HENN. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will withdraw that motion, and allow the absentees to come in.

[Cries of "Yes!" "Yes!"]

Mr. CAMPBELL. If there is a general disposition to let the absentees in, I have no objection to their coming; but it looks like a half-way method of doing business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that objection is withdrawn to the proposition made by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. ASHE.] The doors will be thrown open, and the other absentees will be allowed to come in and render to the House an excuse for their absence.

Mr. PRINGLE. Why not admit them, and then suspend all further proceedings in the call?

The SPEAKER. That is a matter for the House, and not for the Chair, to decide.

A MEMBER. Objection to opening the doors has been withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the order of the House will be changed so as to allow the absentees to appear before this body, and render their excuses; and shall, as the Chair understands it, render their excuses.

[Cries of "Yes!" "Yes!"]

The SPEAKER. It is so ordered.

The doors of the Hall were then thrown open, and the absentees came pouring in from every direction in great numbers.

After order was restored, and the noise and confusion consequent upon so large and sudden an increase of members in the Hall had ceased,

The SPEAKER said: The order of the House is, that the absentees who have just entered shall appear at the bar of the House, and render excuses for their absence contrary to its orders. As the most convenient mode of executing the order, the names of the absentees will be called by the Clerk, in their regular order.

The Clerk commenced calling the list of absentees with the name of NATHAN BELCHER.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman is present, he will render his excuse.

Mr. BELCHER. I remained in the House during the past night as long as my health and strength would permit. I then left the House, having paired off with Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move the gentleman be excused.

Mr. SAPP. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

[Cries of "Oh, no!" "Oh, no!"]

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, yes.

Mr. EDMUNDSON. If there is no objection,

I suppose the gentleman will be excused by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHEELER] demands the yeas and nays upon the proposition to excuse.

Mr. WHEELER. If there is no objection to excusing the gentleman, I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER, (pausing a moment.) The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman is excused by unanimous consent.

PETER H. BELL.

Mr. BELL. I have no particular excuse to render. I have absented myself but one hour out of the last twenty, and that happened to be when a call of the House was ordered. I have no further excuse.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I move the gentleman be excused.

There being no objection, the gentleman was excused.

HENRY BENNETT.

Mr. BENNETT. I staid here as long as I was able, and went away. [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, (in his seat.) He was able to get away then, was he?

By unanimous consent, Mr. BENNETT was excused.

THOMAS H. BENTON.

Mr. BENTON. I have, sir, to make my excuse to the House, which I hope will be satisfactory to gentlemen when they hear it. It was neither on account of age or infirmities that I was absent, for I never felt better. Nor did I pair off with any person, although several good and true men offered to walk off with me, in whose company I should be proud to be found. But to pair off was not within my view of parliamentary rules, and I have never done it, and I do not mean, at this late day, to begin to learn anything new. Antiquas vias—the old ways—is my motto.

I was absent, that is true, but without disrespect to the House, and without the least design to impede its business, or to prevent the complete transaction of the business, such as it was, in which the House was engaged. [Laughter.]

I hope to be allowed, Mr. Speaker, to say, in the presence of this House, that I have admired the decorum, the urbanity, the dignity, and the impartiality with which you have presided, and the precision with which all questions have been put by the Speaker. No real transaction could have been conducted with more absolute propriety and gravity than the Chair conducted the business of this House during the whole of the last evening. I was greatly gratified. I went away, taking a survey of the House, and seeing good and true men sitting all around; and enough to keep up a quorum to carry on the business of the House, such as it was. [Laughter.] I saw that my absence would make no difference at all, and therefore I went away, animus revertendi, [laughter]—with design to return—not to escape the business of the House, but to return to it refreshed and invigorated, and take my share, and sit it out; to tell the exact truth, to husband and save some strength for a pinch, when it should come; for I did not think we had yet got to the tightest place. It was therefore to be able to serve the House better when it should more need service, that I took a brief repose.

In making this excuse to the House, I do not wish to be considered as having been absent until now—until this hour. I have been waiting a long time at the door, and am entitled to credit for the time I was kept out. [Laughter.] I was not brought back by the Sergeant-at-Arms, but returned voluntarily, and was stopped at the door, and long debarred of entrance. Striking a balance between the time I was voluntarily absent, and the time I was involuntarily kept out, it would be pretty near even worked out upon a fair equation, and my delinquency would be very small. Taking it in that sense, I am entitled to the decision of the House that the account is nearly even, and, at all events to a decision that there has been no disrespect to the House; being free from disrespect, and from all desire to impede the progress of its business. I hope this will be satisfactory to the House, and that I shall be excused, especially as I declare that I will do better for time to come. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman will be excused.

No objection being made, Mr. BENTON was excused.

SAMUEL CARUTHERS was next called.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I rise to a question of order. Will it be in order to now move to suspend all further proceedings under the call? It is evident, after what has taken place, that the House does not intend to inflict a penalty upon any one of the absentees.

The SPEAKER. The motion would be in order.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Then I move that all further proceedings be dispensed with.

Mr. WHEELER. I object.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Well, I make the motion.

Mr. WHEELER. When the consent of this House was given that the doors should be opened, and the absentees be permitted to come in, it was upon the express understanding that each absentee should be called to the bar of the House, and render his excuse.

The SPEAKER. That was the order of the House; but it is competent for the House to change its orders.

Mr. DRUM. I ask the yeas and nays upon the motion.

Mr. WHEELER. I expressly asked if that was the understanding when the consent of the House was given; and had it not been so understood, I should have objected to the order.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, all further proceedings under the call will be dispensed with, by unanimous consent.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then put; and decided in the affirmative.

So all further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. HUGHES. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WHEELER. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I call for tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BAYLY, of Virginia, and WASHBURN, of Maine, were appointed.

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported thirty-nine in the affirmative, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOWE. I desire to be excused from voting, for the reason that last night I paired off with Mr. SINGLETON, who stated that his family were unwell, and who is still detained from the House, I presume, from the same cause. I do not, therefore, feel at liberty to vote. But, sir, I find that by the rules of the House that if I am here I am required to vote, unless excused by the House. I have no wish to violate the rules of the House, and I therefore ask to be excused.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the gentleman from Pennsylvania cannot be excused from voting upon a motion to adjourn. That is the rule the present incumbent of the chair has uniformly adhered to. He believes it to be a correct rule, and he therefore decides that the motion that the gentleman be excused cannot be entertained.

Mr. HOWE. But I should like to know how to act? My honor with the gentleman with whom I have paired off is at stake upon the one hand, and in conforming to the rules of the House upon the other.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must settle that question for himself. The parliamentary law knows nothing of the principle of pairing off. There is nothing of the sort in the books; and it is a practice which prevails, perhaps, in no other legislative body upon the face of the earth, except this. If the gentleman has paired off, he had better have staid off. The Chair makes the suggestion in perfect good humor. The rules of the House require him to vote, if he is present; and if he precludes himself from voting by agreement with another member, the best method he can adopt is to stay away from the House. It is, however, for the gentleman to prescribe his own course.

Mr. HOWE. I desire to say one word more. There was no hour named by Mr. SINGLETON, when our agreement was to expire. We simply agreed, when he left the House last night, that we were to pair off until this morning. I do not see the gentleman in the Hall, and I do not therefore, in honor, feel at liberty to vote, nor yet do I feel at liberty to violate the rules of the House. Under these circumstances, I should esteem it a favor if the House would excuse me from voting.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no doubt the House will very readily excuse the gentleman from voting. It is, however, not in order to submit the motion, and the Chair cannot, therefore, entertain it.

Mr. MACY. I desire also to state to the House that I paired off with Mr. DISNEY last night, until this morning. I do not see the gentleman from Ohio in his place, and I shall, therefore, not feel at liberty to vote.

The question was then taken upon the motion to adjourn; and decided in the negative—yeas 50, nays 81.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken upon Mr. ELIOT's motion; and decided in the negative—yeas 35, nays 74.

So the House refused to order a call of the House.

Pending the call of the roll,

Mr. ELLISON stated that upon this motion he had paired off with Mr. BOYCE, from South Carolina.

Mr. MACE. I move that when this House adjourn it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order, being in the nature of business, and no quorum having answered to their names.

Mr. MACE. I was not aware of the fact that there was no quorum present, or I should not have made the motion.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that there be a call of the House; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order, for the reason that the House have just voted upon that motion, and refused to order a call of the House.

Mr. PECK, (at half-past ten o'clock, a. m.) I move that the House do now adjourn; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. TWEED. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. DAVIS, of Indiana, and MACE appointed.

The House was then divided upon ordering the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported thirty-one in the affirmative; (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken upon Mr. PECK's motion; and decided in the negative—yeas 45, nays 72.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. MACE. I move a call of the House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BRIDGES. I ask for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MACE and COX appointed.

The House was then divided upon ordering the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported thirty-six in the affirmative; (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken on the motion that there be a call of the House; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 53, nays 76.

So the House refused to order a call.

Mr. EDMANDS. (At ten minutes past eleven o'clock, Friday morning.) I move that the House do now adjourn; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. TWEED. I demand tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. STRATTON. Will it be in order that we take a recess for half an hour?

The SPEAKER. Not unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. STRATTON. I hope, then, that the unanimous consent will be granted for a recess, so that the clerks, who have been kept constantly calling the roll since yesterday morning, may have a little repose before the reading of the Journal, which takes place at twelve o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the clerks are ready with the Journal.

Tellers were ordered on the yeas and nays; and Messrs. PECK and VAIL appointed.

The question was then taken; and the yeas and nays were ordered; the tellers having reported—aye forty-one, more than one fifth of a quorum.

The question was then taken on Mr. EDMANDS's motion; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 49, nays 80.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Pending the above call,

Mr. ELLISON stated that he had paired off with Mr. BOYCE, of South Carolina, for twenty or thirty minutes.

Mr. HOWE. I think it is quite evident, from the proceedings of the last twenty-four hours, that no practical good is to result to the country from our continuing longer in session; therefore I move that when the House adjourns, it be to meet on Monday next; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. OLDS. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MEACHAM and GREENWOOD appointed.

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported—aye thirty-nine, more than one fifth of a quorum.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken on Mr. HOWE's motion; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 43, nays 83.

So the House disagreed to the motion to adjourn over.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Massachusetts. I move that there be a call of the House; and on that motion demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. GREEN. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. DUNHAM and ELLISON appointed.

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported—aye forty-three, more than one fifth of a quorum.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I wish to make a suggestion.

[Cries of "I object!"]

Mr. WENTWORTH. When gentlemen know my proposition, I am sure none will object.

Mr. TWEED. I object to discussion.

Mr. WENTWORTH. A few moments ago we were all excused, with one exception, unanimously.

The SPEAKER. Objection has been made to the gentleman's proceeding, and he must come to order.

Mr. WENTWORTH. If the gentleman knew my object, I know that he would not object. It is to do an act of justice to a gentleman on his own side of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must come to order.

Mr. WENTWORTH. A correction of the Journal is a privileged question, and I am entitled to be heard on it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must come to order. The question is now on the motion that there be a call of the House, and it must be taken.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Time would be saved, and it would be better if the correction I propose were made now, before the Journal is made up.

Mr. TWEED. I insist on my objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the call of the roll.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. WENTWORTH, of Massachusetts; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 45, nays 80.

So the House refused to order a call of the House.

Pending the above call,

Mr. FENTON stated that he had paired off for a short time with Mr. MAY.

Mr. PECK. I move that when this House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next; and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GREEN. I ask for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Mr. DEAN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of order.

Mr. DEAN. It is, that the hour of twelve o'clock having arrived, the Journal of the preceding day is to be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide the question of order raised by the gentleman from New York. One of the principal rules having a bearing upon this point is the following, touching the duties of the Speaker:

"He shall take the chair every day precisely at the hour to which the House shall have adjourned on the preceding day."

The Chair has done that, and has no authority now to declare the House adjourned for the purpose of taking the chair at the time to which he may determine the House shall have adjourned to. The rule says, further, that "he shall immediately call the members to order." There has been no adjournment and no legislative day finished yet.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Chair decide that this is Thursday, or Friday? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not called upon to make any decision of that kind.

Mr. CHANDLER. I want the question decided, that I may know whether I ought to eat flesh or fish for dinner. [Much laughter.]

Mr. DEAN. I understand the Chair, then, to decide that this is still the same legislative day, and that whenever we do adjourn, a motion may be made to correct the Journal the next day.

The SPEAKER. Even if it be a month hence. The Chair has no doubt of that.

Mr. DEAN. That is what I wanted to understand.

Mr. PENNINGTON. I wish to inquire whether the morning hour has expired? [A laugh.]

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has not expired, and the Chair doubts whether it will expire for a week to come. [Laughter.]

Mr. BANKS. What is the decision of the Chair upon the question of order raised by the gentleman from New York?

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BANKS. I am impressed with the conviction that the Chair is right upon the reasons stated by him, and the rule of the House to which reference is made. It is very clear upon the rule cited by the Chair.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is there any question before the House?

Mr. BANKS. I propose to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, if necessary. I do not desire, however, to appeal. I merely want to make a suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be pleased to hear the gentleman from Massachusetts, if it is the pleasure of the House; but if objection be made, debate is not in order.

Mr. BANKS. I want the consent of the House to cite the rule upon which the House must proceed in this case, and to which the Speaker has not referred.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, send up the rule.

Mr. OLDS. I object, unless an appeal is taken.

Mr. BANKS. I ask the consent of the House that I may state that, upon the rule to which the Speaker has referred, his decision is correct. But it is not necessary that, at this hour, there shall be an adjournment by a vote of the House; for, on the very first day of this session, the House, upon motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] passed this order:

"That twelve o'clock be fixed as the hour to which the House shall each day adjourn, until otherwise ordered."

That is the rule by which we must be governed in this case; and there is no adjournment required at this hour, for the House has adjourned by its order, adopted on the first day of the session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BANKS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts takes an appeal, and the question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?"

Mr. HAMILTON. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. MAURICE. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. GREEN. I ask for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Mr. ASHE. Will the Chair state what is the proposition before the body?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will do so before the vote is taken.

Mr. ASHE. At present, I really do not know how to vote.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. STRAUB and MEACHAM appointed.

The House was then divided on the demand for the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported forty-six in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAGE. I have some doubts as to the correctness of the decision of the Chair, and I therefore ask to be excused from voting on the appeal.

The SPEAKER. Perhaps the gentleman will be able to determine after the Chair has stated what the question is. [Laughter.]

Mr. ORR. I do not think there is any hope of that. [A laugh.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not deprive the gentleman of his right to ask to be excused. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] raises the question that, by the order of this House, passed on the first day of the present session of Congress, the House stands adjourned to twelve o'clock to-day.

The Chair overrules that question of order, upon the ground that there cannot be a meeting of this body without an adjournment; and upon the further ground that when this House does adjourn, even if it is a week hence, it will meet again as directed by its own order. The legislative day will continue until the House adjourns, and when the House, after such an adjournment, meets at twelve o'clock, or at such other time as the House shall fix, it will be the duty of the Speaker, under the rule which has been referred to by him, to take the chair, call the members to order, and cause the Journal of the preceding day to be read, and a portion of that Journal must necessarily be a motion and a vote to adjourn; without that, it is incomplete.

The Chair begs leave again to read to the House the rule prescribing the duties of the Speaker, to which he has referred.

"I. He shall take the chair every day precisely at the hour to which the House shall have adjourned on the preceding day; shall immediately call the members to order; and, on the appearance of a quorum, shall cause the Journal of the preceding day to be read."

The Speaker could not take the chair at twelve o'clock to-day, for the reason that he was continuing to occupy it, and the House was continuing to progress in its proceedings upon a legislative day, and must continue to do so until it adjourns. One of the three hundred and sixty-five days of the year has passed over, the Chair admits; but one of the legislative days allowed to this Congress is now being consumed.

In this view, hastily taken, the Chair admits, for he has not had time to turn to precedents, the Chair thinks he is correct, and he overrules the question of order. From that decision of the Chair, the gentleman from Massachusetts takes an appeal; and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HAMILTON] moves to lay the appeal upon the table. Another question pending is that raised by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SAGE,] viz: that the House excuse him from voting upon the appeal. That is a legitimate proposition, but the vote must be taken on it without debate.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand the Chair to decide that an entire session of the House is but one legislative day, even though it may continue for a week, and some of my neighbors are a little curious to know whether we shall get only one per diem for the entire session. [Laughter.] I object to the decision of the Speaker on that point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot debate the proposition. The Chair decides that it is not competent for him to adjourn the House.

Mr. BANKS. I understand that the appeal is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. BANKS. But, as the Chair has made a very lucid and conclusive argument in favor of that decision, would it be proper, or within the generosity of the House, that upon the appeal I have taken, I should make a brief statement?

Messrs. OLDS, BRIDGES, and others objected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes the gentleman from Massachusetts will be heard.

Mr. ENGLISH. I object to it.

Mr. BANKS. I desire to state—

Mr. ENGLISH. I object to discussion.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman from Massachusetts is not in order.

Mr. BANKS. Who objects?

Messrs. ENGLISH, OLDS, and BRIDGES rose simultaneously, and objected.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Will the Chair allow me to make a single suggestion?

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the gentleman from Connecticut be heard?

Mr. ENGLISH. I object, and call for the question.

Mr. BANKS. Will the House allow me to call its attention to a precedent upon this very question?

Mr. HOUSTON. We understand the question.

Mr. HUGHES. I call the gentleman from Alabama to order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And I call the gentleman from New York to order.

[Shouts of "Order!" and great confusion.]

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen are not in order in discussing this question, directly or indirectly.

Mr. BANKS. I again ask the consent of the House to make a reference to this one precedent.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And I again call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must remind the gentleman from Massachusetts of the fact, of which he is very well aware, that it is not in order to persist in a purpose to address the House out of order, and the Chair must insist on the gentleman's desisting from doing so.

Mr. BANKS. Most assuredly. I only ask the consent of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on excusing the gentleman from New York [Mr. SAGE] from voting on the appeal.

Mr. GOODRICH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GREEN. I ask for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. STRAUB and SAPP were appointed.

The House was then divided on the demand for the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported forty in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 57, nays 83.

So the House refused to excuse Mr. SAGE.

Mr. DRUM stated that he had paired off until one o'clock with Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have just come into the House, and do not quite understand the question, and I should, therefore, like to be excused from voting on the appeal.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Ohio will be excused.

Mr. WHEELER. I object.

Mr. FARLEY. I move that the gentleman from Ohio be excused from voting.

Mr. SAGE. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Massachusetts. I ask for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BODDICK and FENTON were appointed.

The House was divided on the demand for the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported thirty-five in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 45, nays 72.

So the House refused to excuse Mr. CAMPBELL from voting.

Mr. TRACY. I ask to be excused from voting on the question of the appeal.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Massachusetts. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 48, nays 71.

So Mr. TRACY was not excused.

Mr. EDGERTON. I rise to what I believe to be a privileged motion. I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENN. Is the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EDGERTON] in order?

The SPEAKER. It is in order, in the opinion of the Chair.

IS THIS DAY FRIDAY?

Mr. HENN. Does the Chair rule this day to be Friday? Under the previous decision of the Chair, the legislative day of yesterday has not yet terminated.

The SPEAKER. This is Friday, and it is private bill day. The legislative session of yesterday has not terminated, but each day, under our rules, must be regarded in all our sessions, Mondays, Fridays, or other days.

Mr. SEWARD. Do I understand the Chair as deciding that the motion made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EDGERTON] is in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decided that it was in order, under an express rule of the House.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I rise to a question of order. Is there not an appeal from a decision of the Chair pending, and would not that take precedence of the motion made by the gentleman from Ohio?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it would not. There is an appeal pending from the decision of the Chair, but the appeal attaches to the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON], to close debate upon the Nebraska and Kansas bill. When the House take up that subject, they must consider the appeal and all questions connected with it.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Ohio by inserting, in the place of the "Private Calendar," the "Nebraska and Kansas bill."

The SPEAKER. The Nebraska and Kansas bill is in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and we have an express rule with regard to the course of proceeding there, which precludes any such motion as that made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WRIGHT. Is not the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EDGERTON] open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that it is not open to amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I move to lay the motion of the gentleman from Ohio upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from New York is not a legitimate one, for the reason that the motion made by the gentleman from Ohio may be repeated again under the express rules of the House, even if it were laid upon the table.

The question was then taken upon Mr. EDGERTON's motion; and there were—yeas 65, nays 85.

So the House refused to go into Committee on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the proposition to lay the appeal from the decision of the Chair upon the table?

Mr. EDGERTON. Is it in order to move to proceed to business upon the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order, in the opinion of the Chair. The business before the body being a resolution to close debate, which takes precedence of a motion to proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. EDGERTON. I move then that the House adjourn.

Mr. SAGE. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I demand tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MACE and VAIL were appointed.

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported thirty-eight in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 53, nays 87.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on laying the appeal from the decision of the Chair upon the table.

Mr. PECK. I move that there be a call of the House; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and decided in the negative—yeas 37, nays 90.

So the House refused a call.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on laying on the table the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. FENTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next; and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Tellers were called for, and ordered.

Mr. PENNINGTON. I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw his motion for an adjournment over.

Several MEMBERS. For what purpose?

Mr. PENNINGTON. For the purpose of allowing me to submit a motion to go to the business on the Speaker's table, if that motion be in order.

Several MEMBERS. It is not in order.

Mr. PENNINGTON. And if that motion, Mr. Speaker, be not in order, then for the purpose of moving to suspend the rules to enable me to make it.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. That motion is not in order, either; you cannot suspend the rules to-day.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to suspend the rules, except on Monday.

Mr. PENNINGTON. This business is getting to be very stupid. We ought to be doing something for the sake of variety.

Messrs. Cox and FENTON were appointed tellers on ordering the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn over.

The House was divided; and the tellers reported forty in the affirmative, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 41, nays 89.

So the House refused to adjourn over.

The question recurred on the motion to lay the appeal from the decision of the Chair on the table.

Mr. GOODRICH. I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar; and on that motion I ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my motion in relation to the question of appeal. The appeal was made at my suggestion; but I understand, since the appeal was taken, that—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. BANKS. I only propose to withdraw my appeal.

Mr. HILLYER. But the gentleman has no right to debate it.

Mr. BANKS. I was but proceeding to state that I understand there has been a subsequent decision on a question which was substantially the same as that involved in the appeal which I took, although different in form. And acknowledging the most commendable fairness of the Speaker in this contest, I do not wish to make any factious opposition to the ruling of the Chair. Therefore, I desire to withdraw my appeal.

There being no objection, the appeal was withdrawn.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. GOODRICH, that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, on which the yeas and nays were demanded—

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. Cox, and WASHBURNE of Illinois, were appointed.

The House was divided; and the tellers reported thirty-nine in the affirmative; (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and decided in the negative—yeas 64, nays 83.

So the House refused to resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on excusing the gentleman from Maine from voting on the proposition made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, that the resolution to close debate on the Nebraska bill be laid upon the table.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, (at thirty-five minutes past three o'clock, p. m.) I move that the House do now adjourn; and I call for the yeas and nays on that proposition.

Mr. WALKER. I demand tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WASHBURNE of Illinois, and HILLYER were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported thirty-seven in the affirmative, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and decided in the negative—yeas 50, nays 89.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question then recurred on the motion to excuse the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] from voting on the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] to lay the resolution closing debate on the table.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Massachusetts. I move that the House do now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar; and on that question I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 59, nays 69.

So the House refused to go into committee.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the motion to excuse the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] from voting.

Mr. BALL, (at three o'clock and thirty minutes, p. m.) As there appears to be a small number of members present, I think we had better adjourn; and I therefore move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. SEWARD. I call for tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. RUFFIN and ETHERIDGE were appointed.

The House was then divided upon the demand for the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported thirty-six in the affirmative, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 53, nays 80.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. SAGE. I move that there be a call of the House; and upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOWE. I ask for tellers upon the demand for the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CLINGMAN and MACE were appointed.

The House was then divided upon the call for the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported—ayes thirty-eight, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 45, nays 79.

So the House refused to order a call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. BOGACK.) The question recurs upon the motion to excuse the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] from voting upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KNOX. It is now (three o'clock and forty-five minutes, p. m.) about the usual time of adjournment; and as we have had a pretty long session, I move that when this House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I call for tellers upon the demand for the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HILLYER and ROWE were appointed.

The House was then divided upon the call for the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported—ayes thirty-seven, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 46, nays 73.

So the House refused to adjourn until Monday next.

Mr. SAGE, (at four o'clock p. m.) I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BANKS. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I demand tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BAYLY, of Virginia, and WASHBURN, of Maine, were appointed.

The House was divided; and the tellers reported thirty-four in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and decided in the negative—yeas 65, nays 66.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question then recurred upon the motion to excuse the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] from voting—

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move that there be a call of the House; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Upon ordering the yeas and nays I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CHAMBERLAIN and CAMPBELL appointed.

The House was divided; and the tellers reported forty in the affirmative, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I rise to a question of privilege. I understand that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STUART] is recorded as having voted upon the motion which has just been put. I know the fact that the gentleman was not in the House.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. It is now too late to raise the question as to gentlemen voting.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Mr. Speaker, Mr. STUART was not in the Hall while the roll was being called. I know he was not in the House. It is not too late to raise the question.

Mr. SMITH. The vote has been announced, and no correction of the Journal can be made until the Journal is read at the next meeting of the House.

[Cries of "Go on with the voting!"]

Mr. WENTWORTH. Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of too much importance to be allowed to be passed over. I insist upon my point. I will state that Mr. STUART left the House about a couple of hours ago, when he told me that he should not be back before nine or ten o'clock this evening. I know, therefore, of my own personal knowledge, that he was not in the House, and did not vote. I have called the attention of the House to the fact, because there are questions of too much importance pending before the House to allow members to vote by proxy. I ask that the Journal may be corrected, and Mr. STUART's name stricken out.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I raise a question of order in reference to the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois. It is this: The result of the vote having been announced, and the House having passed to the consideration of other business, it is too late to correct the vote of any member. It will be competent for the House, when the Journal is read to-morrow morning, or whenever the Journal is read, to make the correction, but not now.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to say at this point that I shall be under the necessity of entering my protest against members and others crowding around the Clerk's desk while the yeas and nays are being called. It is in violation of the rules of the House, and I ask the Chair in future to enforce the rule.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I ask the Chair to decide whether my proposition is in order.

The SPEAKER, (Mr. BOCK in the chair.) The Chair will decide the gentleman's proposition. When the vote was taken, the names of those voting in the affirmative and negative were called over in the hearing of the House, but no objection was made. The result was then announced, and the House proceeded to other business. The Chair decides that the Journal must be made up from the vote as it now stands, and that it cannot be corrected except upon the meeting of the House again, when it is read for approval. The Chair understands that, to strike the name from the roll, would not change the result; and if it would, he does not think a motion to amend the record, at this stage of proceedings, would be in order.

Mr. HOWE. I must take an appeal from the decision of the Chair. It is certainly in order to have the name of a member who did not vote stricken from the roll.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I do not know whether the mistake was made by accident or design, nor do I care whether it would change the result or not. I simply know the fact that the name of a member has been recorded as having voted when he did not vote; and I think it is a matter of too much importance to be passed over in silence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair decides, for the reasons which he has stated, that the proposition to amend the record, at this stage of the proceedings, is not in order. The Journal must be corrected, if at all, when it is read at the next meeting of the House.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I do not desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair, nor do I understand the gentleman from Illinois as appealing. I desire, however, to state, that if the facts are as I understand them, I am very glad the gentleman from Illinois called the attention of the House to them. I do not know whether the mistake was made by inadvertence or by design, but it is certainly a mistake that should not be made, and allowed to go without notice.

Mr. WENTWORTH. It is certainly very improper.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I certainly agree with the gentleman that it is a mistake that should not be made, and which ought to be corrected.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. If there has been a mistake made in recording a vote, I presume there will be no objection to its being corrected. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to have Mr. STUART's name stricken from the roll.

Mr. HOWE. It seems to me to be a matter of very great importance that the decision of the Chair should be correct in a case like this, and I therefore took an appeal from his decision for the purpose of allowing the House to settle the matter. I say it is a matter of very great importance that we should have a correct decision upon a case like this, when the House has been continuing in session for thirty hours upon a question of—

[Shouts of "Order!" "Order!" all over the Hall, and much confusion.]

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to say a single word. [Renewed cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish simply to say—

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call the gentleman from Alabama to order. I protest against any statement being made from that side of the Hall, when nothing could be allowed to be said upon the other side.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order, having been just decided by the House. The Chair has stated his decision, and he desires to know whether any gentleman appeals?

Mr. HOWE. Certainly; I took an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Will the Chair state what was his decision?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair decides that the yeas and nays having been taken, the votes having been read by the Clerk, without any objection being made, the vote announced, and the House having proceeded to the consideration of other business, it is too late to make any correction in the vote at this time. It will, however, be in order to correct the Journal whenever the House again meets. The Chair is very clear in the belief of the correctness of his decision, and he is especially so in this case, when the correction of the vote would not change the result.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. But when is the next meeting of the House to be? Suppose this session were to continue on until it adjourns sine die?

Mr. HOUSTON. Then there would be no need of any correction being made.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I rise to make a suggestion to the Chair. By a decision of the Chair this very day—

[Cries of "Order!" and confusion.]

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I do not see any difficulty in reference to this matter. If the Journal is wrong, it ought to be corrected.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That motion is not in order, Mr. Speaker. The last vote taken was upon a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair decides that the motion is not in order, for the reason that no business has intervened since the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. HUGHES. An appeal was taken from the decision of the Chair, and the yeas and nays were ordered upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair decides that the motion is not in order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I commenced making a suggestion to the Chair, and, if I am entitled to the floor, I wish to occupy it. I say, the Chair has this very day made a decision directly opposite to the one now made by the present incumbent of the chair. And I desire to say that, according to another decision of the Chair, the same session of the House may continue from day to day until the close of the session of Congress, and when will there be an opportunity to correct the Journal?

Mr. HOUSTON. If the same session continues on in that way, it makes not much difference whether the Journal is corrected or not.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It does make a very great difference.

Mr. BAYLY. I wish to inquire, if the House adjourns now, what will be the first business in order in the morning?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I object to any questions of that sort being asked or answered.

Mr. PRESTON. I call for the regular order of business, whatever it is.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move that the House do now adjourn; and upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. TWEED. I demand tellers upon ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. TWEED and HUGHES were appointed.

The House was divided; and the tellers reported—yeas forty-five, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SEWARD. I desire to say a single word. [Cries of "Order!" and great confusion.]

Mr. CULLOM. If the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CONN] is present, I trust he will again present the "olive branch," for there seems to be considerable excitement in the Hall. [Laughter.]

The question was taken upon the motion to adjourn; and decided in the negative—yeas 69, nays 72.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Pending the call of the roll,

Mr. HOWE stated that he had paired off with Mr. SINGLETON.

Mr. PRINGLE called upon the Chair to enforce the rule against persons crowding round the Clerk's desk when the roll was being called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No members have come to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. PRINGLE. I know it; but the pages have, and informed members of the state of the vote. It is contrary to an express rule of the House, and I ask that the practice may be discontinued.

The question then recurred upon the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. I rise to a privileged question. I am told that, upon a motion that the House adjourn some little time since, when the vote was taken, my vote was recorded in the negative. I wish to state to the House that I was not present when that vote was taken, and if I had been, I should not have voted, having paired off with Mr. ROBBINS, of Pennsylvania. I thought this explanation due to the House.

Mr. BAYLY. I would again suggest that, by unanimous consent, the name of Mr. STUART be stricken from the roll upon the vote to which he alludes.

Mr. HOWE. If that is done by unanimous consent, I will withdraw my appeal from the decision of the Chair. My only object is to have justice done, and it seems to me that it is but just that the correction should be made.

There was no objection; and the correction was accordingly made.

Mr. HOWE. That is perfectly satisfactory to me, and I withdraw my appeal.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Massachusetts. I move a call of the House; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is already pending, and the yeas and nays have been ordered upon it.

Mr. FLAGLER. I move that the House do now adjourn; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order, no business having intervened since the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. WENTWORTH. There has been business, as I understand it. The appeal of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been disposed of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But he withdrew the appeal. No action of the House was taken upon it. The Chair decides that the motion is not in order.

Mr. FLAGLER. I move that when this House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next; and upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. TWEED. I demand tellers upon ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PERKINS, of New York, and BENNETT were appointed.

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported forty in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Is the motion pending to adjourn over till Monday?

The SPEAKER. That is the motion pending.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. That motion is already pending.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. But I ask the Chair if I have not the right to make the motion, as other business has intervened since the motion was made?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion to adjourn over must have precedence.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Why, Mr. Speaker, we must have a quorum to adjourn over, and is it not in order to have a call of the House to obtain a quorum?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the motion to adjourn over is one of a more privileged character, and must take precedence over one for a call of the House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. A motion was made that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next. Upon that motion the yeas and nays were ordered, and other business intervened. I contend that, under these circumstances, I have the right to move that there be a call of the House, and that the motion will have precedence over that to adjourn over.

The SPEAKER. The Chair again states that a motion for a call of the House is already pending, but a motion having been made to adjourn over, he decides that it must take precedence, for the reason that a motion fixing a day for the meeting of the House is one of higher dignity than that for a call of the House. The Chair decides that the question now is upon adjourning over to Monday next.

The question was then taken; and decided in the negative—yeas 67, nays 81.

So the House refused to adjourn over.

Mr. MACE. I move that the House do now adjourn; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. PRESTON. I would inquire of the Chair whether the motion to adjourn did not fail once before, whether the motion to adjourn over did not then fail, and whether the question is not now on the motion that there be a call of the House?

The SPEAKER. The pending question is on the motion that there be a call of the House. The Chair thinks that the motion to adjourn is in order. The House may have refused to adjourn before in order that it might adjourn over.

Mr. PRESTON. I thought that there was no intervening business since the question was taken on the motion to adjourn to a day certain, as well as on the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. There has been no business, but the vote of the House on the proposition to adjourn to a specific day might have a controlling effect on the vote to adjourn.

Mr. PRESTON. The question I put to the Speaker is this: It strikes me that, under the rule, a motion to adjourn over to a day certain, takes precedence of a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. PRESTON. We have already had division on both questions. I, however, yield to the Chair, not desiring to make the point.

The SPEAKER. The two questions were put, even according to the gentleman, but the wrong one first. The Chair thinks that the motion to adjourn is in order, and that it is competent for the House to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were then ordered.

Mr. HENN. With the permission of the House, I would put an interrogatory to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair trusts that the gentleman will be indulged.

There was no objection.

Mr. HENN. If the House now refuses to adjourn, will it be in order immediately afterwards to move that the House adjourn over?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide that question when it arises. In connection, the Chair thinks that it would hardly be in order.

The question was then taken on Mr. MACE's motion; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 63, nays 78.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. GROW. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. FENTON. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken on Mr. GROW's motion; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 48, nays 69.

So the House refused to resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. WALLEY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. THURSTON. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. TWEED. I demand tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CHURCHWELL and SAPP were appointed.

The question was taken; and the yeas and nays were ordered; the tellers having reported—yeas thirty-seven; more than one fifth of a quorum.

The question was then taken on Mr. WALLEY's motion; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 54, nays 79.

So the House (at ten minutes to six o'clock, p. m.) refused to adjourn.

Mr. FENTON. I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. STRAUB. I move to lay that motion on the table; and on that I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the motion to lay upon the table is not in order, for the reason that the motion made by the gentleman from New York is of such a character that it may be repeated every ten minutes if the House should, in the interim, go to any other business, or if any other motion should be made. No advantage can, therefore, be gained to the House or to the mover by the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I would ask if the motion made by the gentleman from New York is in order, when there is already a motion pending to go into committee?

The SPEAKER. There was such a motion pending half an hour ago, but the Chair is informed that it has been voted on, and the motion of the gentleman from New York is in order.

Mr. SKELTON. I move that when this House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next; and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that that motion is out of order at this time. The ground upon which the Chair so decides is this: It is a highly privileged motion, one more so than even a motion to adjourn, and takes precedence of that. The gentleman cannot, therefore, be deprived of his right to have a vote of the House, before the adjournment, upon the proposition to adjourn over. If a motion were made at this moment to adjourn, the proposition to adjourn till Monday next would take precedence of it. The Chair thinks that is a fair and practical view of the subject, and one that certainly will deprive no gentleman of his right to have a vote of the House upon a proposition to adjourn over.

The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FENTON,] that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

Mr. RUFFIN. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. FENTON, and BAILEY of Virginia, were appointed.

The House was then divided on the demand for the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported thirty-six in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GOODRICH. I ask to be excused from voting on this question.

The SPEAKER. Upon what question? On the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FENTON?]

Mr. GOODRICH. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes the gentleman has a right to move that he be excused.

Mr. GOODRICH. I make that motion.

Mr. SKELTON. I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. STRAUB. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. KERR and FENTON were appointed.

The House was then divided on the demand for the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported thirty-four in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CUMMING. As I have voted with the majority here all the time—and I have been voting till I am nearly half-dead—I want to make a suggestion, if I may be allowed to do so.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the gentleman shall be heard?

[Loud cries of "Agreed!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman from New York will proceed.

Mr. CUMMING. I believe that this difficulty, which we are now endeavoring to struggle through, arises from a desire on the part of a very few gentlemen to make some remarks about this Nebraska question; and I really hope that the side to which I belong, the majority here, will consent, provided the other side will agree to postpone the Pacific railroad bill for one week from Tuesday, to let those gentlemen have the intermediate time to say what they please. I really hope the majority will agree to that.

Mr. KERR. We are all willing to do that.

[Cries of "Certainly!"]

Mr. COBB. We will agree to that; now let gentlemen on the other side say if they will agree to it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What is the question before the House? I object to all conversation that is out of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman New York asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the House to make a suggestion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, I hope we shall now proceed with the regular business before the House.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to the proposition.

Many MEMBERS. What proposition?

Mr. LETCHER. Who objects?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do.

The SPEAKER. By the unanimous consent of the House, the gentleman from New York, being therefore in order, made a proposition to the House to postpone the special order, being the Pacific railroad bill, for one week; that the discussion might be continued upon the Nebraska bill.

Mr. DEAN. I hope that those who are opposed to the bill will accept that offer.

[Cries of "Good!"]

It is a fair proposition, and any man who does not accept it is liable to the charge of being a factionist.

[Renewed cries of "Good!" "Good!" and shouts of "Order!"]

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I call for the regular order of business.

The question was then taken on the motion that Mr. GOODRICH be excused from voting on Mr. FENTON's motion; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 35, nays 95.

So Mr. GOODRICH was not excused.

The question recurring on Mr. FENTON's motion that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, it was taken; and decided in the negative—yeas 53, nays 85.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Less than an hour ago the Chair decided that that motion was not in order. The Chair thinks he is justified, under the circumstances, in making that decision, and begs leave to repeat that it is a very highly privileged motion—even more so than the motion to adjourn itself. No member, therefore, can be deprived of his right to have a vote of the House upon such a motion before an adjournment takes place. The Chair feels that this is a fair administration of the rule, and decides the motion out of order until a motion to adjourn is made. Then it is in order and supersedes the motion to adjourn.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move that the House do now adjourn, and on that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I now move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL and VAIL were appointed.

The House was then divided on the demand for the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported thirty-nine in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WESTBROOK. I ask leave to introduce a resolution.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I object. I tried yesterday to make a suggestion myself, but was not permitted to do so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hold the gentleman as strictly to the rule as he can.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Let the resolution be read for information.

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; I object to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has a right to object, and as he objects, the resolution cannot be read.

Mr. HOUSTON. Would it be in order for me to move that the resolution be read?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not, as the resolution is not now before the body. The question now is upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

Mr. ORR. Can that motion be entertained?

Mr. CAMPBELL. A motion was entertained yesterday to adjourn till Monday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the motion can be entertained. It has been the practice of each branch of Congress, when it desires to adjourn over for four whole days, to regard Sunday as not one of the legislative days.

Mr. SEWARD. But from to-day till Tuesday, both days inclusive, is four days.

The SPEAKER. The Chair only states what has been the decision heretofore. It is competent for the House to determine the question for itself.

Mr. KERR. With great deference to the Chair, I hope the House will do so.

The SPEAKER. If it is a constitutional question, each gentleman must, as a matter of course, decide it for himself.

Mr. SEWARD. We can decide it as well on this vote as in any other way.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 50, nays 95.

So the House refused to adjourn over until Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the motion that the House adjourn.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Tellers were demanded, and ordered, upon the yeas and nays; and Messrs. DAVIS of Indiana, and CAMPBELL were appointed.

The House being divided, the tellers reported—ayes thirty-three; noes not counted.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 59, nays 82.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the motion for a call of the House.

Mr. MATTESON. Will it now be in order to make a motion that the House adjourn over?

The SPEAKER. It will not be in order.

Mr. MATTESON. I move, then, that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BENSON. Upon that motion I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CLINGMAN and PARKER were appointed.

The tellers reported ayes forty, noes not counted.

The SPEAKER. That is less than a majority of a quorum, and the motion is lost.

Mr. MATTESON. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decided, and the House acquiesced in the decision, that that motion would be in order.

Mr. WHEELER. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion to adjourn over.

THE OLIVE BRANCH INTENDED.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania. I wish to make a proposition to the House, and I ask gentlemen to hear me.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I object.

Mr. PRATT. I hope the gentleman from Maine will withdraw his objection, until we hear what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WRIGHT] has to say.

Mr. WRIGHT. The gentleman from Maine does not know what I desire to state.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine objected, as he had a right to do.

Mr. WRIGHT. I desire to make a suggestion, which I think will meet the approbation of the House.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maine insist upon his objection?

Mr. WASHBURN. I do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will excuse the Chair for declaring him to be out of order, as the gentleman from Maine rises in his place, and insists upon his objection. Discussion is, therefore, out of order.

The Clerk then proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WASHBURN. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. STRATTON. The objection cannot be withdrawn, as the Clerk had commenced calling the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the House is called for a single moment. The Clerk had commenced calling the roll, and there had been one response. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] now rises in his place, and withdraws his objection. If it is the unanimous pleasure of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be at liberty to proceed with the remarks he desires to make.

Mr. PENNINGTON. I object.

Mr. WRIGHT. I was about to say—

Mr. PENNINGTON. I withdraw my objection for the reason that I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires merely to propound an inquiry to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to know whether there is a single objection, upon the part of any member, to the gentleman from Pennsylvania proceeding with his remarks?

Mr. CULLOM. I object; I do not want any more ex parte statements.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have tendered the olive branch; but they will not take it.

The SPEAKER. No motion, no proposition is in order, except by the unanimous consent of the House, and it is not very orderly to stop calling the roll even in that case.

The question was then taken; and decided in the negative—yeas 57, nays 88.

So the House refused to adjourn over.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. PENNINGTON. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. GOODRICH. I ask for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. KEITT and PARKER were appointed.

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported thirty-nine in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken on the motion to adjourn; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 63, nays 85.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Pending the announcement of the result of the vote,

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to state, Mr. Speaker, that I have not voted in consequence of my having paired off with Mr. LEASGOLD, of Connecticut, until nine o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I want to make an inquiry with respect to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will state his question of order.

Mr. WRIGHT. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that, under the order of business, the Pacific railroad bill will be, on Tuesday, the special order of the day. Now, my inquiry to the Chair is this: if the House shall continue its session over Monday, what effect would the continuance of that session have on the special order?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio will state his question of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I object, Mr. Speaker, to this way of effecting an object.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER, (interrupting.) The gentleman from Ohio rises to a question of order, and the Chair is compelled to sustain that question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, having been requested to do so, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. WRIGHT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I renew my question of order.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Oh, there is no necessity. We will take up and dispose of this question of order when we reach it. It will be time enough next week for that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to observe, that he must so far regard his position as to withhold his decision of questions in advance. The Chair will be prepared to decide them when they arise.

The question recurring on the motion that there be a call of the House—

Mr. CAMPBELL. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GOODRICH. I ask tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL and GOODRICH were appointed.

The House was divided; and the tellers reported thirty-seven in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken on the motion for a call of the House; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 57, nays 90.

Pending the announcement of the result of the vote,

Mr. SMITH, of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have not voted, as I have paired off with Mr. WELLS, of Wisconsin.

Also, pending the announcement of the vote, Mr. CLINGMAN was standing on the platform of the Clerk's desk.

Mr. WHEELER. I rise, Mr. Speaker, to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question.

Mr. WHEELER. I call the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] to order. It is not in order for members to stand at the Clerk's desk while the roll is being called.

The SPEAKER. No; it is not in order for gentlemen to approach the Clerk's desk while the Clerk is calling the roll.

The gentleman from North Carolina resumed his seat.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion to excuse the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] from voting on the motion to lay on the table the resolution closing debate on the Nebraska bill.

Mr. MACE, (at fifteen minutes of nine o'clock, p. m.) I move that the House do now adjourn; and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think, Mr. Speaker, that when the House adjourns, it should adjourn to meet on Tuesday next; and I make the motion that it do so.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I beg to propound an interrogatory to the Chair. I desire to know, Mr. Speaker, whether, if we should now adjourn to to-morrow at twelve o'clock, the business which is now before the House would not be the first business in order to-morrow.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I object.

The SPEAKER. Yes; that would be the business first in order.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, I think, Mr. Speaker, that the House ought now to adjourn over, as it is evident to every gentleman that we can accomplish nothing as we are now going on.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I made objection to propositions coming from the other side; and I do so with that of my colleague. I object to this.

The SPEAKER. Then the question is on the motion to adjourn over till Tuesday next.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GOODRICH. I ask for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL and CLINGMAN were appointed.

The House was divided; and the tellers reported forty-three in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that I am unwell, and that I have consequently paired off with Mr. SMITH, of New York. I think that that is a pretty safe pair.

Mr. COBB. Oh, very good, indeed. [Laughter.]

Mr. BENSON. "Birds of a feather flock together." [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. STUART. Mr. Speaker, I ask whether it is in order or parliamentary to pair off in this way generally?

The SPEAKER. The Chair sees nothing in the rules which recognizes the right of members to pair off.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 47, nays 97.

So the House refused to adjourn, when it adjourns, until Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. ORR.) The question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. MACE,] that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. EDGERTON. I move that the House do now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to adjourn takes precedence, and must first be put.

Mr. SAGE. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion to adjourn.

Mr. SEWARD. I call for tellers upon the yeas and nays.

The question was then taken upon the motion that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 47, nays 97.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. ORR.) The question now recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. MACE,] that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. EDGERTON. I move that the House do now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to adjourn takes precedence, and must be first put and disposed of.

Mr. SAGE. I call for the yeas and nays upon the motion to adjourn.

Mr. STUART, of Georgia. And upon that motion I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. TAYLOR of New York, and TAYLOR of Tennessee, were appointed.

The House was then divided on the demand for the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported forty-three in the affirmative, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 61, nays 85.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs upon the motion to excuse the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] from voting upon the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] to lay upon the table the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON.]

Mr. EDGERTON. I move that the House now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAGE. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MORGAN. And upon that proposition I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CHANDLER and CHURCHWELL were appointed.

The House was then divided, and the tellers reported forty in the affirmative, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Pending this motion,

Mr. CAMPBELL said: It is now getting well on in the evening, and I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOWE. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. I ask for tellers upon the demand for the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. FAULKNER, and PERKINS of New York were appointed.

The House was then divided upon the demand for the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported forty-one in the affirmative, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Pending this motion,

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

Mr. PRINGLE. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. SAGE. And I ask for tellers upon the call for yeas and nays.

Mr. SEWARD. I rise to a question of order. The motion to adjourn over until Tuesday is a motion to adjourn for more than three days, and is not in order, under the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Speaker has decided otherwise, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. SEWARD. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. [Laughter.]

Tellers were then ordered; and Messrs. COX and EASTMAN were appointed.

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported ayes forty-nine, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken upon the motion to adjourn over; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 49, nays 93.

Pending the call of the roll,

Mr. SEYMOUR gave notice that he had paired off with Mr. ZOLLICOFFER.

The question then recurred upon the motion that the House do now adjourn, upon which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

The question was taken; and decided in the negative—yeas 54, nays 80.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question then recurred upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. EDGERTON,] that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar; upon which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

Mr. MEACHAM. I ask to be excused from voting upon that motion.

Mr. SAGE. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

Mr. BROOKS. I demand tellers upon ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. EDGERTON. I rise to a question of order. I ask that no man shall be recognized as demanding tellers unless he rises upon his feet and makes the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will endeavor to enforce the rule.

Mr. WALSH. I rise to a question of order. I demand to know whether any man has the right to get up here and raise questions of order without reducing them to writing?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Any member raising a question of order must reduce it to writing, if required by any member.

Mr. WALSH. Well, sir, I require that the gentleman from Ohio shall reduce his question of order to writing.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PENNINGTON and CLINGMAN appointed.

The House was then divided upon seconding the demand for the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported forty-one in the affirmative, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PECK, (at a quarter past ten o'clock, p. m.) I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOWE. I rise to a question of order. I understand the gentleman from Vermont asks to be excused from voting upon the motion to go into Committee on the Private Calendar. Now, sir, I desire to inquire whether the gentleman has assigned any reason for making his request. He may have a very good reason—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. KERR. I rise to a question of order. It is not a legitimate point of order that the gentleman is making. It is but another pretext for consuming time. I object to it.

Mr. SAGE. I rise to a privileged question. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next; and I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

Mr. PECK. I demand the yeas and nays upon my motion that the House adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered upon Mr. SAGE's motion.

The question was then taken; and decided in the negative—yeas 48, nays 73.

So the House refused to adjourn over till Monday next.

The question then recurred upon Mr. PECK's motion that the House do now adjourn; upon which the yeas and nays had been demanded.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I call for tellers upon ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered and Messrs. CHAMBERLAIN and ASHE were appointed.

Mr. KEITT. I rise to make an inquiry. One of my friends upon the other side suggested to me something about an increase of mileage in consequence of their journeys through the tellers. I will inquire how much increase the rules will allow them? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not the province of the Chair to determine the question of the mileage of members. That is a question which more properly comes under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Mileage.

The House was then divided upon ordering the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported forty-four in the affirmative, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken upon the motion that the House adjourn; and decided in the negative—yeas 53, nays 68.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion that the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MEACHAM] be excused from voting on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EDGERTON] that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. DAVIS, of Rhode Island. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. VAIL. I demand tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MATTESON and ROWE were appointed.

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported ayes forty-four, more than one fifth of a quorum.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken on Mr. WASHBURN's motion; and decided in the negative—yeas 41, nays 81.

So the House refused to order a call.

The SPEAKER. The question again recurs on the motion that the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MEACHAM] be excused. The yeas and nays have already been ordered on the question.

Mr. WALLLEY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that when the House adjourns, it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PECK and FAULKNER were appointed.

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported—ayes forty-two, more than one fifth of a quorum.

Mr. CAMPBELL. At the suggestion of friends of the bill on the other side, I withdraw my motion to adjourn till Monday next for the present.

Mr. RICHARDSON. A number of the opponents of the measure under consideration have signified their desire that they might have until to-morrow to deliberate on their course in this matter.

[Cries of "Give us until Monday!" "No; to-morrow!"]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Until to-morrow.

Mr. CAMPBELL. We shall want some time for sleep.

Mr. RICHARDSON. With the view of affording them the opportunity they wish, I move that the House do now adjourn.

[Cries of "Let us adjourn until Monday!" "To-morrow is time enough!" as well as others, were heard amid the prevailing confusion in the Hall.]

Mr. HUNT. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to listen to me.

The SPEAKER, (Mr. ORR in the Chair.) The gentleman will suspend until order be restored in the Hall.

After members had, to some extent, resumed their seats,

The SPEAKER said: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. HUNT. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to say a word?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly, sir.

[Cries of "That's right!" "Hear him!"]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield to the gentleman with great pleasure.

Mr. HUNT. The friends of union and constitutional liberty are anxious to bring this matter to an amicable conclusion. As one of them, it is the strongest wish of my heart. If you will adjourn, gentlemen, until Monday, you will give us full time for conferring with our friends.

I belong to no clique. I am associated with no caucus. I have no factious feeling in my bosom. I speak as a patriot for the good of my country. If you will join me in the same spirit of liberty, in the same feeling of friendship, I will unite with you to bring about an end which I believe will promote the harmony and welfare of the whole country. I ask you, gentlemen, to accede to that proposition.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would myself most gladly accede to the proposition of the gentleman from Louisiana; but my friends on this side of the House have advised me to the course which I have already indicated. When assembled here to-morrow, I trust that we can discuss and arrange preliminaries which will lead to the result—as desirable to me as it is to the gentleman from Louisiana. I sincerely trust that we may be able to do it.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I wish to say a single word of reply to the gentleman from Louisiana.

[Cries of "Go on!" "Hear him!"]

Mr. STEPHENS. While the gentleman from Louisiana may occupy the position he states, yet he cannot speak for those who have been obstructing the business of the House.

Mr. HUNT. One word as to that. Several gentlemen connected with those who have been acting here to-day as opponents of the bill have requested me to consider what plan I could devise to bring this matter to an amicable adjustment. It is for that reason that I have some hope of success. But I do think that it would be reasonable in the gentleman to accede to what I have proposed.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. STEPHENS. I have but one other remark; that is, the gentleman cannot speak for them, and I state it with all due respect; that while he wishes harmony, and while he does not desire unnecessarily to obstruct legislation, yet he must see that there is a determination among a large part of those who act with him—without any harmony of feeling on that point, I have no doubt, but still acting with him—who continuously intend to throw obstructions in the way of the passage of the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I would ask the gentleman and the House to allow me to say a word?

[Cries of "Hear him!"]

Mr. CULLOM. I have been acting, Mr. Speaker, firmly with those who have resisted what I, for one, have regarded as an attempt in some degree to stifle debate on this very important question. I have been actuated by no factious feeling. I have, from the first, been determined to resort to nothing disorganizing to defeat the passage of this bill, if it be the deliberate intention of a majority of the House that it shall pass this ordeal; but, sir, I have thought that we have not had that full discussion yet which the importance of the question deserves. When that discussion shall have been exhausted, I am not one of those who will stand in the way and impede the legitimate legislation of the country.

How far I may yield my opposition to the bill I am not prepared to say; but I will say to the gentleman from Georgia, and I will say to this House, and to the country, that I have been prompted in all that I have done, and I will be prompted in all that I may do, by a desire to perfect this measure, so that it may redound to the greatest possible good of the country. If it be consummated, then my opposition shall cease.

Mr. STEPHENS. One word. The gentleman says that he wants full discussion. I will not moot the question with that gentleman how long he would want the bill discussed; perhaps two months, or six months. The House, Mr. Speaker, must be the judge of that question. It has been so for ten years. We have had questions of peace, and questions of war taken after less debate than has already been permitted on this measure. A majority of the body think that enough of the public time has been taken up in speeches. Then the gentleman does not wish to offer factious opposition to the bill when a majority have thus expressed themselves! I think that the will of the majority should be carried out in closing debate on the subject. So they have determined. The pending question before the House is, whether debate shall be closed. We were willing to have extended the time for discussion to another week, contrary to the judgment of the House. But what I say is, that there are men here with whom the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CULLOM] is acting, who will not agree to a week, who will not agree to a month, who will not agree to a year. Yes, Mr. Speaker, there are men acting with that gentleman who declare that their object is faction. And we have heard the proclamation coming from a neighboring city which, I think, is calculated to startle and alarm the people of this country and the members of this House—at least, to awaken suspicion as to what is their legitimate object.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the gentleman does not consider me chargeable with whatever of faction there may be by those who by chance happen to act with me.

Mr. STEPHENS. Not at all. I am only telling the gentleman that while he occupies the position which he has spoken of, the majority of the House must look to what they may ultimately expect from this other outside faction. We must look facts sternly in the face; and we do know that there is a class of gentlemen—

Mr. GIDDINGS. I call the gentleman from Georgia to order. If there be discussion allowed, I must have a hand in it.

Mr. HUNT. One word, Mr. Speaker.

[Cries of "Order!" "There is no debatable question!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia is called to order. The Chair sustains the point of order raised by the gentleman from Ohio. He has indulged this discussion, in the hope that it might lead to some profitable result. He indulged gentlemen in suggestions until the question of order has been made. It is the duty of the Chair now to enforce order. Debate is out of order, because there is no debatable proposition before the House. The question pending is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I simply desire, Mr. Speaker, as this whole matter is out of order, with the consent of the House, to inquire of the gentleman from Georgia—

Mr. SEWARD. I call the gentleman to order.

[Cries of "Order!" from all parts of the Hall.]

Mr. CAMPBELL, amidst much confusion, said: I shall resist this measure to the bitter end. I say so, never minding the gentleman who calls me to order.

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. SEWARD. There are other places instead of this where personal difficulties may be settled.

[Members here crowded around Mr. CAMPBELL. Many got on the tops of the desks.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. I tell gentlemen that I shall resist this measure with all the power that I can, to the bitter end.

The SPEAKER. The House will come to order. The Sergeant-at-Arms will preserve order. [Members still continued crowding around Mr. CAMPBELL.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls on all lovers of order to preserve order in the Hall.

The Sergeant-at-Arms, with the mace of the House, proceeded to compel members to resume their seats and preserve order.

The SPEAKER. Those who are disorderly are acting in contempt of the House.

[Cries of "Down from the desks!"]

Order was now partially restored.

Mr. DEAN. I call for the question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SEWARD. I move that when the House adjourns, it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. HUNT. By leave of the House, I wish to say a word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend for a moment.

Mr. SEWARD. I want to say a word.

The SPEAKER. Objection has been made on all sides to further debate. There is no debatable question before the House. The Chair must enforce the rule.

Mr. SEWARD. I do not propose to make a speech.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is out of order, and cannot be heard. If the gentleman desires to submit a point of order, the Chair will entertain it.

Mr. SEWARD. I withdraw the motion for adjournment over.

Mr. PARKER. I renew it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now state the question. It has been moved by the gentleman from Illinois that the House do now adjourn. The gentleman from Indiana moves that when the House adjourns, it be to meet on Monday next. The question will be first taken on the motion for adjournment over.

[Cries of "Withdraw the motion to adjourn over!"]

Mr. PARKER. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. MACE. I rise to a question of order. My point is, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] has made a fair proposition to the House, and I think that we ought to agree to it.

The SPEAKER. That is hardly a question of order.

[Cries of "It is the right question, though!"]

Mr. HUNT. Friends and gentlemen—

Mr. SPEAKER. The Chair must admonish the gentleman from Louisiana, in all kindness, that debate has been objected to. The Chair will propound the interrogatory to the House whether there is unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed?

[Cries of "Consent!"]

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I was interrupted by objection. Before I had finished what I had to say, I was called to order. I object to the gentleman's going on, unless the same privilege be allowed me.

[Cries of "Question!"]

Mr. HUNT. I appeal to the courtesy of the gentleman from Georgia to allow me to reply to a part of the statement which has been made.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I object, unless all can be heard.

The SPEAKER. No further debate can be allowed.

Mr. SEWARD. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Mr. SEWARD. I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

The question was then taken on the motion to adjourn; and the Chair decided that it was carried in the affirmative. [Applause.]

Thereupon the House adjourned (at twenty-seven minutes to twelve o'clock, p. m.) until to-morrow at twelve, m.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 12, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion by Mr. CHASE, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. WELLER presented the petition of George W. Torrence, a soldier in the late war with Mexico, praying compensation for injuries received in the discharge of his duty, and for extra services rendered at the National Bridge, in Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CHASE presented a petition signed by a large number of citizens of New York, against the repeal of the Missouri compromise; which was ordered to lie on the table.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. ALLEN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn. There is no quorum present.

Mr. WELLER. Let us have the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 10, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Bright, Chase, Clay, James, Johnson, Pearce, Walker, and Wright—10.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Clayton, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Fitzpatrick, Hunter, Mallory, Morton, Pettit, Pratt, Rusk, Siddle, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, and Weller—15.

The PRESIDENT. There is no quorum voting.

Mr. WALKER. There is no quorum voting, and we might as well adjourn. I therefore move that we do now adjourn.

Mr. PRATT. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion. It is but a few minutes past twelve o'clock; and we know the exciting position of the other House, and that Senators have gone there to look on. They will be here in a few moments, and we shall be able to proceed with business. I hope the Senate will not adjourn.

One fifth of the Senators present not voting for taking the question by yeas and nays, they were not ordered.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned to Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 13, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Clerk proceeded to read yesterday's Journal.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Journal is very uninteresting. Its parts are all the same, and I move that its further reading be dispensed with.

Mr. JONES, of New York. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the Journal.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the Journal during half an hour.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I renew my motion that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with. It is very uninteresting; and certainly no gentleman can want it read. I would appeal to the gentleman from New York [Mr. JONES] to withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state that if the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with, it would still be in order to amend any portion of it.

Mr. COBB. I am of the opinion that the Journal had better be read.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I would appeal to the gentleman to withdraw his objection.

[Cries of "No!" "Object!" "Read the Journal!"]

The Journal of yesterday was then read through.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. MAURICE. I rise, Mr. Speaker, to a privileged question. I desire that the Journal may be corrected in that stage in which it refers to those proceedings of the House night before last, when I asked to be excused from voting on the motion that there be a call of the House. The Journal correctly describes two portions of those proceedings, but omits what I submit is an essential feature of the matter.

With the permission of the House, I will recall the circumstances. A motion was made that there be a call of the House. I asked to be excused from voting on that motion. The House ordered the yeas and nays on my motion. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] suggested that it was not in order to permit me to ask to be excused from voting. The Chair sustained the point of order raised by that gentleman. An appeal was taken from that decision. The Speaker entertained the appeal. A motion was then made that the appeal be laid upon the table. I asked to be excused from voting on that motion. The Speaker decided that it was not in order for me to ask to be excused. Thereupon I proposed to take an appeal from his decision, which he ruled out of order. I then voted on a motion of the gentleman from North Carolina to lay the appeal on the table. I voted with the majority. I did so in order that I might move to reconsider. I did move to reconsider, and the Chair ruled that motion out of order. All I desire is, that the Journal should set forth these facts. It does set forth that I asked to be excused from voting, and that I moved to reconsider; but it does not set forth the intermediate appeal from the decision of the Chair. I ask that the Journal may be corrected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read his minutes of that portion of the proceedings of the House.

The Clerk read his minutes, as follows:

"Pending the question, on motion by Mr. CLINGMAN to lay the appeal on the table, Mr. MAURICE asked to be excused from voting thereon. The Speaker decided that the motion was not in order, on the ground that the same question was involved in the decision already pending. From this latter decision Mr. MAURICE proposed to appeal, which the Speaker refused to entertain, on the ground that two appeals could not be pending at one time."

Mr. MAURICE. That would be satisfactory to me, but the Clerk tells me that he has no power to enter it on the Journal without the consent of the House.

The SPEAKER. Motions made, and on which there has been no action of the House, do not go upon the Journal. For that reason the Clerk did not enter what occurred at the time to which the gentleman has referred. In this connection, the gentleman from New York regards it as important that the minutes of the Clerk should be entered upon the Journal; and the Chair is of the opinion that it would not be inappropriate to enter them on it. It is a simple question. It is for the House to say whether or not they shall be entered upon the Journal.

[Cries of "Consent!" "Consent!"]

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will order the minutes of the Clerk to be entered upon the Journal.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. The question will then be put to the House.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I have not looked at the report in the Globe. It is true that that record is not provided for by the Constitution, but it is by the order of the House. It is as efficient and reliable for what takes place here, and as of good authority as the Journal, save that it does not pass under the inspection of the House. I suppose that the reporters for that paper have correctly reported the proceedings, and I have no doubt that their report will be entirely satisfactory to the gentleman from New York, who is interested in this matter. If it be the same to him it would be better for the House to preserve the proper mode of keeping the Journal. Yet, if the gentleman desires it, I have no objection to the Clerk's minutes being entered on the Journal in reference to the matter indicated. For all practical purposes the Globe will be as of good authority to him as the Journal.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the House ordered that the Journal should be amended as indicated.

The SPEAKER. The pending question before the House is on the motion of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] that he be excused from voting upon the motion made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] to lay the resolution closing debate upon the table.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

So Mr. WASHBURN was excused.

The question recurred upon the motion to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Before that question is taken, I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. BRIDGES. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

[Cries of "Oh, no!" and "Withdraw that!"]

Mr. BRIDGES. I cannot withdraw it. Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. VAIL and WHEELER were appointed.

The House was then divided on the demand for the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported thirty-eight in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MATTESON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. NORTON. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I rise to a privileged question. The House is evidently much fatigued, and I therefore move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next; and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] moves that there be a call of the House. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MATTESON] moves that the House adjourn; and upon that motion demands the yeas and nays. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] moves that when this House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next; and upon that motion demands the yeas and nays. The latter motion will be put first.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HIBBARD demanded tellers upon the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. It is too late to demand tellers.

The question was then taken upon Mr. CAMPBELL's motion; and there were—yeas 52, nays 139.

So the House refused to adjourn over.

Mr. HUNT. With the indulgence of the House, I will make a personal explanation. A friend has handed me the Union this morning. I read a paragraph headed "Adjournment of the House."

"At twelve o'clock last night the session of the House of Representatives was brought to a sudden and unexpected close. The factious course of a few of the prominent men in the minority had finally created such indignation among the reasonable men of their own side, and among the majority of the House, that Mr. HUNT, of Louisiana, one of the opponents of the bill, rose in his place, and, seconded by Mr. CULLOM, of Tennessee, and others of his friends, proposed to the majority that inasmuch as he and those for whom he spoke did not desire to be factious, or to embarrass the majority, a satisfactory arrangement would be made if an adjournment could be had till to day. Colonel RICHARDSON, on the part of the friends of the bill, accepted the proposition, and, on his motion, the House adjourned till twelve o'clock to-day."

This article is a total misrepresentation of my feelings and conduct. I find in this morning's Globe a report, substantially correct, of what I did say, which I now wish to read to the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] permit me to make a remark? I state that I know nothing of the article in the Union.

Mr. HUNT. I would be ashamed to suppose that the gentleman would be guilty of such a thing.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Before the gentleman from Louisiana submitted any remarks, I myself made the motion to adjourn.

Mr. HUNT. Certainly. That stamps the falsehood from the right quarter. I desire, with the indulgence of the House, to read what I did say, that the country may not be led into an error in regard to it. I desire to say that I stigmatized no opponents of the bill as factious. I expressed no indignation either directly or indirectly, expressly or by implication, against their course. The language I used is substantially reported in the Globe of this morning; and I will now read it to the House:

"The friends of union and constitutional liberty are anxious to bring this matter to an amicable conclusion. As one of them, it is the strongest wish of my heart. If you will adjourn, gentlemen, until Monday,"

—this paper (the Union) says "till this morning!"

"you will give us full time for conferring with our friends. I belong to no clique. I am associated with no caucus. I have no factious feeling in my bosom. I speak as a patriot for the good of my country. If you will join me in the same spirit of liberty, in the same feeling of friendship, I will unite with you to bring about an end which I believe will promote the harmony and welfare of the whole country. I ask you, gentlemen, to accede to that proposition."

The House heard me with indulgence; and I thank them for their kindness in hearing me now. The House adjourned, unhappily, I think, till this morning. I find a fair disposition towards an amicable conclusion of the difficulty in those gentlemen with whom I have had an opportunity of conversing this morning; but the time allowed to us has not been sufficient for ascertaining the opinions of gentlemen, or for quieting their feelings. I move, therefore, after this indulgence—if the House allow me to do so—that this House now adjourn till Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will remind the gentleman from Louisiana, that the result of the last vote of the House has not been announced; and, besides that, there is at present pending a motion to adjourn.

Mr. HUNT. Perhaps the gentleman from New York [Mr. MATTESON] will withdraw that motion.

Mr. CHURCHWELL, (interrupting.) Mr. Speaker—

[Cries of "Order!" and "Question!"]

Mr. CLINGMAN. Let us have the regular order of business.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I only desire to ask the gentleman from Louisiana one single question.

Mr. ORR. I object.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I hope the gentleman from South Carolina will withdraw his objection. I only want to propound a single question to the gentleman from Louisiana. I do not want to get into a discussion.

Mr. ORR. The question would be sure to give rise to debate; and I must insist on my objection.

Mr. CHURCHWELL, (persisting.) I have only a single question to ask, and I hope the gentleman from South Carolina will permit me to do so.

The SPEAKER. Objection has not been withdrawn; and the gentleman from Tennessee cannot proceed on order.

The SPEAKER then announced the result of the vote taken on the motion of Mr. CAMPBELL to adjourn till Tuesday, to be decided in the negative—yeas 52, nays 139.

So the House refused to adjourn over till Tuesday next.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. MATTESON, that the House do now adjourn; upon which the yeas and nays had been demanded.

Several MEMBERS. Tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call for the yeas and nays.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. CAMPBELL. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ORR. I demand tellers on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. WALSH. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ORR. The yeas and nays have been just refused.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, what is the question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the question when the House comes to order.

The motion is that the House do now adjourn. The yeas and nays were demanded, and refused by the House. The question now is, shall there be tellers upon the motion that the House do now adjourn?

Tellers were then ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL and CLINGMAN were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers at first announced 89 in the affirmative and 90 in the negative. Several members afterwards passed between the tellers, and they were reported, both in the affirmative and negative, some by Mr. CAMPBELL and some by Mr. CLINGMAN.

Here several members called upon the tellers for a report; but the tellers, appearing not to agree upon the number, made no joint report.

Mr. TWEED. As there appears to be a disagreement, I call for a recount.

Mr. CAMPBELL, (one of the tellers) said: There is no difficulty.

Mr. ORR. I ask if the tellers can say how many there are in the affirmative, and how many in the negative? If they cannot, I ask for a recount.

Mr. CLINGMAN, (one of the tellers.) I cannot tell how many there are, because I have become confused in footing up the yeas and noes.

Mr. ORR. It is the duty of the tellers to report the number. I ask them to make the report; and if they cannot, I ask for a recount.

Several members here appearing to call upon the Clerk to know the number of votes which had been reported by the tellers, as they progressed in the count—

The SPEAKER said: The House will agree with the Chair in the opinion that the tellers can throw no part of the responsibility of deciding the number of votes upon a third person, (meaning the Clerk.) The tellers will report the number, if they can; and the Chair will act upon that report. Upon the tellers alone rests the responsibility of reporting the number of votes, upon which the Chair will act.

Members now crowded around the tellers, and considerable confusion ensued.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I ask that the Chair will require members to take their seats.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does require them to take their seats.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I rise to a privileged motion. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that motion to be out of order.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I demand that the tellers shall report.

Mr. FAULKNER. The tellers cannot report.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. Then I demand a recount.

Mr. CLINGMAN. There have been so many votes withdrawn that I have lost the count, and I cannot tell how the vote stands.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do know that the vote stands—yeas 98, noes 92.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I did not think exactly in the same way; I do not, however, know; and if I were to report, it would be mere guess-work.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Does the Chair decide that it is not in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did so decide.

Mr. OLDS. Is it not in order to move that there be a recount?

The SPEAKER. The Chair, in his opinion, has the right to order a recount, and he makes that order.

Mr. BANKS. Is the House dividing at this time?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BANKS. I desire to make a single suggestion, if the House will allow me.

The SPEAKER. It can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. ORR. I objected to my friend from Tennessee making remarks; I must now object to my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. BANKS. I wish merely to make a single suggestion.

Mr. ORR. I object to the gentleman, as I did to the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. All debate is out of order.

Mr. HAVEN. I will try and relieve the House from its present embarrassment. I would ask that my friend from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] will withdraw his motion that the House do now adjourn, in order that I may submit the motion, that when the House adjourns, it be to meet on Monday next; and on that motion demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Is it competent, to have a recount?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated that when the House came to order there would be a recount.

Mr. BANKS. I would appeal to my friend from South Carolina to withdraw his objection, so that I may make a single suggestion.

Mr. WALSH. I object to the gentleman's proceeding.

The question was again put on the motion to adjourn, and Mr. CAMPBELL, one of the tellers, reported—yeas eighty.

Mr. HENN. I rise to a question of order. After the affirmative vote is announced by the tellers, and the negative vote is called for, can further affirmative votes be received? I hold that they cannot.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will consult the record, he will find that the uniform practice has been to receive votes on either side until the result was announced by the Chair.

Mr. HENN. I know that that has been the practice; but is it in accordance with the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the gentleman's point of order.

The tellers then reported ninety-five in the negative.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question recurred on the motion that there be a call of the House, on which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

Mr. SAGE. I move that I be excused from voting on that question.

Mr. DICKINSON. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has uniformly, during the last day or two, decided that motion to be out of order, and does so now.

Mr. BANKS. I desire to say a single word to the House, with its permission, in reference to the matter before it.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I hope the gentleman will be heard.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 55, nays 124.

So the House refused to order a call.

Mr. HAVEN. Is it in order to move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. HAVEN. Then I make that motion; and I hope the House will take this opportunity to go to work again.

Mr. PECK. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion of my colleague.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is it in order to have the 29th rule read? I should like to have it read.

The SPEAKER. There is no point of order before the House; and it can only be read by unanimous consent.

Mr. HIBBARD. I object.

The question was then taken on Mr. HAVEN's motion; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 73, nays 99.

Mr. HAVEN. As the House will not work, I move that we adjourn; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

[Loud cries of "Withdraw that motion!"]

Mr. HAVEN. I withdraw it.

Mr. MORGAN. I renew it.

[Loud and continued cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. MORGAN. Well, I withdraw it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is very apparent, Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. ORR.) The Chair must remind the gentleman that debate is not in order.

Mr. BENNETT. I object to any debate.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am not going to debate; I only desire to make a proposition.

Mr. SAGE. If the gentleman makes any remarks, we shall claim the privilege to reply.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has admonished the gentleman from Illinois that debate is not in order, and will enforce the rule.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am only going to submit a proposition.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Well, state what it is.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If objection is made to it, of course—

Mr. PRATT. Go on; there will be no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Have I permission to make a proposition?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has the floor, and has a right to make a motion.

Mr. FLAGLER. If permission is given to the gentleman from Illinois, of course others must be heard in reply to him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already stated that debate is not in order, and that he will enforce the rules.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will make a motion, and the gentleman can reply to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am not going to debate. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WALSH. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. KEITT demanded tellers on the yeas and nays, but they were refused—only seven gentlemen rising in the affirmative.

The question was then taken on Mr. RICHARDSON's motion; and it was agreed to.

So the House adjourned till Monday next, at twelve o'clock, m.

HALL OF REPRESENTATIVES, May 13, 1854.

In your report of the proceedings, near the close of last night's session, you represent me as objecting to Mr. HUNT's speaking after the motion to adjourn had been made.

I understood Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, as attempting to speak, and Mr. HUNT as making an appeal to the House to hear Mr. STEPHENS.

My objection was intended to operate against Mr. STEPHENS, and not against Mr. HUNT proceeding in his remarks. I may not have heard correctly the remarks of Mr. HUNT, and give merely my own understanding of them.

Very respectfully,
To the Reporter of the Globe.

J. R. GIDDINGS.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, May 15, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, copies of all papers and vouchers on file in his Department, in relation to the claim of Daniel Nippes; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. WADE presented a petition signed by electors of the township of Lynn, Ohio, protesting against the passage of the Nebraska bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SUMNER presented resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts, in favor of granting to the officers, soldiers, and sailors who served in the war of 1812 the same quantity of bounty land as was granted to those who served in the Mexican war, and to extend the pension system established for those who served in the revolutionary war to the officers, soldiers, and sailors of the war of 1812, and to their widows; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a memorial of citizens of Bush and Shelby counties, Indiana, praying that Congress make no appropriation for the payment of the Amistad claims; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts, in favor of an appropriation of $25,000 for the purpose of preventing the destruction of Cape Cod harbor; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SUMNER. I beg leave to offer certain resolves passed by the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts, concerning the Massachusetts claim. I believe these resolves should be referred to the Committee on Finance. The claim has been recognized by Congress heretofore; and the question of its payment now, I believe, is before the Committee on Finance. I move that these resolves be referred to that committee, and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PEARCE presented the petition of Esther Coulter, praying compensation for the services of her father, Alexander McKaskey, as a quartermaster in the Revolutionary Army; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Also, the memorial of E. Mickle & Co., praying the return of duties on goods destroyed by fire at San Francisco, in June, 1850, and May, 1851; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WALKER presented the proceedings of a meeting of citizens of Philadelphia, in favor of the passage of the homestead bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BENJAMIN presented the petition of John H. Hand, praying to be allowed a pension on account of disease contracted in the service of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BRIGHT presented a petition of citizens of Indiana, praying the establishment of a post-route from Lock's Station to Brighton and Monroquionq, Indiana; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. SHIELDS presented a memorial of the Mayor, Aldermen, and the City Council of Galena, Illinois, praying the establishment of a marine hospital at that place; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, additional documents in support of the claim of Harriet de la Palm Baker, for indemnification for losses sustained by her father, Frederick H. Weisenfels, in the revolutionary war; which were referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. COOPER presented three memorials of citizens of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the passage of the Nebraska bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TOUCEY presented a petition of inhabitants of Southington, Connecticut, praying a reduction in the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the memorial of Charles D. Arfwedson, praying compensation for his services as chargé d'affaires, ad interim, at Stockholm, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred documents in support of the claim of Kennedy & Darling to indemnity for property destroyed by the Seminole Indians in Florida, in 1849, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of William Murphy, praying compensation for losses sustained at Vera Cruz, during the Mexican war, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that the petitioner have leave to withdraw his petition and papers; which was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. SUMNER, it was Ordered, That Hall J. Kelly have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. BENJAMIN gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill regulating the time of holding the sessions of the district and circuit courts of the United States in the State of Louisiana.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HUNTER asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill to amend the act approved August 31, 1852, entitled "An act making further provision for the satisfaction of Virginia land warrants;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. SLIDELL asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill to authorize T. H. McManus to enter, by preëmp-tion, certain lands in the Greensburg land district, Louisiana; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

PATENT OFFICE REPORT.

The PRESIDENT. There is on the table a resolution reported from the Committee on Printing to print thirty-seven thousand five hundred additional copies of the agricultural part of the Patent Office report.

Mr. STUART. I believe there is a motion to reconsider the vote by which that resolution was adopted, and I should like to have it acted on at this time. I thought we were tolerably successful in getting that resolution disposed of the other day, and I should like to have it definitely settled.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BRODHEAD,] now absent, moved the reconsideration.

Mr. STUART. That is so; but I do not think it constitutes any reason why the Senate should not act upon it. He did not signify a desire to say anything on the subject at all.

Mr. WELLER. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania does propose to make some remarks on this subject, and, as a matter of courtesy to him, I think it ought to be laid over for a reasonable time at least, to give that Senator an opportunity to be heard.

The PRESIDENT. That is a question for the Senate to decide.

Mr. WELLER. I ask that the further consideration of the resolution be postponed.

Mr. STUART. As I remarked before, the Senator from Pennsylvania did not signify any disposition to debate the resolution. I have very good reasons for believing that he does not intend to debate it at all. Hence, unless the Senator from California knows that he desires to discuss it, I shall feel myself called upon to press its consideration now, for the reason which I suggested the other day.

The delay which has occurred in respect to these documents is not only inconvenient to the Senate, but it is very prejudicial to the interests of the country, and especially so to the Post Office Department, because, if these documents are to be distributed to members after they return home, it makes an additional amount of transportation necessary. I differ from what was said by some gentleman the other day in respect to their importance. I regard them as very important documents. I think they should be published at an early day. A very considerable length of time has elapsed since this document was presented to the Senate, and this resolution was laid on the table. It was a long time after that before it was called up for action. It was finally adopted, and then a motion to reconsider was made. If the Senator from Pennsylvania, or any other Senator, desires to discuss the question of printing, there certainly should be ample time for its consideration. I say, again, that if the Senator from California, or any other Senator, knows definitely that the Senator from Pennsylvania desires to discuss the question, I shall consent to let the matter lie over until his return. But my understanding is different. I hope, therefore, the Senate will dispose of the resolution now.

Mr. BROWN. At what time will the Senator from Pennsylvania be present?

Mr. STUART. I do not know.

Mr. BRIGHT. It would be hardly courteous to the Senator from Pennsylvania to act upon this motion in his absence. We are all, in our action, governed by some reason; and I take it for granted that the Senator from Pennsylvania had a reason for making the motion. I should be glad to have the benefit of his reasons before I am called upon to act upon the resolution. It is unusual to press a subject of this kind in the absence of the Senator making the motion.

Mr. BROWN. Let it lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. WELLER. I have no information to satisfy me that it is the intention of the Senator from Pennsylvania to discuss the motion, although I had some conversation with him on the subject. There is some matter connected with it, I do not now precisely recollect what, which induced him to make the motion; and I take it for granted that the same cause still operates upon his mind; and, as a matter of justice as well as courtesy, the consideration of the motion ought to be postponed until his return. The fair and legitimate deduction is, that he had a sufficient reason to justify him in making the motion, and, therefore, I desire to give him the opportunity of being heard upon the question before it is passed upon. I move, therefore, its postponement until to-morrow.

Mr. STUART. I shall not undertake to prevent that at all. I shall consent to its going over, with the suggestion, however, that as soon as the Senator from Pennsylvania is here, I shall ask the Senate to consider the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the consideration of the motion will be postponed until to-morrow.

There was no objection.

PRINTING OF MAP.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred some days since, on the motion of the Senator from California, [Mr. GWIN], "A diagram of the United States of America, Mexico, West India Islands, and the Isthmus of Dairen, showing Mr. GWIN's route of the Pacific railroad and its branches, in connection with the various systems existing and unfinished; of railroads from the Mississippi valley to the Atlantic and the Gulf coasts, by W. T. Steiger, of the General Land Office," to submit a motion for its printing. It is a map which has been made out in the General Land Office, and, as I am informed officially, at least by the Senator from California, some three months labor have been expended upon it. It shows the whole country between the two oceans, the Atlantic and the Pacific; and it presents a much better view of it than any map which we now have. The Committee on Printing authorize me to move that two thousand copies of it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

CASTNER HANWAY.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I am requested to present a memorial, which is somewhat novel in its character. I, however, present it very willingly. It is a memorial from Castner Hanway, who was indicted in the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, at the November term of 1851, for treason, and who was acquitted. He alleges that he was put to a very large expense in procuring the witnesses necessary for his vindication from the charge; that he was a considerable time in prison by which his health was seriously impaired so far that he has never recovered it since, and that he has not been able to pay his counsel, nor defray the other expenses attendant upon his trial. He asks that a law may be passed embracing his case, authorizing the payment at least of the witness fees, which amount to something over $3,000.

I will state, Mr. President, that heretofore, in charges of that kind, at least in the trial which excited much interest in this country, that of Aaron Burr, an order was made by the court to pay the witnesses from day to day; and it was supposed to be a rule that the court had power to order the payment of witnesses on the part of the defense. Chief Justice Marshall, in the case to which I have referred, made such an order, and it was complied with by the marshal; but the judges who tried Hanway, decided that they had no such power, and he was compelled to pay his own witnesses. I shall be very glad if the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom this may be referred, will examine the question, and if they think it in conformity with policy, justice, and propriety, that they will report a bill which reaches this case. There are accompanying the memorial letters stating the high character which this gentleman always bore, his peaceable demeanor, and his worth as a citizen. I ask that the petition and papers may be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

They were so referred.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM ABROAD.

The Senate proceeded to consider the motion of Mr. CASS, to refer to the Committee on Foreign Relations, the report made at the last session of Congress from that committee by Mr. Underwood, late a Senator from Kentucky, on the subject of the religious rights of American citizens residing or traveling abroad.

Mr. CASS addressed the Senate on this resolution at some length. [His speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. BADGER. I desire to ask the Senator from Michigan, in connection with the subject on which he has spoken, whether he has seen a statement in some Roman Catholic religious newspaper, called, I think, the "Shepherd of the Valley," published at St. Louis, under the direction and authority of the Bishop of that Roman Catholic diocese, to the effect, that so soon as the Roman Catholics obtain the numerical supremacy in any State, there will be an end therein of all religious toleration. Has he seen any such statement?

Mr. CASS. I think I have seen that sentiment through the papers, quoted, I believe, from that very paper. I have not seen the paper itself, but I have seen the statement quoted.

Mr. BADGER. Assuming that to be so, I wish to suggest to my friend from Michigan, whether it would not be wise, in connection with his proposition in regard to foreign Governments, to consider the propriety of some measures at home, in anticipation of such a result, not at all unlikely, I fear, for securing religious liberty at home.

Mr. CASS. I will merely observe, in respect to that, that I take it this Government has nothing to do with religious liberty at home. That is a question for the States.

Mr. BADGER. Then I wish to suggest, supposing such an event to happen, if, in the interior organization of this Government, there should be a State or States of the Union prohibiting all religious toleration, what a position we should occupy with foreign Governments in asking from them what we have not the power to secure to their citizens at home.

Mr. CASS. I trust the honorable Senator is supposing an impossible case in this country.

Mr. CLAYTON. I hope that the report, and the resolutions upon which the honorable Senator from Michigan has so ably addressed the Senate, will now be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. If no other gentleman proposes to address the Senate, I desire that the report may now go to the committee, so that the committee may act upon the subject. At some future period, I purpose to address the Senate upon it; and I would do it now, but for the fact that I think it more respectful to the committee, of which I am a member, to consult them in relation to the principles which are to be discussed, before I undertake to speak upon them. I hope that the resolutions and report will now be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. NORRIS in the chair). The question now before the Senate is upon the motion to refer the report and resolutions to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

INDIGENT INSANE.

Mr. CLAYTON. I move that the bill making a grant of land to the several States of the Union for the benefit of indigent insane persons, which was the subject of the President's veto, be printed for the use of the Senate. The bill as introduced has been printed, but I find that the bill as it passed the Senate and the House has never been printed, and it is, therefore, with great difficulty that we can ascertain what its precise provisions are. I hope, by unanimous consent, an order may be made for the printing of that bill.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. BADGER. I think after the discussion we have heard this morning on a very important and interesting subject, that at this period of the day it would not be well to resume unexpectedly the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. I therefore move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion. It is only two o'clock. We can go on, and dispose of some of the amendments of the Committee on Indian Affairs. I think we can do that.

Mr. BADGER. The very first amendment is one which will occupy us during the rest of the day.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator will find that he is mistaken. That will probably be laid aside, and some others taken up.

Mr. BADGER's motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 15, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The question pending before the House is the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] to lay upon the table the resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] to close debate upon the Nebraska and Kansas bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to withdraw the demand for the previous question on the resolution to close debate.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield me the floor for a moment to allow me to make a statement of a personal character?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield the floor to the gentleman from Indiana.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Indiana will be permitted to make his statement.

Mr. LANE. I desire merely to state, that in looking over the yeas and nays—

Mr. HAVEN. I have not the least objection to the gentleman from Indiana proceeding with his explanation; but I insist that it shall be made where we can all hear it.

Mr. LANE. The explanation which I desire to make is merely in reference to a vote. In looking over the yeas and nays, I notice that upon the motion made by my friend and colleague [Mr. MACE] to lay the resolution offered by the chairman of the Committee on Territories [Mr. RICHARDSON] upon the table, my name does not appear. I merely desire to state that if I had been present, I would have voted against the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to withdraw the demand for the previous question, submitted by me some days since, to terminate debate upon the Nebraska and Kansas bill, and to modify that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his demand for the previous question, and proposes to modify his resolution as follows:

Resolved, That debate on House bill No. 236, to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, shall terminate at twelve o'clock, on Friday, the 19th instant.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand the previous question upon the passage of the resolution.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. SAGE. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Is it in order to move a suspension of the rules at this time?

The SPEAKER. Such a motion would be in order.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I desire to move a suspension of the rules, in order to allow me to introduce a bill, which I offer upon my own responsibility. At an early period of the session, I gave notice that I would, on a subsequent day, ask leave to introduce a bill for the repeal of so much of the United States laws as authorized the existing coast-wise slave trade. I now move a suspension of the rules that I may introduce the bill which I have drawn up in pursuance thereof.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object.

Mr. OLDS. The motion of the gentleman from Ohio will not take precedence of the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois, to close debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers a resolution to close debate on the Nebraska and Kansas bill on Friday next. The gentleman from Ohio moves to suspend the rules for the purpose of enabling him to introduce a bill. The Chair is inclined to the opinion that this day, being set apart for the purpose of suspending the rules, and upon which motions may be submitted for that purpose; and inasmuch as the suspension of rules will embrace those rules authorizing the suspension to go into committee, and to close debate, and all that, it is in order to submit a motion to suspend the rules generally. That is the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. ORR. Mr. Speaker, when a privileged question is pending, will it be in order to make a motion to suspend the rules? I know that there is a privileged question now pending, but it is the privileged question to close debate, and the motion to suspend the rules, I think, is not a privileged question now in order.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from South Carolina will allow me, I will explain. The motion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] is a privileged question involving only a majority vote. The proposition to suspend the rules made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GIDDINGS] embraces all the rules of the body that stand in the way of the object he has in view, and the Chair is still of opinion that that question is first in order.

Mr. ORR. And yet, Mr. Speaker, carrying out the view of the Chair, it would require a two-third vote to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. It would require a two-third vote.

Mr. ORR. But would it not be in order for me, pending the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, to move that the House adjourn; and would not that be such a motion as that a majority vote could be disposed of, and as would take precedence of the other?

The SPEAKER. That is true in this particular case.

Mr. ORR. Well, then, Mr. Speaker, I do not perceive the difference between them—

The SPEAKER, (interrupting.) If the House had ordered the main question to be put, the Chair would not entertain the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, to suspend the rules until the House had disposed of the order to put the main question. But in this instance there has been no such order. It is only a demand for the previous question.

Mr. ORR. What is the rule of the House, Mr. Speaker, allowing a resolution to be offered to close debate? I ask that it may be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the rule in question.

Portion of the 136th rule was then read, as follows:

"The House may at any time, by a vote of a majority of the members present, suspend the rules and orders for the purpose of going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and also for providing for the discharge of the Committee of the Whole House, and the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, from the further consideration of any bill referred to it after acting, without debate, on all amendments pending, and that may be offered."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would submit to the Chair, that by the rule which has been just read, and which I think is the 136th rule, it is provided that a majority may, at any time, suspend the rules to go into a Committee of the Whole House. The same rule provides that the House may adopt a resolution closing debate before the question is taken on that motion. Another rule provides that a motion to suspend all rules shall only be in order on Monday. Now, Mr. Speaker, the difference of the motions mentioned is, that the one requiring a two-third vote can only be made on Monday; and the other, requiring a majority only, can be made on any day. Each, as I take it, is equally privileged; and the one for suspending the rules to go into committee—and, consequently, to close debate before that question is taken—is of as high an order of privilege as the one to suspend the rules generally on Monday. And I would submit this question to the Chair: If a motion were in order made to-day to suspend the rules, so as that the House might resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, would that motion be superseded by one to suspend the rules for a specific purpose, such as that which the gentleman from Ohio has indicated? I think, Mr. Speaker, the practice has been so. We have frequently gotten clear of these propositions for suspending the rules generally by the proposition to suspend, in order that the House might resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

It seems to me, that whichever of these motions may be first made, should first be put. I also think, that this resolution to terminate debate is, by the rule which provides for it, of equal and of as high a grade of privilege as either one to suspend the rules generally, or one to suspend the rules that the House may resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. DICKINSON. I ask leave of the House to offer a resolution.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order at this time.

Mr. KERR. Let us hear it read.

[Cries of "Hear!" "Hear!" and "No!" "No!"

The SPEAKER. It can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. HAMILTON, and others. I object.

Mr. ORR. I am willing to hear the resolution read for information.

The SPEAKER. But it is objected to.

[Cries of "Hear!" and "Let it be read for information!"

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by several members upon the right of the Chair.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, was here recognized by the Chair.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I rise to a privileged question. I desire to know if there is any privileged proposition before the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be pleased to hear the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS,] if the House will indulge him.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Unless it is in order to debate this proposition, I object.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order, in the opinion of the Chair, to debate the proposition.

Mr. BANKS. Cannot the Chair hear a suggestion from a member, at the option of the Chair?

The SPEAKER. It is not in the power of the Chair to allow debate upon a proposition of this sort. We have a number of privileged questions—a number of them: A motion to adjourn; to adjourn over until a particular day; to lay upon the table; to suspend the rules to go into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar; to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, &c.

We have also a rule which declares that it shall not be in order to move to suspend the rules generally, except upon Mondays. Fridays and Saturdays are set apart for the consideration of private bills. That rule gives to private matter a preference. The Chair is still of opinion that the proposition made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GIDDINGS,] which is neither more or less than to set aside all the rules standing in the way of the object proposed to be attained, is of a more highly privileged character on Monday than any other proposition to suspend the rules for any other purpose, such as to go into the Committee of the Whole, for instance. That can be done at any time. This is the language of the rule, and it would be in order on Monday to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; but the Chair decides that a motion to suspend the rules generally, takes precedence of all other motions whatever to suspend the rules.

The Chair has never known the question to be raised here before. The reason of it is this: The House has usually submitted to the proposition to go into the Committee of the Whole on Mondays, as on other days. But the Chair, in being called upon to decide which of these several motions shall take precedence, is bound to say that the one made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GIDDINGS] does take precedence.

Mr. HILLYER. Believing that the decision of the Chair will distract the legislation of the House to-day, I respectfully appeal from the decision.

Mr. DEAN. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. HARRIS was here recognized by the Chair.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I rise to a question privileged above all others. I rise to withdraw the motion. I do it because the friends and the foes of the bill think it will interfere with the fight which is going on, and I am not disposed to embarrass either side with my motion.

Mr. DEAN. You want a free fight.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon laying the appeal upon the table.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that there be a call of the House; and upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. DICKINSON. I call for the reading of the resolution which I sent to the Clerk's table.

The SPEAKER. If not objected to, the resolution will be read.

[Cries of "I object!" "I object!"

Mr. DICKINSON. Then I move to suspend the rules, for the purpose of enabling me to introduce it.

The SPEAKER. There is no necessity for suspending the rules; the gentleman has the right to make a motion to have the resolution read.

Mr. DICKINSON. I make that motion.

The question was put; but before the result was announced,

Mr. HAVEN demanded the yeas and nays.

[Cries on all sides of the Hall of "Let it be read!"

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to announce that the vote upon ordering the resolution to be read was carried in the affirmative.

Mr. HAVEN. Then I withdraw my call for the yeas and nays.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the several bills upon the Calendar of business in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, be restored to the position they respectively occupied before Monday, the 8th instant.

Several MEMBERS. Oh no! that will never do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was totally mistaken in his understanding of the paper the gentleman from Massachusetts asked to have read. The gentleman had no right to have it read. He had no right to make the motion that it be read. The Chair understood him to call for the reading of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON.]

Mr. WALSH. That is the reason why I objected. I should not have objected to the reading of the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DICKINSON. I move to suspend the rules, to enable me to offer the resolution which has just been read.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order.

Mr. ORR. Is there not a motion pending for a call of the House?

The SPEAKER. Such a motion is pending.

Mr. ORR. Is it in order to move to suspend the rules pending a call of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no doubt about it. It is in order.

Mr. ORR. Why, sir, it might be necessary to have a call in order to have a quorum to vote upon the motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The question must first be taken upon the motion for a call of the House.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire to know the precise condition of the motions before the House. I understand that there is a motion to suspend the rules for the introduction of the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and another motion pending that there be a call of the House. Am I correct?

The SPEAKER. Those motions are before the House.

Mr. HAVEN. Then, if the motion that there be a call of the House should fail, the question would recur upon the motion to suspend the rules, would it not?

The SPEAKER. That is the opinion of the Chair.

The question was then taken upon the motion for a call of the House; and decided in the negative—yeas 61, nays 141; as follows:

Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Letcher, Landley Lindsey, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, May, Mayall, Meacham, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Oids, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rogers, Rowe, Ruffin, Sabin, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Wells, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—141.

So the House refused to order a call.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, pending the call of the roll, when his name was called, rose for the purpose of ascertaining whether, by the unanimous consent of the House, he could not give a reason for the vote he was about to give.

Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Then I vote no.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the motion to lay the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois upon the table.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I would inquire whether the motion submitted by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DICKINSON] to suspend the rules is not in order?

The SPEAKER. It is in order, if he submits the motion.

Mr. DICKINSON. I have not withdrawn my motion to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing the resolution which I have indicated. I ask that it may be read.

The resolution was read, as inserted above.

Mr. DICKINSON. I call for the yeas and nays upon the motion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL and CHURCHWELL were appointed.

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported yeas fifty-two; more than one fifth of a quorum.

The question was then taken on Mr. DICKINSON's motion to suspend the rules; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 75, nays 121; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Gamble, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Knox, Lindsey, McCulloch, Matteson, Maurice, Meacham, Middlesworth, Morgan, Murray, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburn, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Yates—75.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Ashe, Thomas H. Bailey, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Bocoek, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Eddy, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Faulkner, Florence, Fuller, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, S. W. Harris, Green, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, Johnson, G. W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Letcher, Lindley, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Macy, Maxwell, May, Mayall, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Morrison, Oids, Mordcaai Oliver, Orr, Packard, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Rogers, Rowe, Rufin, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—121.

So the House refused to suspend the rules for the purpose.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House for the purpose of introducing the following resolution. If there be objection, I move that the rules of the House be suspended for the purpose indicated:

Resolved, That debate on bill No. 236, to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, shall terminate at four o'clock, p. m., Friday, 19th instant, and that the consideration of the special order on bill No. 295, for the Pacific railroad, be postponed until the 24th instant.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I object.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I move that the rules be suspended for the purpose I have indicated.

Mr. ORR. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I would ask the unanimous consent of the House for the purpose of making a single suggestion.

[Cries of "Hear him!"]

The SPEAKER. Is it the unanimous consent of the House that the gentleman be heard?

Mr. SAGE. I object.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to propound an inquiry to the gentleman from Illinois, and no more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York rises in his place and objects. The gentleman, therefore, cannot proceed.

Mr. EDGERTON. I would like to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON.]

[Cries of "Hear him!" "Hear them both!"]

The SPEAKER. Is it the unanimous consent of the House that the gentleman be heard?

[Cries of "Hear him!" "I object."]

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen objecting must rise in their places and do so.

Mr. WALSH. I rise in my place, and object.

Mr. SAGE. I do not want to be invidious. I have objected to the gentleman from Indiana, and must object now to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move to amend the resolution.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to do so. The resolution is not now before the House. If the rules be suspended for its introduction, it will then be amendable.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I propose, when it is in order, to move to amend the resolution by inserting Saturday, at twelve o'clock, m., instead of Friday, at four o'clock.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EDGERTON] asks the privilege of being heard for a moment or two, and it is objected to. Is it in order to move to suspend the rules to enable him to be heard?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order. There is a motion to suspend the rules already pending.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to accommodate these gentlemen if I can—

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. SAGE. Is debate in order?

Mr. ORR. The gentleman has a right to modify his resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I modify my resolution so as to make it close debate at twelve o'clock, m., on Saturday next.

Mr. ORR. Now we shall see whether these gentlemen who want time for debate are in earnest. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 137, nays 66; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bailey, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Bocoek, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cunningham, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Faulkner, Florence, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Gray, Hamilton, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Hughes, Ingersoll, Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Klutridge, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Letcher, Lindsey, Lindsey, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Mac, Macy, Maxwell, May, Mayall, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milson, Morrison, Noble, Oids, Mordcaai Oliver, Orr, Packard, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rogers, Rowe, Rufin, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trout, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, John Wentworth, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—137.

NAYS—Messrs. Ball, Belcher, Benson, Benton, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Eastman, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Howe, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Knox, Lyon, McCulloch, Matteson, Maurice, Meacham, Middlesworth, Morgan, Murray, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburn, Israel Washburn, Wells, Tappan Wentworth, and Yates—66.

So, two thirds voting in favor thereof, the rules were suspended.

Mr. SNODGRASS stated that he had paired off with Mr. CORWIN.

Mr. NICHOLS. I desire to say, that I should have voted for the modified proposition of the gentleman from Illinois, but for the fact that I some time since paired off with Mr. McMULLIN, of Virginia, on the Nebraska question, and he is yet absent. I apprehend he would have voted as I should vote on the pending proposition, but I do not feel authorized to vote in his absence.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now submit the resolution, as modified, and upon it I demand the previous question.

Mr. HUNT. If the gentleman will allow me, I will propose an amendment as to time, which will make the resolution more satisfactory to the opponents of the bill,

[Cries of "Hear him!" "No, no!" and "Object!"]

Mr. SAGE. I move to lay the resolution upon the table; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SAGE] moves to lay the resolution upon the table, and upon that motion demands the yeas and nays. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] asks the unanimous consent of the House to make a suggestion in reference to this matter.

[Cries of "Hear him!" "Hear him!" from all parts of the House.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield the floor to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAIGE. I object.

Mr. HUNT. The gentleman compels me reluctantly to take ground that I would not take—

[Loud cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. CRAIGE. I look upon the gentleman from Louisiana as a factionist. He is acting with them.

Mr. MEACHAM. I demand tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL and VAIL were appointed.

The House was then divided on the demand for the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported fifty in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk then proceeded to call the roll; but before the result was announced,

Mr. HUNT rose and said: I am sorry to trouble the House; but I ask that I may be allowed to say one word, or ask a question by way of explanation, in a matter that concerns my feelings.

The SPEAKER. Is it the unanimous pleasure of the House that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] should be heard?

Mr. CRAIGE. I take the same ground that I did before.

Mr. HUNT. If the gentleman from North Carolina stigmatizes me as a factionist, it is a falsehood, before God and my country.

[Vociferous cries of "Order!"]

Mr. HUNT. I repeat that it is a falsehood.

[Great confusion in the Hall, members rising to their feet and shouting "Order!"]

Mr. CRAIGE. If the gentleman desires to bully the House, he shall not do it. He shall not bully me. I did say he was a factionist, and I now repeat it.

[Renewed cries of "Order!"]

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I demand that the Sergeant-at-Arms take these men into custody. I demand that they be arrested.

The Speaker directed the Sergeant-at-Arms to preserve order in the Hall; whereupon the Sergeant-at-Arms proceeded with his mace to the scene of confusion, and order was immediately restored.

The vote upon Mr. SAGE's motion was then announced, as follows—yeas 65, nays 134; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Benson, Benton, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Davis, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Eastman, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Goodrich, Grow, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, How, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Knox, Lyon, McCulloch, Matteson, Maurice, Meacham, Middlesworth, Morgan, Murray, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburn, Israel Washburn, Wells, Tappan Wentworth, and Yates—65.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bailey, Barksdale, Bell, Bocoek, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cunningham, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Faulkner, Florence, Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Leitcher, Lindsey, Lindsley, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, May, Mayall, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milson, Morrison, Noble, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rogers, Rowe, Ruffin, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Trout, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, John Wentworth, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—134.

So the House refused to lay the resolution upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I now move that the House adjourn.

Mr. SAGE. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I rise to inquire whether it is in order to move to amend the resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON.]

The SPEAKER. It is not in order, there being a demand for the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I demand tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HARRIS, of Alabama, and CAMPBELL, were appointed.

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported fifty gentlemen voting in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FARLEY. I move when this House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I demand tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL and CHURCHWELL were appointed.

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported forty-one gentlemen voting in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BENSON. I move that there be a call of the House; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The motion made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BENSON] is not in order, for the reason that there is a motion now pending that the House adjourn.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 56, nays 131; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Harrison, Howe, Howe, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Knox, McCulloch, Matteson, Maurice, Meacham, Middlesworth, Morgan, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Pennington, Pringle, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Skelton, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, and Yates—56.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bell, Bocock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskey, Chamberlain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Cullom, Cumming, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Eastman, Eddy, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Faulkner, Florence, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Hastings, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lane, Latham, Leitcher, Lindsey, Lindsley, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, May, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milson, Morrison, Nichols, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Rogers, Rowe, Ruffin, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trout, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Wells, John Wentworth, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—131.

So the House refused to adjourn over till Wednesday.

The question then recurred on the motion that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 53, nays 132; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Campbell, Carpenter, Crocker, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Harrison, Haven-Howe, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Knox, McCulloch, Matte, son, Maurice, Meacham, Middlesworth, Morgan, Murray, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Pennington, Pringle, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Simmons, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, and Yates—53.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bell, Bocock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Caruthers, Caskey, Chamberlain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Craig, Cullom, Cumming, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Eddy, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Faulkner, Florence, Gamble, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Hastings, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Leitcher, Lindsey, Lindsley, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, May, Mayall, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milson, Morrison, Noble, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rogers, Ruffin, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Trout, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Wells, John Wentworth, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—132.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. MATTESON, and Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, took the floor.

[Loud cries of "Question!" "Question!" from all sides of the Hall, and great confusion and disorder.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair appeals to the House to come to order. The Chair will put no question until the House does come to order.

Order having been restored,

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on seconding the demand for the previous question. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] has the floor, and is addressing the Chair.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move, Mr. Speaker, that there be a call of the House; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair ruled that motion out of order. It was the last motion taken except that to adjourn.

Mr. WASHBURN. Then I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next; and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. That motion also has been this moment passed upon, and is not in order now.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move to lay on the table the resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON]; and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided again and again, since he occupied this position, that such a motion cannot be repeated until there has been some vote taken changing the character of the proposition before this body.

The House was then divided on seconding the demand for the previous question, and it was seconded.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I now renew my motion, that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next; and on that motion I ask the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Illinois may properly make that motion now.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Can he do so, Mr. Speaker, after the demand for the previous question has been seconded?

The SPEAKER. Yes, it can be done after seconding the demand for the previous question.

The Chair decided the other day, when there was a contest about the time for submitting a motion to adjourn over, that the proper time for making that motion would be when there was pending a motion to adjourn; for the former takes precedence of it. In the opinion of the Chair, the motion to adjourn, and the motion to adjourn over, are of such a character that they may be put, now that there has been legislative action upon this bill.

Mr. GOODRICH, (at two o'clock and twenty minutes, p. m.) I move that the House do now adjourn; and on that motion I ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. MATTESON. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL, and HARRIS of Alabama, were appointed.

The House was then divided upon the demand for the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported forty-four in the affirmative, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I now move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn until Wednesday next; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. SAGE. I ask for tellers upon the demand for the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL, and HARRIS of Alabama, were appointed.

The House was then divided upon the demand for the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported forty in the affirmative, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being upon the motion that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next, it was put; and decided in the negative—yeas 51, nays 136; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Thomas Davis, Dick, Dickinson, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Harrison, Haven-Howe, Daniel T. Jones, Knox, Lyon, McCulloch, Matteson, Maurice, Meacham, Middlesworth, Morgan, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Pennington, Pringle, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, John L. Taylor, Tracy, Upham, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, and Yates—51.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bell, Bocock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskey, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craig, Cullom, Cumming, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Eastman, Eddy, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Faulkner, Florence, Gamble, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Hastings, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Leitcher, Lindsey, Lindsley, Macdonald, McNair, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, May, Mayall, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milson, Morrison, Noble, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rogers, Ruffin, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, William R. Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trout, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, John Wentworth, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—136.

So the House refused to adjourn over.

The question then recurring upon the motion that the House do now adjourn, it was put; and decided in the negative—yeas 33, nays 126; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Bennett, Benson, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, De Witt, Dickinson, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Everhart, Farley, Goodrich, Grow, Harrison, Howe, Daniel T. Jones, Knox, McCulloch, Matteson, Maurice, Meacham, Middlesworth, Morgan, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Pringle, and David Ritchie—33.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bell, Bocock, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Cullom, Cumming, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Eastman, Eddy, Ellison, Faulkner, Florence, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Hastings, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Latham, Leitcher, Lindsey, Lindsley, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, May, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milson, Morrison, Noble, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Richardson, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rogers, Rowe, Ruffin, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trout, Tweed, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, John Wentworth, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—126.

So the House refused to adjourn.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a resolution.

Many MEMBERS. I object.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The previous question has been seconded.

Mr. HAMILTON. It is not in order.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair would say to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. WASHBURN,] that it is out of order to introduce any new matter of legislation, the House being engaged in acting upon a matter under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. WASHBURN. Then I move to lay upon the table the resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON.]

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]
The SPEAKER. The Chair rules that motion out of order.

Mr. SAGE. I move a call of the House.
The SPEAKER. The Chair rules the motion out of order.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!" and "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. There is an express rule of the House which forbids a call of the House when a motion has been submitted upon which the House has seconded the demand for the previous question. The Chair will turn to the rule, if any gentleman desires.

[Cries of "Oh, no!" all over the Hall.]
The SPEAKER. The Chair can turn to the rule if—

[Cries of "Question!" and "Call the roll!" and great confusion.]

Mr. HAVEN. I want to make one inquiry of the Chair.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]
The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes the House will permit the gentleman to make an inquiry.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Oh, no!

Mr. WALSH. I object.
Mr. HAVEN. I then move a division of the question. The resolution involves a postponement of—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will allow the Chair to say that the question is upon ordering the main question to be now put. As many as are in favor of that proposition will—

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Yeas and nays upon that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.
[Cries of "Call the roll!" "Call the roll!"]
The question being upon ordering the main question to be put, it was put; and decided in the affirmative—yeas 127, nays 62; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abernethy, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Boccock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craigie, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Eddy, Edmundson, Elison, English, Faulkner, Florence, Fuller, Gamble, Gode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hilyer, Houston, Ingersoll, Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Letcher, Lindley, Lindsey, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, May, Mayall, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milson, Morrison, Noble, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packard, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Richardson, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rogers, Rowe, Ruffin, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trout, Tweed, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, John Wentworth, Westbrooke, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zolliecoffer—127.

NAYS—Messrs. Ball, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Culom, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Edwards, Thomas D. Eliot, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Giddings, Grow, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Howe, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Knox, McCulloch, Matteson, Maurice, Meacham, Middeworth, Morgan, Murray, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, David Ritchie, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Gerit Smith, Stanton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, and Yates—62.

So the main question was ordered to be now put.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I now move to lay the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] upon the table, and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides the motion out of order.

Mr. WASHBURN. Then I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair; and upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. SAGE. I call for tellers upon the demand for the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HENDRICKS and DICKINSON appointed.

The House was then divided upon the demand for the yeas and nays, and the tellers reported forty in the affirmative, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask to be excused from voting on the pending motion.

Mr. SAGE. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MORGAN] is not in order.

Mr. FLORENCE. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. SAGE. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

[Cries of "Oh, no, no, Florence!" "Withdraw!" "Withdraw!"]

Mr. FLORENCE. I withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. The history of this matter had better be briefly looked to by gentlemen who desire to cast their votes properly upon the appeal, and the Chair calls the attention of the House to the history of the matter. A motion to lay upon the table is a highly privileged motion. That motion has been made, and the House deliberately refused to lay the resolution upon the table. Since that time, the only action which has been taken upon the resolution is to order the main question to be now put. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] again moves that the resolution do lie upon the table. The Chair decides the motion not in order, and from that decision of the Chair an appeal is taken by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. WASHBURN.] The gentleman from New York [Mr. MORGAN] gets up and asks, under the rule, to be excused from voting upon the appeal thus taken from the decision of the Chair. The Chair knows of no rule by which he could—for in that case he certainly would—rule the motion out of order. The Chair thinks that the motion that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MORGAN] be excused from voting upon the decision of the Chair is in order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I call the attention of the Chair to the rule which governs the action of the House after the previous question has been seconded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read it.
Mr. CAMPBELL. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes the House will hear the rule—

"When a question is under debate, no motion shall be received but to adjourn, to lie upon the table."

The motion to lay upon the table, if made simultaneously, takes precedence. But the motion to lay the resolution upon the table has been made. The House have voted upon it, and deliberately refused to lay it upon the table. The rule then goes on to say,

"Which several motions shall have precedence in the order in which they are arranged; and no motion to postpone to a day certain, to commit, or to postpone indefinitely, being decided, shall be again allowed on the same day, and at the same stage of the bill or proposition."

The 50th rule says:

"The previous question shall be put in this form: 'Shall the main question be now put?' It shall only be admitted when demanded by a majority of the members present."

That has been done.

"And its effects shall be to put an end to all debate, and bring the House to a direct vote upon a motion to commit, if such motion shall have been made; and if this motion does not prevail, then upon amendments reported by a committee, if any, then upon pending amendments, and then upon the main question. On a motion for the previous question, and prior to the seconding of the same, a call of the House shall be in order; but after a majority shall have seconded such motion, no call shall be in order prior to the decision of the main question."

In regard to the right of a member to move to be excused from voting every gentleman is familiar with the rule.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I appeal from the decision of the Chair, upon the ground that the House having ordered the main question to be now put, a collateral question of this sort cannot be made more than any other.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I suppose it is not in order to make an inquiry; but—

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object to all debate.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not going to debate; I am going to make a motion. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides the motion to be out of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Upon what ground does the Chair decide the motion to be out of order?

The SPEAKER. Upon the ground that the House have ordered the main question to be now put upon the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WALLEY. I rise to a question of order. I submit that the appeal taken by the gentleman from North Carolina cannot be entertained, for the reason that one appeal is already pending.

The SPEAKER. The Chair himself was considering that question, and he has some difficulty in reference to it. If he refuse to entertain the appeal, gentlemen would have the right to divide the House all night upon motions to excuse members from voting.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Does the Chair decide that the appeal can be taken while another appeal is pending?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that one appeal conflicts with the other.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I wish to make a suggestion, if the Chair will allow—

Mr. CAMPBELL. I object. The gentleman will not allow others to be heard.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. STEPHENS. I rise to make a suggestion on a question of order. The point is this: A gentleman over the way asks to be excused from voting after the House has ordered the main question to be "now put." The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] raises the question of order that that motion to excuse cannot be entertained in the present stage of proceedings, for the reason that the main question has been ordered to be "now put." The Speaker overrules the point of order, and the gentleman from North Carolina appeals from the decision of the Chair. I submit that the appeal of the gentleman from North Carolina must take precedence over the motion to excuse.

The SPEAKER. "Every member who shall be in the House when the question is put, shall give his vote, unless the House, for special reason, shall excuse him. All motions to excuse a member from voting shall be made before the House divides, or before the call of the yeas and nays is commenced; and the question shall then be taken without further debate." The Chair does not see the force of the reasoning of the gentlemen from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] and from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS,] that the previous question can have no effect whatever on this right of a member to ask to be excused from voting.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I have taken an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the appeal be laid upon the table; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. ORR. I move to suspend the rule of the House which allows the gentleman, so far as this resolution is concerned, to ask to be excused from voting.

Mr. CLINGMAN. You cannot do so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that, unless precluded by other motions, the motion made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] is in order. He will illustrate his view by calling the attention of the House to the everyday practice having a bearing on the matter. Very often Monday the rules are suspended for the purpose of introducing a bill. The bill is introduced. It is discovered after it is before the body that it contains an appropriation. There is nothing more common than the submitting of the motion to suspend the rule which requires a bill containing an appropriation to go for its first consideration to the Committee of the Whole.

Now, the Chair denies that it is competent to suspend the rule having a bearing on this particular case, as indicated by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.] The object, in either case, is to progress with the business before the body. If the gentleman from South Carolina had moved to suspend the rules generally which allowed gentlemen to ask leave to be excused from voting, the Chair would have decided it out of order. He moves the suspension generally in reference to this special resolution, and the Chair thinks that the motion is in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I desire to refer the Chair to several cases where, in 1849, this was decided—

Mr. ORR. Mr. Speaker, I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ORR. I cannot withdraw my objection. The gentleman will not allow others to make an argument.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not intend to make an argument.

Mr. ORR. You propose to do nearly the same thing. I object, and persist in the objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Very well, then. I send the cases to which I would have referred if I had not been objected to up to the Speaker, so that he may read them.

Mr. HAVEN. I will not go outside of the legitimate rule. I would say, in reference to the point of the gentleman from North Carolina, that inasmuch as the previous question has been recorded, and the main question ordered to be put, a motion that there be a call of the House, or any other motion whatever, cannot be entertained.

Mr. ORR. I withdraw my motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair would like to call the attention of the House to various precedents. It has been the universal practice to admit excuses.

Mr. CLINGMAN. There is no doubt of that. The point was not made at all. I now make it, under the present circumstances; and I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and a motion is made to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. The books are full of precedents that members have been excused from voting after the previous question was sustained. There is no question about it at all.

Mr. DEAN. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. SAGE. I ask for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HAMILTON and MEACHAM were appointed.

The House was then divided on the demand for the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported forty-three in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ASHE. I have paired off with Mr. SKELTON.

The question was then put; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 75, nays 111; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagg, Gamble, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Knox, McCulloch, Macy, Matteson, Maurice, Mencham, Middlesworth, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Noble, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Pennington, Pringle, Puryear, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seymour, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, J. L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Yates—75.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Davin J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Bocoock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Cox, Craige, Cumming, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Disney, Dowdell, Dunham, Eddy, Edmundson, English, Faulkner, Florence, Fuller, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Gray, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Lindsey, Lindley, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, May, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milson, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Ready, Richardson, Riddle, Thomas Ritchie, Rogers, Rowe, Ruffin, Seward, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Westbrook, Witte, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—111.

So the House refused to lay the appeal upon the table.

The question recurred upon the appeal: "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?"

Mr. WASHBURN. Of Illinois. I ask for the yeas and nays on that question.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. PRINGLE. I ask to be excused from voting on the appeal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that that is out of order, because we are now acting upon an appeal which will control that very question.

Mr. MEACHAM. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that when this House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Has any business been done since a similar motion was acted on?

The SPEAKER. Yes, a good deal of time has been spent, and an adjournment is a question of time; but there has been action upon the appeal of the gentleman from North Carolina himself.

Tellers on the yeas and nays were demanded and ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL and ASHE were appointed.

The House then divided; and the tellers reported thirty-seven gentlemen voting in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 47, nays 117; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Bennett, Benson, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Thomas Davis, Dick, Dickinson, Eastman, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Everhart, Farley, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Howe, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Knox, Lyon, McCulloch, Matteson, Meacham, Middlesworth, Morrison, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Pennington, Pringle, David Ritchie, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, and Tappan Wentworth—47.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bell, Bocoock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cullom, Cumming, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Eddy, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Faulkner, Florence, Gamble, Goode, Greenwood, Gray, Hamilton, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Hastings, Hendricks, Henn, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Lamb, Letcher, Lindsey, Lindley, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Macy, Maxwell, May, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milson, Noble, Olds, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Kreston, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Rogers, Rowe, Ruffin, Seward, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Alexander H. Stephens, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Tweed, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Wells, Westbrook, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—117.

So the House refused to adjourn till Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MEACHAM,] that the House adjourn, upon which the yeas and nays have been demanded.

Mr. ASHE. I move the previous question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MEACHAM] to withdraw that motion. It seems to me that there is a majority in favor of overruling the decision of the Chair.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the Chair would remind the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] that all discussion is out of order.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 57, nays 105; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Benson, Benton, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Etheridge, Farley, Fenton, Flagg, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Hastings, Haven, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Knox, Lindsey, McCulloch, Matteson, Meacham, Middlesworth, Morgan, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Pennington, Pringle, David Ritchie, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Tracy, Upham, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, and Tappan Wentworth—57.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bocoock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cumming, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Eddy, Edmundson, Faulkner, Florence, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Greenwood, Grey, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Letcher, Lindsey, Macdonald, McDougall, Macy, Maxwell, May, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milson, Olds, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Rogers, Ruffin, Seward, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Alexander H. Stephens, Stratton, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—105.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the appeal taken from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. LETCHER. Will the Chair state what this question of appeal is, as we have had two or three taken.

The SPEAKER. In the first place, some gentleman made a motion that the resolution closing debate upon the Nebraska and Kansas bill lie upon the table. That motion having been made and voted down by the House, the Chair decided that it was not in order to repeat it. From that decision of the Chair an appeal was taken. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. MORGAN,] in front of the Chair, rose and asked to be excused from voting upon the appeal. Under the rules, and the universal practice of the House, the Chair decided that the gentleman had a right to ask to be excused from voting. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] made a question of order, that the gentleman had no such right. The Chair having overruled the question of order, the gentleman from North Carolina took an appeal from that decision, and the vote now to be taken is, "Shall the decision of the Chair remain the judgment of this House?"

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 63, nays 94; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Bennett, Benson, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Eastman, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Farley, Fenton, Flagg, Gamble, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Hughes, Hunt, Knox, Lindsey, Lyon, McCulloch, Macy, Matteson, Meacham, Middlesworth, Milson, Morgan, Noble, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Pennington, Pringle, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, Andrew Stuart, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, and Tappan Wentworth—63.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Bocoock, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Craige, Cumming, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Eddy, Edmundson, English, Faulkner, Florence, Goode, Greenwood, Grey, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Letcher, Lindsey, Macdonald, McDougall, Maxwell, May, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Olds, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Preston, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Rogers, Ruffin, Seward, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—94.

So the decision of the Chair was overruled.

Mr. MATTESON. I move that the House adjourn; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. I move that when this House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. PRINGLE. I ask for tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I make the point of order that that motion has been made and voted upon by the House, and that it is not in order to repeat it. I would say to the Chair, that that was the ruling of some of his predecessors.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] and he would like the gentleman to point the Chair to a single instance of the kind.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would like, Mr. Speaker, to put a question to the gentleman from North Carolina. I would like to know which of your predecessors made the ruling he speaks of?

Mr. HOUSTON. The point of order is withdrawn; and it is too late now to ask the question.

Tellers on the yeas and nays were ordered; and Messrs. HENDRICKS and SAGE were appointed.

The House was divided; and the tellers reported thirty-six in the affirmative, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and decided in the negative—yeas 46, nays 108; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bennett, Benson, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Eastman, Edmonds, Thomas D. Eliot, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Harrison, Haven, Daniel T. Jones, Knox, Lyon, Matteson, Middleswarth, Morgan, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Pennington, Pringle, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, John L. Taylor, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, and Tappan Wentworth—46.

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Bell, Bocock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cumming, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Eddy, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Faulkner, Florence, Gamble, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Hastings, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Houston, Hughes, Ingersoll, Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Letcher, Lindsey, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Macy, Maxwell, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Morrison, Noble, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Puryear, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rogers, Ruffin, Seward, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Trout, Tweed, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—108.

So the House refused to adjourn over.

The question recurring on the motion that the House do now adjourn, it was put; and disagreed to.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution to close debate on the Nebraska bill.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. I ask for a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. The resolution, in the opinion of the Chair, is divisible.

The Chair begs pardon. He now recollects there is an appeal pending from the decision of the Chair, and it would not be right to pass it over.

[Cries of "Oh! no matter about it!" "Let it slide!" and laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair decided that it was not in order to submit a motion to lay the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois on the table, that motion having been previously submitted, and the House having then refused to lay it on the table.

Several Voices. Oh, pass it over. We had forgotten all about it.

The SPEAKER. From that decision an appeal has been taken, and a motion has been made to lay the appeal on the table. The yeas and nays have been called for and ordered. The question now is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?"

The question was taken; and decided in the affirmative—yeas 113, nays 40; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Barksdale, Bell, Bocock, Boyce, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cumming, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Eddy, Edmundson, English, Faulkner, Florence, Giddings, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Hughes, Ingersoll, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Knox, Kurtz, Lamb, Lindsey, Lyon, Macdonald, McNair, Maxwell, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Morrison, Murray, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Richardson, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rogers, Ruffin, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Stratton, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Trout, Tweed, Vansant, Walker, Walsh, Wells, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—113.

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Bennett, Benson, Campbell, Chandler, Crocker, Dick, Dickinson, Eastman, Edmonds, Thomas D. Eliot, Everhart, Fenton, Goodrich, Grow, Harrison, McCulloch, Macy, Matteson, Meacham, Middleswarth, Morgan, Norton, Parker, Pennington, Pringle, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Andrew Stuart, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Yates—40.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the adoption of the resolution to close debate.

The question was put; pending the announcement,

Mr. FARLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Messrs. CAMPBELL, and STUART, of Ohio, addressed the Chair.

The Clerk commenced calling the roll.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. I ask for a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. There are two distinct propositions contained in the resolution. The one is to close debate on the Nebraska bill; the other is to postpone the special order on the Pacific railroad bill. The question now is on the first proposition, which is to terminate the debate on the Nebraska bill; and on that proposition the yeas and nays will be taken.

The question was then taken; and decided in the affirmative—yeas 114, nays 59; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Bocock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cumming, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Eddy, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Faulkner, Florence, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Hughes, Ingersoll, Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lindsey, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Macy, Maxwell, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Noble, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rogers, Ruffin, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Trout, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, John Wentworth, Westbrook, Witte, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—114.

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Eastman, Edmonds, Thomas D. Eliot, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Goodrich, Grow, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Howe, Daniel T. Jones, Knox, Lyon, McCulloch, Matteson, Meacham, Middleswarth, Morgan, Murray, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Pennington, Pringle, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Skelton, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, Tappan Wentworth, and Yates—59.

So the resolution closing debate on the Nebraska bill at twelve o'clock on Saturday, the 20th instant, was adopted.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the adoption of the second branch of the resolution; which is, that the special order on the Pacific railroad bill be postponed till Wednesday, the 24th instant.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask to be excused from voting on that proposition; and on the motion to be excused I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. STUART. Then I hope the motion which I have made will be placed on the record of the proceedings.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not time now to determine whether the motion should go on the Journal or not.

Mr. STUART. I merely wish it to go on record that an express rule of this House has been trampled down.

The question being still on the adoption of the second branch of the proposition offered by the gentleman from Illinois,

Mr. WALKER. I move to lay that proposition on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that that motion is out of order.

[Loud cries of "Call the roll!"]

The question was taken; and decided in the affirmative—yeas 123, nays 53; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bell, Bocock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Caruthers, Caskie, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cumming, John G. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Wells, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—123.

NAYS—Messrs. Ball, Bennett, Benson, Campbell, Carpenter, Crocker, Thomas Davis, Dick, Dickinson, Edmonds, Thomas D. Eliot, Etheridge, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Goodrich, Grow, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Howe, Daniel T. Jones, Knox, Lyon, McCulloch, Matteson, Meacham, Middleswarth, Morgan, Murray, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Skelton, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Tracy, Wade, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Yates—53.

So the second branch of the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote last taken, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAVEN. Unless some other gentleman has more important business to offer just now, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

The House thereupon, at a quarter before six o'clock, p. m., adjourned till to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 16, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICKER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. NORRIS presented the petition of Simon Smith, a pensioner of the United States, praying to be allowed back pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, the petition of Abigail Sanders, praying to be allowed bounty land, as the widow of Joseph Davis, a soldier in the last war with Great Britain; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, the memorial of Ithamer W. Beard, Assistant Treasurer of the United States, Boston, Massachusetts, praying that Congress authorize the permanent employment of two clerks in his office; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MALLORY presented the petition of Stephen Michaels, praying to be allowed a pension for diseases contracted while a soldier in the service of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JAMES presented the petition of Azá Arnold, praying the renewal of his patent for a machine called the "double speeder," which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. PRATT presented a memorial of citizens of Washington county, District of Columbia, and of Washington city, residing on Maryland avenue, east of the Capitol, praying that said avenue may be opened and graded, and that the turnpike road, from the termination of that avenue to the District line, may be made free from toll and repaired; which was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. BADGER presented the petition of J. Lucas and others, watchmen employed in the Navy Department, praying additional compensation for extra services rendered by them; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BRIGHT presented a recommendation of the grand jury of the county of Washington, District of Columbia, for an enlargement of the City Hall building for the necessary accommodation of the several courts of the United States for the District of Columbia, and for the preservation of the records of the said courts, including all the land records, wills, and titles to real estate in said District; which was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Also, a resolution of the City Council of Washington city, praying the erection of a new building, or such extension of the City Hall building, as will provide an armory, and accommodations for the criminal courts of the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND RERERRED.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, it was Ordered, That Caty White, widow of William White, have leave to withdraw her petition and papers.

On motion by Mr. DAWSON, it was Ordered, That Jane Irwin have leave to withdraw her petition and papers.

On motion by Mr. BRIGHT, it was Ordered, That the memorial of the officers of the volunteer companies in the District of Columbia, praying the construction of an armory in the city of Washington, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

On motion by Mr. TOUCEY, it was Ordered, That the memorial and papers of Charles Stearns, together with the adverse report thereon, be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. FISH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred a petition of officers of the Navy and Marine Corps who were attached to the gulf squadron during the late war with Mexico, praying to be allowed extra compensation, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of the heirs of Captain William Henry Allen, late of the United States Navy, praying remuneration for important services rendered during the last war with Great Britain, and the payment of prize money for the capture of vessels, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. COOPER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of the heirs of General Stephen Moylan, praying the passage of an act declaring that the non-settlement of the accounts of said Moylan may be no bar to his heirs receiving commutation pay, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill relative to the accounts of General Stephen Moylan, deceased; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred a bill to provide for the surviving officers of the late Texas Navy, reported it back with sundry amendments.

GUANO TRADE.

Mr. CLAYTON. I am requested to present the petition of about two thousand citizens of Delaware, who pray that some constitutional method may be devised for effecting an arrangement by which Peru shall, for a just and proper equivalent, either cede to the United States one of her guano islands, or permit American vessels to take guano without stint or unnecessary restriction, so that the trade in that article may be placed upon the true commercial basis of demand and supply. The memorialists say, that without in the least intending to question the propriety of acquisitions of territory in other quarters, they respectfully suggest that, in their opinion, the purchase of one of those islands would be to the people of the United States of more solid worth than that of the Mesilla valley, Cuba, and all the Antilles besides. Agreeably to the disposition which was made of this subject, on the motion of the Committee on Agriculture the other day, I move that this memorial be referred to the Executive Department.

The PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, unless objected to.

There was no objection.

LAND TITLES IN INDIANA.

Mr. PETTIT. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to grant me leave at this time to introduce two bills, of which I have not given notice, and I shall ask the Senate to put them on their passage now. They are matters which would properly be referable to the committee of which I am chairman—the Committee on Private Land Claims. I say to the Senate that I have thoroughly examined them, in connection with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and I have a letter from him on the subject, which I ask may be read, saying that these bills ought to be passed. I first ask unanimous consent to be allowed to introduce a bill "to ascertain and adjust the titles to certain lands in the State of Indiana."

There being no objection, the bill was read a first and second time by its title, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to constitute the register and receiver of the land office at Vincennes, together with a fit and proper person, learned in the law, and a citizen of Indiana, to be appointed by the President, commissioners to ascertain and adjust the title of any claimant to any tract of land, or any part or subdivision thereof granted by the resolve of Congress, of August 29, 1788, and the act of March 3, 1791, granting lands to the inhabitants and settlers at Vincennes.

Every claimant to a tract of land so granted, or any part thereof, is to file his claim with the register at Vincennes within six months after the publication of the notice provided for in the bill. The commissioners are to hold their meetings at Vincennes, and are to decide in a summary manner all claims respecting the lands granted by the acts referred to. Every claimant who can produce to the commissioners a regular claim of title from the original confirmee to himself, or who shall show, to their satisfaction, a continuous and connected possession in himself, and those under whom he claims for the period of twenty years, or more, preceding the filing of the claim, or can show such claim or title as would bar an action of ejectment in the courts of Indiana, is to be confirmed in his title.

The bill makes other provisions necessary to carry out these objects.

Mr. PETTIT. I ask that the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office be read for the satisfaction of gentlemen.

The Secretary read the letter, as follows:

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, May 15, 1854.

SIR: I have carefully considered the bills presented by you—one "for the relief of Sylvester T. Jerauld," and the other "to ascertain and adjust the titles to certain lands in the State of Indiana," and in view of all the circumstances of the case, am of opinion that, if enacted by Congress, they will afford the relief sought to be obtained; and that it is the only relief that can be extended by Congress in these cases.

With great respect, your obedient servant,
JOHN WILSON, Commissioner.
HON. SMITH MILLER, House of Representatives.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

SYLVESTER T. JERAULD.

Mr. PETTIT. The Committee on Private Land Claims have also instructed me to report a bill for the relief of Sylvester T. Jerauld, assignee of Henry Richaud. It is a very short bill, and I ask for its consideration now.

The bill was accordingly read a first and second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct that location No. 118, containing four hundred acres in township one south, range ten west, second meridian, Indiana; which has been made in favor of Nathaniel Ewing, as assignee of claim No. 1499, in favor of the heirs of H. Richaud, in the report dated the 31st of December, 1809, of the commissioners at Kaskaskia, Illinois, be confirmed. It proposes, also, to authorize the President of the United States, on the production to the General Land Office, of the certificate from the register at Vincennes, Indiana, for the claim, to cause a patent to be issued to Jerauld, as assignee of the interest of the original claimant; but the patent granted is only to operate as a relinquishment on the part of the United States, and is in no way to prejudice any valid adverse right, if such exist.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

AFRICANIZATION OF CUBA.

Mr. MALLORY. I desire to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the recent acts and declarations of the Cuban authorities, considered in connection with Spain's past policy with reference to that island, are calculated to excite the just apprehensions of the Government of the United States, of a settled design to throw Cuba ultimately into the hands of its negro population, and to revive there, within a few hours' sail of our shores, the scenes of San Domingo's revolution, a result which the United States will deem alike inconsistent with their progress, their prosperity, and the civilization of the age.

I do not desire to discuss the resolution now—

Mr. SUMNER. Can the resolution be considered to-day except by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT. It cannot.

Mr. SUMNER. Then I object to its consideration.

Mr. MALLORY. I wish to say to the Senator what I have said heretofore, that I do not desire to discuss the question now. But a resolution on this subject was, a few days ago, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I only desire that this resolution shall go to the committee, and be considered in connection with that.

Mr. SUMNER. The resolution had better lie on the table for the present.

The PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the resolution cannot be considered now.

BLACK WARRIOR DOCUMENT.

Mr. SLIDELL. I offer the following resolution, and I desire to say that the document which I propose to have printed relates to the seizure of the Black Warrior. I receive every day applications for copies of that document, and it is a matter of importance, I think, that we should have some copies of it printed for the use of the Senate.

Resolved, That two thousand copies of House document No. 86, relating to the seizure of the steamer Black Warrior, and other cases of alleged wrongs to American citizens by the authorities of Cuba, be printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT. The resolution goes to the Committee on Printing.

ROMAN CATHOLICS.

Mr. MALLORY. The morning, yesterday, was engrossed, Mr. President, in discussing a question which I presume can meet, at the hands of this body, no practical legislation; and as one of its members I think it necessary to say a word in relation to that discussion. But for a remark of the honorable Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] which will, I think, be productive of misunderstanding, I should not deem it my duty to utter a word. The remark to which I allude, I see in this morning's report of yesterday's proceedings, in the Union.

"Mr. BADGER inquired whether Mr. CASS had seen a statement made in a Catholic paper in St. Louis—the 'Shepherd of the Valley'—that as soon as the Catholics should obtain the supremacy in this country, there would be an end of toleration here?"

"Mr. CASS replied that he had seen the statement in some paper."

"Mr. BADGER asked whether it would not be wise to consider the propriety of adopting some measures, in anticipation of such a result, for securing religious liberty at home?"

"Mr. CASS. This Government has nothing to do with religious liberty at home. That is the business of the States."

"Mr. BADGER inquired, if such an event should happen, what sort of a position should we occupy, asking foreign Governments to secure for our citizens abroad what we could not secure for them at home?"

"Mr. CASS. That is supposing an impossible case."

Mr. President, I do not know whether the remarks of the honorable Senator from North Carolina, and the introduction of the paper to which he refers, were made ironically or not, or whether he meant to say no more than that legislation upon this subject, as presented by the honorable Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CASS,] would be as wise, (and no wiser perhaps,) as legislation upon the subject presented by the honorable Senator from North Carolina himself. Perhaps the latter was the design. However, sir, as it has been introduced into this body, it will certainly, unless some explanation be made, give rise to some feeling and some misapprehension. In relation to the "Shepherd of the Valley," I am happy to state here—and I state it because it is an act of justice due to over two millions of our citizens—that the paper called the "Shepherd of the Valley" is not an organ, a mouth piece, or an exponent of the opinions, religious or otherwise, of any Catholic church, or creed in the United States; but that the bishop of St. Louis, himself, has condemned, and in a circular letter cautioned the Catholics of his diocese against its dangerous ultraism.

Therefore, sir, it is that I would say that no inference should be drawn from anything of this nature, which appears in that paper, against the constitutional loyalty and fidelity of this large body of our fellow citizens.

It is the first time, Mr. President, in this body, that I have ever heard directly or indirectly the creed of any portion of our citizens presented as a matter of discussion. It is the first time that I have ever known any member of the body feel it necessary to rise and say a word upon the subject; and I certainly do not wish or design to do more than to correct any misapprehension which may arise from the remarks of the Senator from North Carolina.

If I thought proper to say more—if I thought it necessary or proper to enter into a defense of the church—I could take my stand here in the Senate of the United States, and fearlessly appeal to the body for the confirmation of the fact that from the settlement of the Colonies to the present hour, no creed has ever exhibited more toleration, more spirit of gentleness and conciliation in this country. I might, too, appeal to the fact that the Catholics of colonial Maryland, having the power to establish religious distinctions, privileges, and disabilities, refused to exercise it, and set a noble example of religious toleration.

I might appeal to your ships and your armies, and show that a majority of this creed man your decks and fill your ranks. I might bring into review all the departments of civil life, and show them adorned by the highest talent and character taken from the members of that creed. And, sir, I might show that, in selecting the chaplains of your Army and Navy, filled as they are with a majority of Catholics, you have passed them by. We have no Catholic chaplains, sir, for our Catholic sailors and soldiers.

Sir, in relation to those denials of sepulture in foreign countries, which the honorable Senator from Michigan brought to our notice yesterday, I have nothing to say now, but that I deplore them; but do not let us misconceive this matter, nor conceal from ourselves the fact that at least one large portion of the Protestant Episcopal ministers of this country, at this very hour, is refusing to the unbaptized their ceremonies of sepulture.

I might say, here, in relation to the performance of these ceremonies to which the Senator from Michigan alluded yesterday, without fear of contradiction, that in this country, at this moment, the feeling of the Catholic church in the United States is in opposition to the refusal of these ceremonies; but, sir, I have no desire to discuss the subject at all. The only object which I have in rising, is to say, that no inference against the disloyalty of these persons should be drawn from the ultraism of a newspaper, whose authority is disclaimed by the bishop of the diocese in which it is published.

Mr. BADGER. I am very sorry to have made any remark yesterday, and should be sorry to make any remark at any time, which would expose the honorable Senator from Florida to an unpleasant sentiment of regret; but I really do not understand for what purpose the honorable gentleman has alluded to the subject of the remark this morning. The reason why I mentioned it yesterday is, I think, sufficiently apparent, and if not seen by everybody, can be, at once, made manifest.

The honorable Senator from Michigan had made a very able and elaborate speech, in which he enforced upon the Senate the propriety of our Government taking some steps to secure, by treaty stipulations with foreign Powers, the enjoyment of unrestricted religious liberty by our citizens when abroad, and in the dominions of foreign countries. I had seen an extract professing to be quoted from a Roman Catholic paper—a religious paper—published at St. Louis, and said to be published under the direction or control of the bishop of that diocese—cum permissione superiorum—in which the statement was made distinctly, that in the event of the Roman Catholics obtaining the numerical ascendancy in one of the States of the Union—not in the country, as erroneously stated in the paper from which the Senator has read—there would be an end of religious freedom in such State, because, said the paper, as it was stated, we know that we are right, and we know that they are wrong.

I knew nothing of the relations subsisting between the bishop of the diocese and the editor of the paper, except the general inference which I drew that the subordinates of the Roman Catholic church are not apt to promulge sentiments which do not meet the approbation of their chiefs and superiors; but I thought it very appropriate to call the attention of the Senate and of the country to the fact that this proposition had been openly announced—if the quotation which I saw had been correctly made from the paper—as a result of the ascendancy of that particular denomination of Christians in one of the States of the Union, and to call attention to this remarkable fact, that this Government has no power or control over the subject of religious freedom or religious intolerance or religious proscription in any of the States of the Union; that a State has a right to establish any amount of religious intolerance it pleases, to prescribe what religious tests it pleases, to make all rights, at least all political rights, dependent upon the progression of a religious faith, and consequently, that if the negotiations which the honorable Senator from Michigan suggested, were opened, we should be met with this difficulty; we propose to a foreign State, by treaty, to secure religious freedom to our subjects visiting the territories of that foreign State:

The question is asked us, "Can you secure to us religious freedom in visiting any of the States of the Union?" The answer is, "we cannot;" it is a subject altogether dependent upon State legislation, and so far are we from being able to secure such religious freedom to your subjects when coming here, that we cannot secure it to our own citizens at home, if a particular State in any instance, should think proper to refuse it, and, therefore, unless it were in the power of the Government to adopt some measures for enforcing at home what they ask to be enforced abroad, we should be placed in the situation of those who demand from others that for which we could give them no equivalent. That is all, sir. It certainly never entered into my head to suppose that I should produce a necessity for vindicating either the patriotism, or gallantry, or uprightness of our Roman Catholic fellow-citizens, of which I never had a doubt.

Mr. MALLORY. I know that the honorable Senator from North Carolina entertains the kindest feeling towards all Christian creeds; but, sir, I trust he will recollect that when an honorable gentleman of his experience and position rises in this body, and calls public attention to an intolerant and unworthy article in an isolated paper upon this subject, and then draws the inference from it that legislation of the character indicated may be just and necessary, it creates an impression that such a contingency as a Catholic legal supremacy may be apprehended.

Mr. BADGER. Well, may it not?

Mr. MALLORY. No, sir.

Mr. BADGER. Why not?

Mr. MALLORY. When he does that, he does by implication charge this particular creed with disloyalty, which, I know, he does not design to charge; and it is to rebut any such presumption of disloyalty from an unauthorized and isolated article that I have deemed it necessary to say a word.

Mr. BADGER. Does the honorable Senator know that it is repudiated by the church itself?

Mr. MALLORY. I have not seen the repudiating circular, but I understand from authority which I cannot possibly doubt that it has been.

Mr. BADGER. I am glad to hear it.

[Here the conversation dropped.]

TEXAS NAVY.

Mr. GWIN. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill to provide for the surviving officers of the late Texas Navy, to report a substitute for the bill; and I am also instructed by the committee to say that the substitute agreed upon is the unanimous sentiment of the committee, and that they intend to adhere to it.

INDIGENT INSANE BILL VETO.

On the motion of Mr. HUNTER, the Senate resumed the reconsideration of the bill making a grant of land to the several States of the Union, for the benefit of indigent insane persons, which had been returned by the President of the United States, with his objections.

Mr. BUTLER addressed the Senate at length in defense of the veto. [A report of his speech will be found in the Appendix.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. STUART in the chair.) The question is upon reconsidering the bill.

Mr. BADGER. I know that the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. BROWN,] who was in his seat a few moments ago, desired to address the Senate on this subject, and I suppose he has stepped out, not expecting that my friend from South Carolina would conclude so soon, though he is usually very brief.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator from Mississippi told me he desired to speak, and but for that I should ask to have this subject postponed for the purpose of taking up the Indian appropriation bill. Probably the Senator from Mississippi will be here directly, and may desire to go on to-day.

Several SENATORS. To-morrow.

Mr. HUNTER. Gentlemen around me say he will not desire to speak now. I do not know how that is.

Mr. BADGER. I wish to suggest that it would be hardly respectful to the Senator from Mississippi to expect him to come in now immediately, and commence discussion on this subject, and I think my friend from Virginia had better let this matter be postponed until to-morrow, and let us take up the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. HUNTER. I am willing to agree to that. Then I move to postpone the further consideration of this bill until to-morrow for that purpose.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I have no wish to interrupt the course of the Senate on this question, nor do I wish to embarrass them in regard to the Indian appropriation bill; but it is very obvious that we ought to get through with that bill, and that we shall discuss it at very great disadvantage if we pursue the plan of dividing it between the remnants of different days, the Indian bill always being in the evening. The subject of that bill is proverbially uninteresting; and we know that it is almost impossible to keep a quorum together at any one time when it is under consideration. I should much prefer that this bill be postponed until some other day, so that we may take up the Indian bill, and dispose of it entirely to-morrow.

I do not think there is any public interest or service which would suffer by that arrangement. I would, therefore, if it be in order, move to amend the motion of the Senator from Virginia by striking out "to-morrow," and inserting "the day after to-morrow," so as to leave us to-morrow to take up and dispose of the Indian bill.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope not. The Senator knows there are a great many amendments yet to come in from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I do not think we can get through with that bill to-morrow. They have kept it open now for a long time, but I understand they have a great many further amendments to propose, and we cannot get through with the bill to-morrow.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. We have only two or three amendments, and I do not think more than one or two of them will occasion discussion. I feel confident, therefore, that we can get through with the bill to-morrow, and I am satisfied that that is much the best arrangement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that the motion which has been made to postpone the further consideration of the question until to-morrow is not amendable.

Mr. BADGER. If I understand the suggestion, I will modify the motion.

Mr. HUNTER. I made the motion to postpone.

Mr. BADGER. I understand the Senator from Arkansas to say that he thinks the Indian appropriation bill can be gotten through with to-morrow.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I think it can.

Mr. HUNTER. I have a different opinion. I am pretty sure we cannot get through with it to-morrow.

Mr. BADGER. I think we had better finish something.

Mr. HUNTER. We had better finish the veto. We cannot finish the Indian bill to-morrow.

Mr. CASS. I desire to say something upon the subject of the veto message. I wish to collect some materials from the Land Office in relation to that matter. They are in a state of preparation, but are not yet ready. My object is to meet some of the statements which were made by the honorable Senator from North Carolina; which bear, I think, not heavily, as he intended, but unjustly on the new States, and I wish to counteract the effect of them.

Mr. HUNTER. I will say to the Senator from Michigan, that other gentlemen are ready to go on with this discussion. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BROWN] and others are prepared to go on.

Mr. CASS. I spoke with relation to taking the vote to-day.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not propose any such thing.

Mr. BROWN. Before the vote is taken on the veto message, I wish to give my views in regard to it. I could go on this evening, and I will do so, if the Senate insist upon it; but still, I would rather speak in the morning. If, however, I am to be postponed even until the day after to-morrow, I should prefer speaking this evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now before the Senate is on the motion to postpone the bill until to-morrow.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I understand that the Chair has decided that the proposition which I made to amend the motion is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is not an amendable motion. If the Senate vote down this proposition, the Senator from Arkansas may make his.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. Then I shall vote in the negative on this motion, with a view of afterwards moving to postpone the further consideration of the subject until the day after to-morrow.

Mr. CASS. I think it would be better to pursue the course suggested by the Senator from Arkansas, and let us go on with the Indian bill to-morrow, if we can dispose of it. The delay of a day is not to be compared with the importance of the necessary investigation.

Mr. HUNTER. If we take that course, I hope it will be with the understanding that when the Indian appropriation bill shall come up, we shall go through with it, and be prepared to take a week on it, if we commence. The amendments which I understand are coming in from the Committee on Indian Affairs are not going to be decided in a day.

Mr. BADGER. I hope we can get through with the bill to-morrow.

Mr. CASS. If we do take up the Indian appropriation bill, it will still be in the power of the Senate at any time to lay that aside, and take up this bill, if they choose.

Mr. BROWN. Before the vote is taken, I should like to know whether it is the understanding of the Senate, that on the day after to-morrow we are to adjourn over, for the purpose of putting the Chamber in order? I have heard some talk of that sort.

Mr. HUNTER. I hardly think there will be any such motion made to-morrow. I hope not. There ought to be some notice of such an adjournment given beforehand, so that Senators who desire to go home may be able to do so.

Mr. BROWN. As I said before, I am willing to speak this evening, or to-morrow; or even if the subject be postponed until the next day, I shall not object; but I do not wish to have it postponed longer than that.

Mr. BADGER. I wish merely to mention, as the occupant of the Chair cannot make the explanation, that it was suggested a few days ago, at the instance of the gentleman who now occupies the chair, [Mr. STUART,] with a view to his accommodation, that an arrangement of the kind alluded to should be made for adjourning over from Thursday, but changes have taken place which render that no longer necessary, and render it proper that that motion should be postponed for another week.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on postponing the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow.

The question being taken, it was found that no quorum voted.

Mr. SLIDELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. BADGER. That motion cannot be made until we have disposed of the pending bill. The question before the Senate is on postponing the further consideration of that bill until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks no question can be taken, so long as there is not a quorum present.

Mr. BADGER. But if the Chair will put the question again, I think a quorum would be shown.

The PRESIDING OFFICER again put the question; and there were—ayes 9, noes 20; no quorum voting.

Mr. WELLER. As there is no quorum present, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 16, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. RICHARDSON took the floor.

Mr. BANKS. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield me the floor for a single moment, to present some resolutions from my State?

Mr. RICHARDSON assented.

Mr. BANKS then, by unanimous consent of the House, presented certain resolutions from the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts.

1. Resolves concerning the Massachusetts claims. Referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

2. Resolves in relation to the preservation of Cape Cod harbor. Laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

3. Resolves in relation to officers, soldiers, and others who served in the war of 1812. Laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RICHARDSON resumed the floor.

Mr. BENNETT. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the consideration of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON.]

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House—

The SPEAKER, (interrupting.) The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to the floor.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw the resolution offered by me some days ago, and modified on yesterday morning, in relation to the termination of the debate on the Nebraska and Kansas bill. I mean the first resolution introduced by me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has a right to withdraw his resolution.

It was accordingly withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the consideration of House bill No. 102, granting lands equally to the several States to aid in the construction of railroads and the support of schools. The pending motion is to recommit this bill to the Committee on Public Lands; and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HAMILTON] is entitled to the floor.

SUSPENSION OF THE RULES.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order, unless the gentleman from Maryland should insist on his right to the floor.

Mr. HAMILTON. If it is the disposition of the House to go into committee, I will not throw any obstacles in the way of its doing so.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw from the files the papers in the case of Rachel Moore, being on a petition for pension, that they may be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

The SPEAKER. It does not require unanimous consent. It can be done, under the rule, at the Clerk's table; and the papers will be withdrawn and referred according to request.

Mr. DUNBAR. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw the papers in the case of T. H. McManus from the files of the House.

Mr. COBB. For what purpose?

Mr. DUNBAR. For the purpose of reference in the Senate.

No objection being made, the request was granted.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HUNT. I ask the consent of the House to allow me to correct a statement which I have just read in the Globe of this morning. I desire to state here publicly, that the statement in the Globe of this morning, in respect to what occurred yesterday, is untrue, as far as my knowledge goes, and as far as I am informed by my friends. The statements which I have read in the other papers are substantially true.*

* The proprietor of the Globe thinks it proper for him to state here that when there is confusion in the House, and many members are on their feet, the Reporters for the Globe, who are inside the bar of the House, on the floor with the members, cannot hear so well as those in the galleries, or at desks outside the bar, above the floor of the House.

The resolution under which the Globe reports the debates says they "shall be subject to the revision of the speakers."

Mr. CRAIGE. In regard to the statement of the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. HUNT,] I will say, that in reference to anything which I said on yesterday, my remarks are substantially reported in the Globe. What he said I did not distinctly hear or understand, and I do not, therefore, undertake to say what he did say. What I said is substantially reported in the Globe, and by that I am willing to stand.

Mr. HUNT. One word in reply. I branded the statement made by the gentleman yesterday, and the brand still remains hissing.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!" from all parts of the Hall.]

Mr. CRAIGE. The gentleman cannot strut into a scrape with me, and sneak out of it in that way.

[Renewed cries of "Order!" all over the House.]

NEBRASKA AND KANSAS.

Order being restored, and the question recurring upon the motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, it was put; and decided in the affirmative.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. OLDS in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee was last in session, it had under consideration House bill (No. 236) for the organization of the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas; and upon that question the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MAXWELL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MAXWELL, in rising to address the committee, alluded to the exciting scenes through which the House has just passed. "Whether the movements were factious or not, he would leave the country to determine by the record. He expressed the hope that the efforts which may hereafter be made, as in the past, to defeat the purposes of the House and mislead the people, will be in vain, and fail.

The bill now under consideration seeks to declare the Missouri law inoperative and void; it contains no startling or extravagant features; it does not aim to interfere with any man's rights or privileges; it imposes no limitation on the liberty of any human being. The proposition relative to the Missouri law does not claim the force of legislation; the whole object is to wipe out a restriction made without the authority of right, and which interferes with the constitutional

Mr. HUNT did not avail himself of this privilege. On a former similar occasion he refused to revise his remarks, and it was thought not worth while to show them to him in this case. Mr. CRAIGE, through a friend, a member, changed one sentence of his remarks. As taken down by a Reporter of the Globe, it read:

"Mr. CRAIGE. I did say that the gentleman was a factionist, and I now repeat it."

It was altered by Mr. CRAIGE to read:

"If the gentleman desires to bully the House, he shall not do it. He shall not bully me. I did say he was a factionist, and I now repeat it."

The remarks of both gentlemen, as reported by the National Intelligencer, follow:

Mr. RICHARDSON then submitted his resolution as modified, and upon it demanded the previous question.

Mr. SAGE moved to lay the resolution on the table, upon which motion he demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. HUNT. If the gentleman will allow me, I will propose an amendment to the resolution as to the time, which will make it more satisfactory to the opponents of the bill.

[Cries of "Hear him!" and "No!" "No!"]

Mr. CRAIGE and others objected.

Mr. HUNT. Then the gentleman compels me reluctantly to take a ground that I would not take—

[Loud cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. CRAIGE. I look upon the gentleman as acting with factionists—

[Renewed cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The question was then taken on the motion to lay the resolution on the table; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 65, nays 134.

Mr. HUNT. I ask that I may be allowed to ask a question, or to say one word by way of explanation of a matter that concerns my feelings.

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

[Cries of "Hear him!" and objections.]

Mr. CRAIGE. I take the same ground that I took before—

[Shouts of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. HUNT. If the gentleman stigmatizes me as a factionist he speaks a falsehood.

[Vociferous shouts of "Order!" and great confusion followed, nearly every member standing.]

Mr. CRAIGE endeavored to be heard amid the din of the many calls to order, but all that could be heard was: "I will exercise my rights, and will object to the gentleman as soon as I would to anybody else."

privileges of one section of the country. The territories of the United States are the property of all, and no power is given to Congress to thwart the purposes of our fathers, and to deny to the citizens of one part privileges which are accorded to the other portion of the country.

He replied to the charge of a "violation of good faith," saying that the Missouri act has never been regarded by the North as of higher sanctity than other laws. As to the accumulated dangers from the passage of this bill, he remarked that where right is, the public conviction will ultimately settle. He continued his remarks until the expiration of the hour allotted in debate, in advocacy of the bill under consideration.

Mr. MAYALL delivered his views in opposition to the bill. He said that the compromise of 1850 was far more objectionable to his constituency than was that of 1820 to the people of the South. If it was policy to repeal one compromise because it was objectionable to the interests and sentiments of one section of the country, why not repeal another compromise which was far more objectionable, generally, to the people of another section?

The object of the friends of the bill, as constantly declared, was to repeal all compromises in relation to the institution of slavery. Why not repeal the compromise of 1850 as well as that of 1820, and all other compromises on the subject? To carry out the idea of the friends of the bill, they should repeal the Constitution, in order to do away with all compromises in regard to the institution of slavery.

This was not a question of ordinary legislation, nor one of mere expediency or of constitutional rights. In his opinion the question was whether the honor of the nation should be maintained; whether the pledges of our forefathers should be preserved, and handed down by us to our posterity to be maintained for all time to come.

He was not opposed to the organization of a territorial government for Nebraska, but was against the bill in its present shape. His objection to the bill was confined almost exclusively to that clause which declared that the acts of 1850 rendered the compromise of 1820 inoperative and void; thereby violating the compromise of 1850, and plunging the country again into slavery agitation. This point he argued at length, and replied to the remarks made by Mr. MACDONALD some time since.

Mr. FLAGLER said that the voice of his immediate constituents came to him in tones deep and unbroken like the cataract on their borders, earnestly remonstrating and protesting against impairing the Missouri compromise, and enjoining upon him the exercise of all the means in his power to oppose the threatened repeal. He was happy to say his own views and feelings were in perfect consonance with those whom he represents.

There were two great principles established at an early period in our history; first, the exercise of power by the National Legislature over the Territories, and secondly, the prohibition of slavery in the Territories, as embodied in the ordinance of 1787. These principles were sanctioned by the master-minds who framed the Constitution. He then gave at length his objections to the bill under consideration.

Mr. GIDDINGS hailed with peculiar interest and joy the discussion of this great question, and to those who introduced it here he tendered his most hearty thanks. They had done more to agitate the great question of humanity in one short month than he had been able to accomplish in the twenty years he had been a member of this body. He would not say that he rejoiced that they had done it in this particular manner, but he did rejoice that the American people were bound to consider all those great and overshadowing interests which now agitated not only this country, but Europe also.

He stood in a peculiar position. He was no partisan; at least, he was not connected with either of those great political parties which had heretofore occupied the attention of the people of the United States, and he rejoiced that the old issues which had heretofore divided these parties had subsided. The land-marks which had distinguished the Whigs and Democrats had become gradually more and more obscure, until they had now disappeared; and no man could draw the line of distinction, or rally the forces of either party upon either side of the House.

Long had he contended that all attempts by the Government to sustain or uphold or maintain slavery outside of the States was unconstitutional and an invasion of the rights of the people of the free States, an outrage upon the Constitution, and a violation of the dearest rights of humanity. He rejoiced that men were coming up to the maintenance of these principles.

Mr. READY obtained the floor.

Mr. SEYMOUR. With the permission of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. READY,] I move that the committee rise.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Mississippi. I ask permission to say one word.

Mr. KEITT. I hope the motion that the committee rise will be withdrawn for a moment.

Mr. WRIGHT. I hope that no gentleman from the State of Mississippi, holding a seat upon this floor, would so far degrade himself as to make a reply to the gentleman who has just spoken.

Mr. GIDDINGS. That is the best argument you can make, and the best one you ever did make.

The question was then taken upon Mr. SEYMOUR's motion; and it was decided in the affirmative.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 236, entitled "An act to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas," but had come to no conclusion thereon.

On motion by Mr. TWEED, the House then adjourned (at twenty minutes of four o'clock) till to-morrow, at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 17, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. WELLER presented a memorial of the officers and soldiers who were wrecked on the steamer Winfield Scott, in the Pacific ocean, on December 2, 1853. The petitioners allege that in consequence of this wreck, the second regiment of infantry lost all its instruments and music valued at $800; that each officer lost or had destroyed all his necessary baggage, valued at from $450 to $500; and that each soldier sustained a loss equal to $100. They pray, therefore, that the several amounts above named, be allowed the officers and soldiers of the regiment who were in the wreck. The petition was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MORTON presented the memorial of Isaac Hulse, praying indemnity for the injury sustained by him in the erection of the barracks of the United States at San Carlos de Barrancas, on a part of his property; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GWIN. I present the memorial of Alexander S. Taylor, of Monterey, who represents that he is in possession of certain manuscript papers and documents of great value in elucidating the early settlement and history of the State of California, extending from the year 1770 to the year 1846; that the aforesaid papers and documents are written in the Spanish language, with the exception of certain portions of comments and statistics gathered by the memorialist from old settlers and officers serving under the government of California prior to the 7th of July, 1846, and copies from scarce Spanish, French, English, and American books; that these documents and papers are of a public character, and, if printed and published, will be of the greatest value to the people of the State of California, and to the interests of the Government of the United States.

The memorialist further states that he is desirous of extending and completing the same by the use of the old Spanish archives of California, now in possession of the United States Surveyor General of California, and the United States Board of Commissioners for ascertaining and settling the land claims of California, which are now in their respective offices in San Francisco; that he is desirous of having this labor performed under his supervision, but that his circumstances are not sufficiently ample to undertake the expense, and he therefore respectfully prays that Congress will appropriate a sum of money to insure the early printing and publishing of these documents, as part of the Government archives, the most of which have never appeared in print in any language. As it is an interesting memorial, I move that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, presented a petition, signed by German inhabitants of the city of Washington, District of Columbia, praying a reduction of the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred certain documents in support of the claim of the children of Leonard Proctor to a pension for services rendered by him during the war of the Revolution, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill to improve the naval service; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

J. W. KELLY'S CONTRACT.

Mr. MORTON. As the morning business is through, I wish to throw myself on the indulgence of the Senate, and ask them to take up the bill for the relief of John W. Kelly. It is a private bill which has been reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and is especially under my charge. I expect to leave the city in a few days, to be absent some five or six weeks, and I am, therefore, anxious to have the bill considered and acted upon before I leave.

Mr. DAWSON. Did you write the report?

Mr. MORTON. I drew up the report, and I can give all the necessary information in regard to it.

Mr. DAWSON. I hope the bill will be taken up.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Postmaster General to have the accounts of John W. Kelly, late a contractor on route 3540, from Bainbridge, Georgia, to Apalachicola, Florida, audited and settled by the proper accounting officers, and to allow him the contract price stipulated to be paid him, $2,400 per annum, from September 1, 1852, to June 30, 1855, the day on which his contract would have expired, deducting therefrom the payments heretofore made on account thereof; and the sum when so ascertained and paid shall be in full of all claims which Kelly may have for damages in consequence of the annulment of his contract on the 21st of February, 1853, by the Post Office Department.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, there is a report accompanying the bill, which sets forth the facts and merits of the case. I presume, however, that it is unnecessary to read that report to the Senate. A laconic statement of the points of the case by me, I presume, will be amply sufficient.

In 1852, the Post Office Department entered into a contract with J. W. Kelly for the transportation of the mail from Bainbridge, in Georgia, to Apalachicola, in Florida. The services under that contract commenced on the 1st of September, 1852. On the 8th day of February ensuing, the Postmaster General, in consequence of false information, as he acknowledged, and as the party giving it also subsequently acknowledged, annulled the contract of Kelly.

Complaint was lodged against the contractor on the 8th of February, 1853, and immediately the contract was annulled. The postmaster at Apalachicola, upon whose statement the contract was annulled, subsequently acknowledged that he had been imposed upon whilst absent from his post, and had given false information to the Post Office Department. But by the time when this acknowledgment was received at the Department, a new contract was advertised for, and a new contractor placed upon the line. The true information received by the Department, established the fact that Kelly had faithfully performed the service up to the very day and hour in which his contract was annulled.

I may here remark, that the Post Office Department pursued in this case a very singular course, and one not usual on such an occasion, in annulling the contract of Kelly without calling on him to show cause why the act should not be done. On the 30th of January, the postmaster at Appalachicola, being then confined to a sick bed in Georgia, wrote a letter to the Postmaster General, in which he said:

"I regret to inform you that Captain Kelly, the contractor for this route, 3540, has, like all his predecessors, abandoned the contract."

Upon this simple information received from the postmaster of Appalachicola, then confined to a sick bed in Georgia, some one hundred and fifty or two hundred miles distant from his post, the Postmaster General annulled the contract. The letter was received on the 8th of February, and on the very same day the contract was annulled. When the postmaster of Appalachicola returned to his post, he wrote a letter to the Department, under date of March 24, 1853, in which he used this language:

"At the date of my first letter, (30th January,) I was confined to my room by sickness in Bainbridge, when I was waited upon by Thomas J. Eppes, Esq., one of the citizens of Appalachicola, then on his way to Washington, who represented to me the facts as set forth in my letter to the Department, assuring me, in addition thereto, that no mail had been received at Appalachicola for a long period, and that Captain Kelly had taken command of the steamer J. Jenkins. Relying upon Mr. Eppes's veracity, I considered it my duty to inform the Department, and was much surprised, on my recovery and return to this place, to find that I had been grossly deceived, and that Captain Kelly actually carried the mail regularly up to the 21st of February, at which time the boat, which had been engaged temporarily, refused to perform the service longer, and I made the new temporary contract for a tri-weekly mail, as authorized by the Department, and which, I am pleased to say, has worked well thus far."

The postmaster at Bainbridge, the other terminus of the route, states, in a letter to the Department, that Captain Kelly, the contractor, had faithfully discharged his duty, "and has not, in one instance, failed to have the mail here connect during the whole time he has been carrying the mail on route 3540."

Under these circumstances, sir, the memorial, accompanied by many certificates, showing the large profit which the memorialist would have received by the continuance of his contract, and the injury which he sustained by its abrogation, was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. His losses are estimated at some six or seven thousand dollars per annum, but the committee have thought it to be only just and proper to present to the Senate a bill giving Mr. Kelly the full amount of his contract price up to the time at which it would have terminated, the first of July, 1855, deducting the payments made to him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I was not in my seat when my colleague began his remarks in relation to this matter, and I do not know whether, in the course of these remarks, any blame or responsibility has been thrown on the Post Office Department, and I rise simply to say, in connection with this affair, that the contract referred to was annulled at the earnest solicitation of my colleague and myself, and the former Representative for Florida in the other House. I shall vote for the bill, of course, with a great deal of pleasure, and I am very glad that my colleague has brought it forward; but I think it proper to make this statement. We made jointly and severally the most earnest appeals to the Postmaster General to abolish that contract, and put the service on another footing, and in abolishing the contract, he acted entirely in compliance with our request. There was a complaint that the service was not being performed, and to my certain knowledge two delegations came on here to protest against the continuance of that state of things.

I have risen merely to relieve the Postmaster General from any imputation of haste in the matter. I was very glad myself that the contract was annulled. The merchants at Appalachicola were not having their mail service done. They had in port shipping with one hundred and sixty bales of cotton, and were doing an immense business, but, according to the representations made to us, they sometimes had no mail for thirty or forty days.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I do not wish to enter into a discussion of the propriety of the course pursued by the Post Office Department with regard to this contract; and I regret even the remarks which have been made by my colleague. I look upon the conduct of the Post Office Department in this whole transaction as highly culpable, and I think my colleague is mistaken in one fact in regard to it. I am not disposed now to go into an elaborate discussion of the course pursued by the Department with regard to this contract, but I wish to correct my colleague in one thing. I think, on examination of the papers on file in the Department, he will not find that I united in any request to the Postmaster General to nullify this contract, or set it aside.

The mail service between these two points had been irregular and inefficient. The inefficiency of the service was the great thing of which the citizens of Appalachicola complained, and I did unite in many memorials and remonstrances to the Department for a more efficient service than there had been on that route previous to that contract which was entered into with Mr. Kelly, whose service commenced on the 1st of September, 1852. I do not think, however, anything will be found under my signature on the files of that Department, asking the Postmaster General to set aside Kelly's contract.

Previous to Mr. Kelly's entering into this service there was a contractor by the name of Floyd, who utterly abandoned the contract. Complaints were placed on file in the Post Office Department against his conduct, but the Department pursued a very different course towards Floyd, who, perhaps, never actually entered into the service, or, at all events, did not perform it efficiently, and shortly afterwards abandoned it, from that which it pursued towards Kelly. When those complaints were lodged against Floyd, the Department notified him of the allegations against him, and called upon him to respond to the charges. Due time elapsed, and no response was received from him. The Post Office Department then nullified, or set aside his contract. After that, an advertisement was published for the same service, and the contract was let to Mr. Kelly. The same course was not pursued towards Kelly, however, that had been pursued towards Floyd. Immediately when complaint was lodged against Mr. Kelly the Department set aside his contract, and since that time the files of the Department show that the information on which it was annulled is erroneous. I do not think that if my colleague examines with care the records of the Post Office Department, or the papers on file, he will find there any communication signed by me advising or recommending the nullification of the contract with Kelly. It is true, when complaints were lodged against him, I appended certificates testifying to the respectability and credibility of the individuals whose names were attached to them. We members of Congress sign a great many papers without examination, but I am sure that no paper will be found in the Department under my signature recommending the annulment of the Kelly contract.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I think my remark will be found substantially correct in every particular. I do not say that any record will be found of the interference of my colleague on that subject, but what I said was, that he himself personally applied to the Postmaster General to rescind this contract. If I am in error, I should like to know it. It is so understood by myself, and I have always acted upon this presumption. I so interfered, and so did Mr. Cabell, and I understood that my colleague also personally so interfered, and made the request. I do not say that he signed a memorial, or a paper, but that he was anxious, with us, to have the contract given to some other party, or put on a different footing, which could only be done by rescinding this contract.

Mr. MORTON. I may have united in urging and recommending an efficient service, though and on this ex parte statement, for it is nothing more, I might have said, presuming the information to be correct, that the contract ought to be set aside. Yet, I think the Post Office Department pursued a very stringent course, to say the least of it, towards this man Kelly, and entirely different from the course which it had pursued towards former contractors. But, as I before remarked, I do not wish to go into a discussion of the action of the Post Office Department with regard to this contract of Kelly's, although I think it is fairly subject to criticism and reprehensible remarks.

Mr. DAWSON. I wish to ascertain from the Senators from Florida whether my understanding of this case is correct. As I understand it, Kelly took the contract, but was removed upon the statements of the postmaster at Appalachicola that the service was not performed. The postmaster of Appalachicola was sick one hundred and fifty or two hundred miles from home, when he gave the letter referred to to a gentleman who was coming on to Washington city. That letter was brought to Washington and presented to the Postmaster General, and upon the information contained in it, the order rescinding Kelly's contract was made. When the postmaster at Appalachicola got home, he found that he had been made an instrument in the hands of a man who was coming to Washington, to make a misrepresentation of the facts, upon which misrepresentation the Post Office Department had acted. When he got back, he wrote to the Department, saying that he had been made an unwilling instrument to tell a falsehood, which led to the rescinding of the contract, when, in point of fact, there had not been a single failure from one end of the line to the other, from the time that Kelly took the contract. The Department then said to Kelly, we have let this contract so that the service may go on, and we cannot remove the man who has now got it, although we are sorry that you have been removed on false representations, but we cannot settle your claim, it must be referred to Congress. The claim is now, however, before us, and it seems there is nobody to blame, except the man who made the false representation, the sick postmaster of Appalachicola, and he is to blame for the whole of this difficulty, because he allowed himself to be used by a man who was coming on here to have the contract rescinded. The object was to get a contract for a tri-weekly mail, when Kelly's contract was but for a weekly mail. Kelly was removed unjustly, for he never failed to discharge his duty.

Mr. MALLORY. I have no doubt that the honorable Senator from Georgia has correctly stated the matter precisely as it is. However, the only object I had in rising at first was, as some imputation seemed to be cast on the Postmaster General, to shield him from anything of the kind, and to say that his action, whatever it was, has been, as I understand, at the earnest solicitation and interference of the delegation from Florida, who were as much mistaken about the true facts of the case as the Postmaster General himself.

Mr. DAWSON. Precisely.

Mr. MORTON. I do not wish to protract the discussion on this bill. The statement of the Senator from Georgia is substantially correct. I omitted before to say to the Senate that the order was made by the Postmaster General with respect to the payment of Kelly. It should be borne in mind that the contract was annulled on the 8th of February, and the Postmaster General, when directing the payment to be made to Kelly for the services which he had performed, said:

"The postmaster at Appalachicola having reported the abandonment of service by Mr. Kelly, on false information derived from others, and there being, moreover, a necessity for a readjustment of the route to procure adequate mail facilities for Appalachicola, which could not be done on the pro rata principle, let Mr. Kelly, late contractor, be paid at his contract rate, from October 1, 1852, to February 21, 1853, subject, however, to finds and deductions."

This gave him pay from the 8th of February, on which day the contract was annulled, until the 21st of February, when the new services commenced upon that route. If Mr. Kelly had then been considered as a defaulting contractor, this additional pay would not have been allowed, but he would, in common parlance, have been termed "black-balled" by the Department. He is not so, and consequently he is now at liberty to make any other contract. If he had been a defaulting contractor, he would not have been paid the amount due him even up to the 8th of February, at the time when the contract was set aside, but would have been subject to damages for the non-performance of the contract. Instead of this, the Postmaster General said, substantially, that he was not a defaulter, but that his contract was taken from him on false information, and, therefore, that he should be paid not only up to the 8th of February, when his contract was annulled, but also up to the 21st of February, when the new contractor commenced the service.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

PORT HURON AND LAKE MICHIGAN RAILROAD.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill granting the right of way over, and depot grounds upon, lands belonging to the United States at and near Fort Gratiot, in the State of Michigan, to the Port Huron and Lake Michigan Railroad Company, have instructed me to report it back with an amendment in the form of a substitute. If there be no objection, I ask for its consideration at this time.

The bill was accordingly considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant to the Port Huron and Lake Michigan Railroad Company the right of way upon land reserved for military purposes at Fort Gratiot, in the State of Michigan; and also the right to take and use other lands belonging to the United States at the same place for the necessary depots: Provided, That he shall be of opinion that the said grants will not be detrimental to the public interest, and that the company pay into the Treasury of the United States the appraised value of the premises required for the depots and other necessary buildings, to be determined by such officer or officers of the Engineer Corps, or such other person or persons as the Department may designate for that purpose: And provided further, That the location and width of the road-way, and the location and boundaries of the depot grounds, and also the conditions on which they are to be possessed and improved shall be determined under the authority, and with the approval of the President: And provided further, That if said railroad and depots shall not be completed within — years, or if at any time after completion the use of said railroad or depots be discontinued or abandoned, the said grant shall cease and determine.

Mr. HUNTER. I desire to ask the Senator from Illinois if this right is left to the discretion of the President or Secretary of War, or whether it is imperative?

Mr. STUART. It is discretionary.

Mr. SHIELDS. This has been prepared in concert with the War Department.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest that there is a blank in the amendment which should be filled.

Mr. STUART. Fill it with "ten," so as to make it "ten years."

The PRESIDENT. If there be no objection that will be done.

There was no objection.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to. The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, the amendment was concurred in, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

LIEUT. STRAIN'S DARIEN EXPEDITION.

Mr. CLAYTON. It will be recollected, Mr. President, that an expedition commanded by Lieutenant Strain, and under the protection of the United States, was sent to the Isthmus of Darien for the purpose of ascertaining, in conjunction with a similar expedition on the part of the Government of Great Britain, the practicability of a canal route across the Isthmus of Darien. A detachment from a United States man-of-war was sent for that purpose, and penetrating the Isthmus, lost their way. It was generally believed, for a long period of time, that they had perished miserably in that wilderness. It turned out at last, however, that they were saved by a boat's crew from her Britannic Majesty's man-of-war Virago. In order to enable the Senate to understand the purpose which I have in view in offering the joint resolution which I desire to introduce, I will now read a part of a letter written by Lieutenant Strain to Commander Edward Marshall, of the Virago, acknowledging the services rendered. The letter is dated "United States Darien Expedition, Cantonment of La Palma, Darien Harbor, April 8, 1854." After a full account of all the dangers incurred, and the services of the boatmen in behalf of the detachment, Lieutenant Strain closes his letter thus:

"Owing to the supply of provisions and clothing which we have received from the Virago, we have now nothing to desire, while the assiduous attentions of your medical officers have removed all, as we have every reason to hope and believe, beyond the reach of danger."

"To the energy and activity of the commander of the relief party, Lieutenant W. C. Forsyth, we owe much, as the condition of some members of our expedition was so precarious, that even a few hours afterwards, we should have arrived too late. To him, Dr. William Ross, and Paymaster W. H. Hills, and the men composing the crew of the paddle box boat, you will please communicate my thanks, and those of my party; and I am well aware that it must be a source of intense satisfaction to them to know that, had it not been for their well directed efforts, thirteen suffering men must inevitably have perished miserably, notwithstanding every effort which I, or the others composing the advanced guard, might have made to save them."

It will be seen, then, from the testimony of our own officer that thirteen suffering Americans were saved by these officers and crew of the British ship. In order to make some acknowledgment to them for this act of humanity and generosity, I beg leave, by the unanimous consent of the Senate, to introduce a "joint resolution manifesting the sense of Congress towards Commander Edward Marshall, commanding her Britannic Majesty's ship Virago, and the officers and crew who were detached by his order for the relief of the surveying party under the command of Lieutenant J. G. Strain," for the purpose of having it referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Unanimous consent was given to the introduction of the joint resolution, and it was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The joint resolution proposes to request the President of the United States to procure gold medals with suitable devices, one to be presented to Commander Edward Marshall, of her Britannic Majesty's ship Virago, one to W. C. Forsyth, First Lieutenant of the Virago, one to Dr. William Ross, and one to Paymaster W. H. Hills, as a testimonial of national gratitude for their generous and humane conduct in extending timely relief to the surveying party under command of Lieutenant Strain. It also authorizes the President to cause to be paid to each of the boat's crew who were engaged in the rescue of the said surveying party, the sum of one hundred dollars each as evidence of the high sense entertained by the Congress of the United States of their generous assistance.

AFRICANIZATION OF CUBA.

Mr. MALLORY. Before the special order is taken up, I ask the Senate to consider the resolution which I submitted yesterday, and which was laid over on the objection of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER.] I desire merely to have it referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, without discussion.

The PRESIDENT. If there be no objection the resolution will be considered.

Mr. SUMNER. I understood from the honorable Senator, yesterday, that he did not desire to consider the resolution at this time.

Mr. MALLORY. That is precisely my desire, not to have it debated at this time, but to send it to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SUMNER. The resolution, as I understand it, cannot go to the Committee on Foreign Relations without seeming to receive a sanction from this body.

Mr. MALLORY. Well, sir, that is a matter for the body to determine; and I now ask the Senate to consider and refer it to the committee. A resolution was introduced sometime ago by the Senator from Louisiana, and discussed somewhat, and referred to that committee; and I shall be prepared to discuss the whole subject when a report shall be made by that committee.

Mr. CHASE. Let the resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on referring it to the Committee on Foreign Relations. It will be read.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the recent acts and declarations of the Cuban authorities, considered in connection with Spain's past policy with reference to that island, are calculated to excite the just apprehensions of the Government of the United States, of a settled design to throw Cuba ultimately into the hands of its negro population, and to revive there, within a few hours' sail of our shores, the scenes of San Domingo's revolution, a result which the United States will deem alike inconsistent with their progress, their prosperity, and the civilization of the age.

Mr. CLAYTON. I think there need be no hesitation in referring the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations. If the vote on the question of its reference would be considered as an indorsement of the propositions contained in the resolution, the honorable Senator from Massachusetts would be justified in his objection; but I think he is mistaken in regard to that. The mere reference of the resolution to the committee expresses no opinion whatever, on the part of the Senate, in regard to the proposition in the resolution. It is, in fact, a mere resolution of inquiry; and, as such, it seems to me, the Senator should make no objection to its reference.

Mr. CHASE. The resolution asserts certain facts. I do not see how it is possible for the Senate even to refer a resolution of that abstract character without appearing at least to give a sanction to the propositions contained in it; and, for one, I am not willing to observe silence while a resolution of that sort receives the action of the Senate.

I am sure the Senator from Florida will not suspect me of any desire to throw any obstacle whatever in the way of a simple resolution of inquiry, if he proposed to address such a resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations. There is no Senator upon this floor to whose action I should be more unwilling to take any exception, than to that honorable Senator; but, sir, in my judgment, this resolution goes something further than a mere inquiry. It asserts distinct facts—facts running through a long line of policy, alleged to have been pursued on the part of the Spanish Government; and I think, before it is referred, it ought to receive some discussion on this floor. So far as I have anything to say upon it, I could proceed as well at this time as at any other; but it seems to me, in view of the business before the Senate, it would be better to postpone the consideration of it until to-morrow, and then take it up during the morning hour.

Mr. MALLORY. I was not prepared for such objections as these. If the resolution does set forth facts, they are facts that I assume, and that I expect, if I have an opportunity, to sustain, and they are not facts set forth by the Senate, or sanctioned by the Senate as facts; but the object of referring the resolution is to ascertain whether the Committee on Foreign Relations will give it a report or not. I do not come here at this hour to ask the sanction of the Senate upon the resolution.

I have no doubt of convincing the Senate when the proper time arrives, that the resolution asserts nothing but facts, and, sir, I feel that it is nothing but an act of courtesy to myself—the honorable Senator from Ohio having permitted the former resolution, submitted by the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. SIDELL,] to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations—that this resolution should also go to that committee, it being on the same subject. I can see no object to be attained in postponing it until to-morrow; because I want to avoid discussion; I do not seek it now; I am not disposed to discuss this measure by halves; but I want it discussed thoroughly, when the Committee on Foreign Relations have reported.

Mr. WELLER. I do not think that the referring of this resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations commits the Senate to an indorsement of its propositions. Suppose that a constituent of my friend from Florida made the same statement by way of a memorial to the Senate. Upon the introduction of that memorial, it would be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and then, when the subject was reported to the Senate, we could enter upon a general discussion of the questions raised.

And certainly the Senate ought to extend the same rule to one of its own members as to one who stands outside, and approaches us by way of memorial or petition. That I consider is the whole question. The Senator from Florida considers those facts to be true, and asks that the Committee on Foreign Relations may be authorized to investigate the subject. When their report comes here, the Senator from Ohio will have an opportunity of entering into the discussion.

Mr. STUART. It seems to me, I submit to the Senator from Florida, that this thing may be disposed of very easily by striking out the word "that" following "resolved," and inserting "that the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire whether," and then let the words of the resolution go on as they now stand. Nobody will be committed by that.

Several SENATORS. Move to amend the resolution.

Mr. STUART. I will move that amendment.

Mr. MALLORY. I have no objection to so modifying the resolution.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

PRINTING OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report in favor of printing two thousand additional copies of Captain Lorenzo Sitgreave's report on the expedition down the Zuni and Colorado rivers, and five thousand copies of the report of the expedition of Captain Marcy on the head waters of Red river. This report is made after a careful investigation; and the number is all we esteemed necessary, and it is deemed that the public service require that they should be printed.

Mr. GWIN. I move that there be three thousand of each printed. They are both very valuable documents.

The amendment was agreed to; and the report as amended was concurred in.

SENATE REPORTING.

Mr. BRIGHT. I am anxious to dispose of a resolution which is pending before the Senate, providing for publishing the debates and proceedings of the Senate. I will call it up, provided it is not to lead to debate. If it should lead to debate, I should certainly be unwilling to do so, and thus interfere with the time of the honorable Senator from Mississippi. I should like the honorable Senator to signify whether it will interfere with him.

Mr. BROWN. I should prefer to proceed now.

Mr. BRIGHT. I will call it up immediately after the honorable Senator has got through.

INDIGENT INSANE BILL VETO.

On the motion of Mr. HUNTER, the Senate resumed the reconsideration of the bill making a grant of land to the several States of the Union, for the benefit of indigent insane persons, which had been returned by the President of the United States, with his objections.

Mr. BROWN then rose and addressed the Senate, on the veto message. A report of his speech will be found in the Appendix.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move to postpone the further consideration of this subject until to-morrow, for the purpose of taking up the resolution which I offered the other day respecting the publication of our debates.

The motion was agreed to.

THE DEBATES OF THE SENATE.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. BRIGHT, on Thursday, the 11th instant.

Mr. BRIGHT. I modify my resolution by striking out all after the word "Resolved," and inserting:

That the Secretary of the Senate contract with the proprietors of the Washington Sentinel for the daily publication of the proceedings and debates of the Senate in that paper, provided the same can be done at a price not exceeding $4 50 per column.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. When this question was under consideration the other day, a great deal was said in reference to the reporting done by the Union, and the fact that that paper was engaged to report the proceedings of the Senate was urged as an argument why we should put other papers in this District upon the same footing. Since the adjournment on that day, I have received a communication from the editor of the Union, which I desire to have read to the Senate.

The Secretary read the communication, as follows:

UNION OFFICE, May 12, 1854.

DEAR SIR: I see from the debate in the Senate on yesterday that the subject of publishing the proceedings and debates of that body is creating some degree of embarrassment. My object in addressing you this note is to remove all cause for embarrassment as far as the Union is concerned. By reference to General Armstrong's letter to the Secretary of the Senate, dated February 11, 1854, you will see that he asked to be relieved from his engagement to publish the entire proceedings and debates of the Senate, and that the arrangement should cease from that date. His letter was laid before the Senate, but the only action taken was to refer it to the Committee on Printing. Not being disposed to abandon the arrangement without the consent of the Senate, General Armstrong, on the advice of the chairman of the committee, as I understand, felt it his duty to go on under the arrangement until the Senate should take further action. Upon the death of General Armstrong, I became the proprietor, and inferred from the fact that he had continued to execute the arrangement up to his death, and seeing that the Senate had taken no action, that it was the wish of the Senate that the arrangement should continue. I accordingly addressed a note to the Committee on Printing, expressing my willingness to go on with the former arrangement. I have continued to publish the proceedings and debates of the Senate up to the present time, executing the arrangement with all the dispatch that was practicable. I knew that the arrangement had yielded no profit to General Armstrong, and I anticipated none to myself; but as I supposed the Senate deemed it important to give to their proceedings an extensive circulation, I was willing to contribute all in my power to that end. As the publication in the Union of the entire proceedings and debates of the Senate is a matter of no pecuniary interest to me, and as I see from the debate yesterday that it is not regarded, by some of the Senators, as a matter of benefit to the country, I respectfully request you to relieve the Senate of any embarrassment growing out of the former arrangement with the Union, by signifying my readiness to terminate the arrangement with this date. I beg leave to add, that I shall continue to keep a reporter in the Senate, and will endeavor to do as full justice to the publication of the proceedings of the body as their importance, and my obligations to the other House will allow.

With sentiments of high regard, I am very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. O. P. NICHOLSON.
Hon. BENJAMIN FITZPATRICK,
Chairman Committee on Printing, &c.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Now, Mr. President, we have got precisely to the point at which I stated, when this matter was under consideration the other day, I hoped we should get. If I understand the amendment which has been made to the resolution, it contemplates simply authorizing the Secretary to contract with the Sentinel alone. It seems to me somewhat strange, when two papers like the Intelligencer and the Union, which have been so long established here, could not maintain themselves at the price paid by the Senate for this service, that the Sentinel, or any other paper established so recently, should be anxious to seek such a position.

I am in favor of placing the proceedings of this body in such a shape as will preserve them; and I think that can be done in the way which I intimated, when I formerly addressed the Senate upon this question. The paper which is now the sole reporter for this body—the Globe—if I am correctly informed, circulates very extensively throughout the Union, and exchanges, perhaps, with seven tenths of the papers throughout the country. If that be the fact, all the information in regard to our proceedings which is necessary for the enlightenment of the country, can be found in that paper. It certainly cannot be for the purpose of enlightening the Senate, that it is proposed to add an additional reporter. Both the papers to which I have referred were engaged in this business. One of them, the Intelligencer, long since declined it; and the communication which has just been read shows that the other cannot sustain itself at the price paid, and avers that this service has never been the source of any pecuniary profit to the proprietor in the transaction of his business. With these facts before us, and with the heavy printing items which form a portion of the expenses of this body and of the other House, it seems to me that it is utterly useless to add a third paper to the list of reporters here. If the Senate pay any attention to the vast expenditure going on in this body and the other House, the cost of printing is a matter worthy of the consideration of the Senate. I have been at some pains to ascertain the amount of money paid annually by this body and by the House of Representatives for these purposes, and I will endeavor (without attempting to trespass too long on the attention of the Senate, for I have already occupied more of their time than I desired to do) to present some of these items. I will take as a basis the reporting for the Globe which is put down by a gentleman who I presume thoroughly understands this matter, and who bases it on statistics before him, as costing about $17,372. That is the actual price, I believe, for the Thirty-Second Congress, assuming the Senate's debates to be equal to those of the House. That is based upon the assumption that the cost of reporting is $4 74 per column, as stated in Mr. Rives's letter. Then the cost of the mere printing is stated in the calculation which I have before me at $10,769. These two items make an aggregate of $28,141, as the cost of reporting and printing in the Globe for a Congress, and that was the sum paid. The gentleman who made this statement says "the above statement is based on the number of columns the debates made for the Thirty-Second Congress, assuming that the Senate is equal to the House."

The Senate subscribes for seven hundred and forty-four copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, which, at nine dollars per Congress, amounts to $6,696. That, added to the total for reporting and publishing in the Daily Globe, makes $34,837. I add to that $10,000 for other items, and this would make a total of $44,837 per Congress, for the debates of the Senate in the Globe. That is quite a large item. I exclude from this calculation the probable cost of paying the three papers, which it was at one time proposed to employ to publish the proceedings. I find that the total paid by the House of Representatives for the Thirty-Second Congress, for these purposes, was $103,807 84. Of this sum $31,995 was paid for the publication of the proceedings in the Daily Globe, and $71,812 84 for the Congressional Globe and Appendix, making a total of $103,807 84. The amount actually paid for books, during the Thirty-Second Congress, was $384,000. I exclude from this calculation many books which have been paid for by the Senate, and by the other House. The work of Mr. Schoolcraft, and some other works, are not included in this calculation. Since the Senator notified me that he was about to call up this resolution, I have not had time to look into all the statistics; but the sum annually paid by this body and by the other branch of Congress, for the publication of books and for the reporting of the two Houses, as exhibited in the statement I have made, amounts to $532,644.

Mr. WELLER. We pay more than $200,000 a year in the State of California alone for our public printing.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. California is scarcely a fair example for the rest of the Union in matters of expenditure. In that State they deal in much larger figures, and on a much larger scale than we do in this part of the country. Now, without intending to be troublesome, or to obtrude my remarks on this body, and without the least hope of influencing any gentleman on this floor, I have deemed it my duty to submit these facts to the consideration of the Senate. I have endeavored to show them the vast amount of money annually expended, and to show that if the Sentinel be placed upon the list of reporters it certainly cannot maintain itself. The result will surely be that we shall be called upon, at the close of the session, to make additional compensation. That paper must incur serious loss in publishing our proceedings. Why the Intelligencer and Union, with their vast circulation, are to be excluded, and the Sentinel alone added to the list of reporters, is to me a mystery. If it be the settled determination of the Senate to place any one paper in this District on the footing on which it is now proposed to place the Sentinel, I hold it to be but fair that all the papers here should be placed on the same footing. But, sir, as I remarked before, I am not disposed to obtrude my views, which may perhaps be peculiar to myself, upon the consideration of this body; and if it is the sense of the Senate, that they will add the Sentinel, I am inclined to think the other papers should be placed upon the same footing. Whether they would undertake to perform the service or not I cannot say. We have the fact before us that one paper, which had a contract, relinquished that contract, and has not reported the proceedings of the Senate during the last two or three years, and the other has given up its contract within the last few days; and the proprietor of the only remaining paper, which does publish our proceedings, has stated, in the face of the Senate, that he cannot live at the prices now paid him. I leave the question for the Senate to determine.

Mr. JOHNSON. We have now but one paper which reports or prints the proceedings of this body, and that is the Globe. At present, we have no contract whatever with the Union, the Intelligencer, or the Sentinel. The proposition now before us is an entirely new one; it does not refer to reporting at all, but proposes to pay the Sentinel $4 50 a column for printing our proceedings. I am not prepared to vote for that proposition when the other papers are not considered in reference to the matter, and when I know, and every one here must know, that if this were a fair and good business for them, and if the price proposed would afford a reasonable profit, they would all be demanding the work at that price. If we pursue this course of providing for each paper separately, we have to consider each case separatim, and each requires as much time for its discussion as would be required to dispose of the whole question at once.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

THURSDAY, MAY 18, 1854.

NEW SERIES.....No. 76.

Nor am I prepared at this moment to vote for the resolution, even if it included the three principal papers of this city, for the simple reason that it then becomes a serious business, and I do not know whether $4 50 per column is a proper amount to be paid or not. I know this, however, that I have never been illiberal in making proper allowances, but have always been in favor of allowing a fair compensation for service done for the public. I know very well there are gentlemen in this body who are opposed to paying any of the city papers anything for printing the debates of this body in either of those papers. Then let us act upon this matter with reference to the whole subject, and let us consider now whether it is most appropriate to take up and act upon this single individual case, or to have the whole matter considered at once and acted upon with reference to all the papers.

Sir, there is another question, a separate and distinct matter from this, which ought not to be forgotten. The Committee on Printing, some time since, before I became a member of it, reported upon a resolution which I, as an individual member of the Senate, offered, and their report is now lying upon the table. My proposition was, in consequence of the showings which had been presented in regard to the expense of reporting and printing for this body by the Globe, to put the Globe upon a permanent and sound footing where it could sustain itself. This was done in consequence of the protest of the gentleman conducting and owning that establishment that he was honestly, constantly, and daily losing by the transaction of that business; and that, too, in very heavy amounts.

The report of the Committee on Printing—which was adverse to the resolution offered by me—recognizes the fact that the Globe cannot, or at least ought not, to go on in this way without additional compensation being paid by the Senate. They base their recommendation for some increase (though it is not to the extent I proposed) on the fact that there has been an advance of twenty per cent. in the wages of hands since the original contract was made, an advance in the price of paper, which has been raised twenty per cent., and an advance in the price of almost everything necessary in such an establishment. They base it also on the fact that the celerity with which the work is now done exceeds anything ever before known, and of course leads to increased expenditures.

The Committee on Printing recognized the fact that the Globe is not now upon a footing which is just and right, and they therefore reported in favor of taking one half the number of copies provided for by my resolution. That report must come up here and be the subject of debate. It relates to the reporting and printing. The resolution now before us relates simply to the printing of the debates. The one ought to be considered without the other; and it seems to me that the reporting should be first considered, as a matter of priority. I think further, that then, as a separate matter, the propriety of printing our debates in the city papers ought to be considered, and considered in reference to all the papers that wish to publish them, and all those that the Senate has hitherto employed for that purpose.

Under these circumstances, and in this view of the case, I believe, though I will not submit the motion, that this question ought to be referred to the Committee on Printing, and that they should investigate the rate of pay that should be allowed for simple printing without reporting; and that the Senate should then take action to authorize a contract to be made with the leading papers of this city—and the whole of them or none—as the Senate itself may direct. I believe that the question ought to be investigated.

As to the price, I do not know but that $4 50 per column is just and right. If it is, I am certainly willing to pay it. This is a matter that ought to be understood and properly decided, so that hereafter no assaults may be made upon our action in our own body, on the ground that we have given too much, or that we have not given enough. There has been no investigation of that question, as I understand, at all. But the Senator from Indiana relies upon this as a proper price, upon the simple declaration of two or three individuals who have heretofore been printers to this body.

Mr. BRIGHT. Does the honorable Senator from Arkansas submit a motion to refer this subject to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir, I do not.

Mr. BRIGHT. I am glad the Senator does not. This is a very simple proposition, and one which can be acted upon by the Senate now as well and intelligently as after the report of a committee shall have been made. The facts of this case are very plain.

In 1848 the Senate, by resolution, directed the Secretary of this body to contract with the proprietors of the Intelligencer and Union newspapers for the publication of our debates and proceedings, at the rate $7 50 per column. The Intelligencer, after publishing them for some time, declined to continue the contract, on the ground that it could not afford to report and publish at that price. Subsequently the Union declined on the same ground, leaving the Senate without the aid of a daily paper in the city, except the Globe.

Under this state of facts, the proprietor of the Sentinel came forward and offered to comply with the terms of our resolution passed in 1848, or, in other words, to do that which the Intelligencer and the Union had refused to do. Then it is that the Union reconsiders its previous withdrawal from our service, and the new proprietor offers to go on with the contract of his predecessor. The proposition of both papers was referred to the Committee on Printing, and by that committee reported back without any recommendation on the subject. Still the Union has gone on reporting and publishing as before, by what authority I know not, nor is it material to my purpose to inquire. I am as willing to see that paper continue in our service as I am anxious to employ the Sentinel, and, therefore, in offering my resolution, I so worded it as not to interfere in any way with any other paper. It was opposed, however, violently by the honorable Senator from Alabama, and others, at the time; and to-day, when we reach its consideration, we are met with another letter from the proprietors of the Union, withdrawing a second time, evidently, to my mind, for the purpose of weakening the application of the Sentinel; for we are met now with the argument, that "we need but one set of reporters, and that the Globe is the only paper that should be paid for publishing our proceedings."

Now, Mr. President, I admit that one set of reporters is all that we need, and I have so modified my resolution as to pay but one set, and they to continue under the control of the proprietor of the Globe, and the Sentinel to copy our debates and proceedings from that paper, and receive therefor $4 50 per column for it. Now, sir, I ask what objection there can be to this?

I repeat what I said on a former occasion, that I think it due to the public that we give them a full report of all that we say and do here; and this can in no way be so well done as by employing the papers I have named. The Sentinel, we know, is ready to do our work at a fair price. I say a fair price, because, after an interview with Mr. J. C. Rives, known to you all as an honest man, and fully informed in such matters, he has assured me that $4 50 cents per column is but a just compensation.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. President, it seems that some years ago the Senate considered that it was necessary to have the debates of this body published in the newspapers of this city. They therefore authorized the Secretary to contract with the Intelligencer and with the Union for that purpose. The object of that, undoubtedly, was to procure a more extensive circulation for the debates of this body. Both those papers have refused to execute that contract. The question of releasing the Union from the obligations of the contract, upon the letter of General Armstrong, was referred to the Committee on Printing. That committee took no action upon the subject except to ask to be discharged. I have a high regard for that committee; but I have no assurance that, if this question were again submitted to them, they would not make a similar report now.

Mr. JOHNSON. The present committee is not the same committee to which the subject was referred. Two out of the three who were then members are not now on the committee.

Mr. WELLER. I think it is very probable that it is a much more efficient committee since my friend from Arkansas was added to it. But there is, I believe, the same chairman, with the same sympathies, and the same prejudices, perhaps.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No, sir; there is a different chairman.

Mr. WELLER. You made a contract with those two papers, and they say they cannot afford to publish our proceedings at the price paid to them. What was your object in making such a contract? It was to extend the circulation of the debates of the Senate. Then here is the printer of the Senate, who is also the publisher of a newspaper in this city, who now proposes to give that circulation to the debates which you originally designed to obtain by entering into a contract with other parties. What is the objection to that? Can there be any other objection than that which may be of a political character? Here are two Democratic newspapers published in this city. They are both, so far as I know, sound papers, supporting the true principles of the Democratic party, and conducted with much ability. One of them is unable to publish the debates at the contract price; the other says it can do it. Why, then, not give it a trial? If the editor of the Sentinel says he can circulate your debates at the rate fixed by the original contract, that being the object you had in view in making the contract, why not allow him to make the experiment? What can be the objection? Surely it is not because the Sentinel was selected for the purpose of executing the printing of the Senate against the wishes of a majority of a certain political party here. It is well known that I and you, Mr. President, (Mr. BAKER occupying the chair,) voted for the printer who was elected, although we are ordinarily understood to be the antipodes of each other in politics. By a strange conjunction of circumstances we were brought together on that occasion, as I am glad to say we are very frequently, especially on appropriations to California.

The object of the Senate is to get their debates as extensively circulated as possible. The original agreement with the newspapers with which it was made has failed. Another editor proposes to give them the circulation of his paper. What possible objection can there be to that? Why, it is said he cannot afford to do it. He is, perhaps, as good a judge of that as my friend from Arkansas. He says he can do it. Then let us make the experiment. I am not aware that we have released the editor of the Union from the obligations of the original contract. That contract bound him to publish the proceedings of this body "until otherwise ordered." We have not otherwise ordered it. He is not, therefore, released; but I am willing to release him. My object is to have the debates of this body as extensively circulated as possible. It is true, the country may not obtain a great deal of advantage in the end from them, for a great many silly things may be said upon this floor, and I say this with all proper respect. A great many foolish things in this way may be extensively circulated; but the people have a right to know what those who are called the wise men of the country have said upon the public measures which come before them. If our object be to enable the people to see what are the proceedings of this body, the larger circulation you give to those proceedings the better. In a representative Government like ours, every opportunity should be given to the people to understand our actions.

I am not deterred by the extraordinary expenses alluded to by my friend from Alabama. I believe the expenses of public printing in the State whence I come have amounted, in a single year, to some $200,000. We are a reading community there. Our people are anxious to know everything that is done in our State Legislature, and we have to incur extraordinary expenses in order to give them that information. But here, sir, is a simple proposition that the editors of the Sentinel shall publish the proceedings of this body, and receive $4 50 a column for so doing. I do not know of any person who objects to it very strenuously, except my worthy friend from Arkansas, who seems to have started off on the wrong track, and I am afraid the further he goes, the further he will be from what I consider right.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator from California is mistaken. I did not object to this. I should be glad to see it done. I am in a somewhat peculiar position in regard to it. I do not object to this proposition, but I did not feel disposed to let it pass without discharging a duty which I felt I owed to the Senate, and that was to state the circumstances which I narrated.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. President, I presume it will be admitted on all hands that the necessity for the publication of the proceedings and debates of this body is for one of two purposes. It is either for the information of the body itself, or for the information of the people at large; or, perhaps, for the information of both. If it be the intention of the Senate to publish its debates solely for the information of the Senate itself, I submit that the publication in the Globe is all that is required; but if the object of the Senate be more extended than that; if we desire, by the employment of stenographers, and by the publication of our debates and proceedings, that information of them shall go beyond the Senate itself, it must be manifest that you should enlarge, in some way, the circulation of the Globe, or that you should publish the debates and proceedings of the Senate in some other paper than the Globe. That is not a political paper; and it has, therefore, no political circulation. For the purpose for which it is designed—as the mere instrument for securing faithful reports of the proceedings and debates of this body—I look upon it as perfect as a paper can be.

I had supposed that my honorable friend from Michigan [Mr. STUART] would offer some amendment, proposing to increase the number of copies of the Globe furnished to the Senate, so that we should be enabled to send to our constituents, through that medium, as accurate a report of the proceedings and debates here as can be produced by anybody who may be employed. He has not submitted such a proposition, and I do not know whether he now designs to do so; but if he does, I shall support it with a great deal of pleasure when it is submitted. I think that it is just as important to us that the information which is embodied in these reports should go to the country, as that we ourselves should have the pleasure, as it may or may not be, to read them over every morning at our seats. We, who are here, hear what is said. It cannot, therefore, be very important that the speeches which are made should be taken down by the stenographers employed at the public expense, and printed every morning and laid upon our tables, merely for our own accommodation. I had the pleasure of listening some days ago to the honorable gentleman who now occupies the chair, [Mr. BADGER], and I had as full an understanding, and a better one, of his views by hearing that argument than I could have by reading it. The great object, the intention in view in incurring this expense for the publication of our proceedings, is that what is published may go to the people for their information. I do believe, therefore, that it would be highly important if, without any exorbitant expense, we could have the proceedings of Congress published in all the papers of the country. If the public Treasury would afford it, they should be published in all the papers of the country. It would be better for ourselves, and I hope it would be better for the country that they should have a full knowledge of what is done here. It would make every gentleman more anxious not to say what his own reason did not approve of; and we should be enabled, I think, to get along better if our proceedings were published everywhere.

The proposition of my friend from Indiana is not so extensive as I was led to hope it would be.

I thought the intention was to authorize the Secretary of this body to engage the Intelligencer, the Union, and the Sentinel at the prices indicated in the resolution to publish the proceedings and debates of this body, if they would consent to publish them within some reasonable time after they occur. I understood that my friend from Michigan intended also, to embrace the Intelligencer and the Union in the programme which he desired to submit.

Mr. STUART. I will offer, as an amendment to the resolution of the Senator from Indiana, the proposition which has been alluded to by the Senator from Maryland, and I shall ask the attention of the Senate for a few minutes while I express my views on the subject. I move to amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "Resolved," and inserting:

That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to contract with the proprietors of the Washington Sentinel, the Washington Union, and the National Intelligencer, for publishing all the proceedings and debates of the Senate, or with such of them as shall desire to do so: Provided, That such publication shall be done within such time as the said Secretary shall deem proper, and at the rate of $4 50 per column; and that he contract with the proprietor of the Globe for five thousand additional copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for the present Congress.

Mr. WELLER. There is no objection to that. Mr. BRIGHT. I accept that. I proposed to offer it myself yesterday morning, if it could then have been agreed upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BADGER.) The original proposition will be so modified:

Mr. JOHNSON. The latter part of the proposition of the Senator from Michigan relates, I believe, to the Congressional Globe and Appendix.

Mr. STUART. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON. I wish to suggest that that feature in regard to the Congressional Globe and Appendix be disconnected from this matter. It is a separate and distinct feature, having relation to the reporting, to which the proposition of the Senator from Indiana has no reference whatever. If that is to be introduced into this question, we might as well adjourn, because I am satisfied it will lead to one week's debate. If that part of the subject be introduced now, I am sure you will not get it determined very soon.

Mr. STUART. The substitute which I have offered, it will be seen, covers in its terms the whole subject of the reporting and publishing of the proceedings and debates of the Senate. Now, I respectfully submit to the Senate that several assertions have been made here which are not precisely correct. The price which has been fixed, and which is now paid for reporting and publishing in the Globe, is $7 50 per column. The experience which all the papers who have attempted to perform this service have had upon the subject, agrees in concluding that $3 50, which was the original sum intended for reporting, is a price that is not remunerative.

Sir, I apprehend that an error has been fallen into in connection with this point. The Intelligencer and Union, publishing as they do political papers, found it not to be remunerative to report and publish the debates of the Senate at $7 50 per column, and the chief difficulty was that $3 50 was not enough for reporting. My amendment looks to relieving the Globe from that difficulty. As reporter and publisher of the proceedings and debates of the Senate, the Globe is continuously a loser. I believe it is also true that $4 is a remunerative price for publishing.

Now, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a few facts connected with this subject, for I certainly think, with all respect to those Senators who have suggested that this is a very plain and simple thing, and ought to be disposed of in a minute or two, that it is a subject which involves very serious considerations in several points of view.

In the first place, it will be seen by an inspection of the Daily Globe, which is laid on our tables, that that paper is not only filled daily with the proceedings of Congress, but almost every day is obliged to publish an extra sheet. Now, it cannot be supposed that the publisher of the proceedings and debates of the Senate will content himself with publishing nothing in respect to the business of the House of Representatives. His object is to publish a paper to the country which will be a desirable paper, and will command patronage. He must, therefore, publish the proceedings of the other House; and if he does, I ask, what room will he have for general intelligence? I am now speaking of the proceeding under these resolutions, if their intention be carried out by the publication of the proceedings and debates as they progress daily, only one day behind the Globe in the publication. I say his paper will be filled, and he will, as often as one half the time, be compelled to have an additional half sheet, simply to give the proceedings of Congress. Then how is he to publish the general intelligence of the country?

Mr. BRIGHT. To what papers does the Senator allude?

Mr. STUART. I speak of the Sentinel, or of any other paper which may publish under the resolution. Let the Senator from Indiana understand me. I say the Senator's inspection of the Daily Globe, which is laid upon our tables, will show that there is a full sheet every day, and an additional half sheet, perhaps as often as every other day, of the proceedings in Congress alone. The resolution looks to the publication of these proceedings daily in other papers being only twenty-four hours behind the publication in the Globe. I repeat to the Senator, and I would like to have him understand it, what room will there be in the Sentinel, or the Union, or the Intelligencer, for general, political, and other intelligence, if this be done? None at all. What will be the consequence? Why you will have your contracts nullified at the outset. You will have a mere pensioner upon your purse. He will take the money, but he cannot publish the proceedings unless he devotes his paper exclusively to them.

Mr. WELLER. May he not publish what he chooses?

Mr. STUART. That suggestion of the Senator from California goes to show the difficulty. The very object which is intended to be provided against here is not to permit a paper to take out and publish what he chooses. That is what has been done heretofore. The Union takes up and publishes the speeches which suit it, the Sentinel such as suit that, and the Intelligencer such as suit that paper. What is the consequence? Why, the Senate professes to send to the country the debates on a subject, while it sends out a partial statement through each of these papers. This goes to show you that the Senate is safe and right, and is performing its whole duty to the country, when it confines its reporting and publishing to the Globe, which gives the whole of the debates on every subject. Then, if these other papers, political in their character, containing general intelligence, suiting the tastes and judgment of the editors, see fit to select from the proceedings of the Senate or of the House, or of both, they have a right to do so; but it goes to the country as their side of the question. The country understands it to be their side of the question, and not to be the current proceedings and debates of the Senate.

It is for this reason that I am opposed to the whole proposition further than remunerating the Globe. I am for remunerating the Globe, and remunerating it in the way suggested, by taking additional copies. Why? Because it amounts to the same thing in point of economy as paying additional dollars, and you get the additional information. I propose to increase the subscription to the Congressional Globe, by the amount of five thousand copies, which will give to each Senator eighty copies, leaving forty surplus. By having this number distributed, you send the whole intelligence of your proceedings to the country. The reports in that paper are what they purport to be, the proceedings and debates of the Senate. I shall, before I get through, propose to refer the whole question to the Committee on Printing, for the purpose of bringing the subject properly before the Senate.

I will now be a little more specific about this matter, and I feel myself bound at this point to offer an apology to the Senate for detaining them at all. I have submitted, thus far, my general views, and now I wish to be a little specific in regard to the particular proposition.

I understand the circulation of the Sentinel to be about nine hundred copies daily. Perhaps I am not correct in this, but such is the report. The cost of publishing the correct debates and proceedings of the Senate for a Congress, at $4 50 a column, would be about $16,000. Then the proposition is to pay $16,000 for a circulation of the debates among nine hundred people. I think that if this were a proposition to publish the proceedings in the National Era upon these terms, I could very soon get a vote from the Senate that it was unconstitutional. To pay $16,000 for each Congress for a circulation of nine hundred comes pretty near to what has been denominated to-day an abuse of power. I do not deny that we have the power.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does the Senator assert, in all seriousness, that, if the proposition were to pay the National Era on the same terms, he could get a vote that it was unconstitutional, simply from the name and character of the paper?

Mr. STUART. I said I thought so.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, sir, that is not a very high estimate of this body, and I think it is rather below the gentleman.

Mr. STUART. I am in the habit of being interrupted; I believe I never yet rose in the Senate but several honorable Senators wished to interrupt me. Now I will furnish the honorable Senator from Arkansas an example which ought to convince him on this point. He got up here in the Senate the other day, and stated that he had previously been an unqualified advocate of the homestead bill, but that he had come to the conclusion that it savored so strongly of abolitionism that he could not go for it any longer. I therefore took it for granted that he probably would be among those who would object to giving this patronage, if I may use that term, to the National Era.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let the Senator state my position exactly as I stated it, and as it is, and I am willing to abide by it, but he has not stated it correctly, and therefore I will claim the privilege of stating it myself in brief terms.

Mr. STUART. I will certainly grant that.

Mr. JOHNSON. My position was this: At the time when I made the remarks to which he has referred, it was supposed, or, at least, I supposed, that there was little or no prospect that the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas could be opened up to the whole country. Hence, as the homestead bill would operate as a mere premium to settlement, and as southern people with their property could not go there, the inevitable effect of the bill would be to abolishize those Territories. Under those circumstances I would not then support the homestead bill. Now, sir, I am very strongly against abolitionism. I believe it to be an unholy thing.

Mr. STUART. I presume the Senator from Arkansas and myself do not differ much on that subject; but if his argument, which is generally understood to be improperly applied to the homestead bill, is sound, it certainly would do much to abolishize the country if we were to adopt the National Era as a medium of communication.

Mr. JOHNSON. I believe the Senator is right in that.

Mr. STUART. The circulation of the Intelligencer is understood to be about nineteen hundred daily, and the circulation of the Union about fifteen hundred daily, and of the Sentinel about nine hundred. Such is my information. I do not vouch for its authenticity, but I understand that the figures which I have stated are about correct. Then, if we should provide for the publication in all these papers, we should pay, as I understand it, about $47,000 every Congress for this circulation of our debates.

Now, sir, take the two facts to which I have referred—the fact that the publication of the current debates of Congress must necessarily exclude most other matter, and the further fact that you increase the expenses from the Treasury about $47,000 per Congress to get this amount of circulation for your proceedings. Is it, in the first place, probable that the papers having the largest circulation, and the surest foundation, would agree to the proposition; and if they did, would the circulation which you would thereby get for your proceedings be commensurate with the expenditure from the Treasury? In other words, I ask in all seriousness, is not the course now pursued by the Senate of paying for the reporting and publication in the Globe, which exchanges with a very large portion of all the papers in the Union, as much as the Senate is called upon to do in a fair exercise of its authority to distribute to the country information in regard to its proceedings?

Now, Mr. President, I feel myself called upon, as a duty that I owe to the great party to which I belong, to say a few words, although with the greatest reluctance, upon the political effect of this movement. Heretofore I have refrained, and I had hoped that I might ever be able to refrain, from saying one word which could even bear the semblance of involving myself, in the least degree, in any controversy, either real or supposed, between the Sentinel and Union, or between the Sentinel or anybody else. But, sir, it has been remarked to-day upon another question, and it is known to the country, that there is a large numerical majority in the Senate of Democratic political principles, such as the present Administration of the country is the exponent of. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to an article in the Sentinel of to-day, in which it treats of the present Executive of the United States and his officers, and then I wish to ask the Democratic portion of this body, and to ask them in fairness, whether they think they are called upon, in a party point of view, to take additional pains to appropriate additional sums out of the public Treasury, to aid and sustain this paper?

Mr. President, I desire to be understood. I have never involved myself in this controversy, and I never will. I have no affection for one paper, or hostility to the other—not one particle; but I may be permitted to say that I have an affection, a deep and abiding affection, for the great principles of the Democratic party. I thought that the movement which was made at the commencement of the session, in respect to the election of a printer for this body, was ill judged. Further than that I have never thought nor said. Further than that I will not say now. But, sir, I wish to call the attention of the Democratic portion of this body to some passages in this article. It says:

"It is very well known to the whole country that the whole weight and influence of the Administration was given to the Free-Soil and Soft-Shell alliance in New York last fall, and that Government minions undertook to ostracize those who objected to such a course of policy, and who predicted that the traitors of 1848 had no claim to confidence or reward, and would be treacherous and treasonable again, whenever an opportunity offered to make treachery and treason profitable. Now, it turns out that on the first test question—the first to which the President and the Democratic party are thoroughly committed—the Van Buren Free-Soilers and Seymour Soft-Shells, sat from emoluments, confident from patronage, and insolent from plunder, present a factious front and make bold war upon an Administration which does not seem to be able to disengage itself from improper commitments and impure entanglements."

"We have been maligned and abused by the low servants of the Administration. We have been maligned and abused by the miserable corps of confidential cronies of the Administration."

Pretty strong terms! But it continues:

"We have been slandered and traduced by their officers, and slandered and traduced by all their adjuncts; so that our moderation is the moderation which we feel from the inspiration of honest purpose. From the beginning the threat has been sent abroad that the Sentinel would be annihilated. We can tell our kind friends, who wish to destroy us, that they may urge their utmost and we will not be hurt. The Sentinel has no fear of annihilation at the hands of bad dramatists, no matter how glorious they may feel; nor at the hands of bad lawyers, no matter how ignorant or how supple they may be."

"In Congress and out of Congress, the whole tribe of Van Buren Free-Soilers, with their Soft-Shell attachment, are factious, revolutionary, and disorganizing. The yeas and nays in the House of Representatives and the wicked movements out of Congress prove it. Yet the Administration, although it has acquiesced in the Nebraska bill, continues to lavish its patronage on the enemies of that bill. The Administration pleads that neither Mr. Cochrane, nor Mr. Fowler, nor any of its multitudinous Free-Soil and Soft-Shell appointees, have taken an active part in anti-Nebraska meetings, and that punishment cannot therefore reach them rightfully. But if these named men have apparently kept quiet, they have not been actually quiet; for their servants and understrappers have been busy, and mischievously laboring, in season and out of season, to defeat the Nebraska bill. Yet General Pierce has not turned his face away from the factionists."

This is a pretty serious charge against the Administration, which is understood before the country to have enlisted its entire strength in favor of the bill referred to. Yet this editor says:

"General Pierce has not turned his face away from the factionists. They still glory in his intimacy, and boast of his confidence. If their vaunting be true, then, indeed, has a dark day fallen on us. But we forbear to say more."

I wish now to call the attention of the Senate to a previous portion of the same article, in which, speaking of Benjamin F. Butler, it says:

"This same Benjamin F. Butler is one of the Buffalo men of 1848; and he is the oldest and most prominent leader, now resident in New York, of the faction which was formed by the fusion of the forces of the Free-Soilers under the command of Mr. Van Buren, and the Soft Shells, who marked time, marched, and halted, turned and wheeled, and changed front to rear, and rear to front, at the bidding of the Secretary of the State, and who have been wielding, since the 4th of March, General Pierce's patronage to punish and crush out the men who procured General Pierce's nomination."

There is in that article a direct, unqualified, vituperative attack upon the Secretary of State and the President of the United States. It charges the Administration with having as its confidential conferrers, the factious opponents of the Nebraska bill.

Now, Mr. President, as I have said, I do not mean to involve myself in this quarrel. I cannot be misunderstood. I am neither for the Union nor for the Sentinel; nor am I against either; but I ask Senators here, who I know hold the interests of the great Democratic party as sacred as I do, whether it is best to go forward now unnecessarily with this expenditure to such a paper. I emphasize the word "unnecessarily," because, I repeat, that the reports in the Globe are all sufficient for the interests of the Senate and the benefit of the country as a whole, leaving all the other papers the right and the opportunity to publish from it as much as they choose. I ask whether it is best to go forward and add $16,000 or $17,000 per Congress out of the Treasury to help to sustain any paper, Sentinel or Union, or anything else, which publishes such attacks upon the Administration as a whole, and upon the Secretary of State and the President by name?

Sir, I am very sorry to have detained the Senate thus long, especially upon one branch of remarks which I confess are very unpleasant; but I do think it is time for those who have the power, if they have it, to be at least prudent in respect to the true interests of the Democratic party. I now move to refer the whole subject to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BRIGHT. When I accepted the proposition of the honorable Senator from Michigan, I did it under the supposition that he was friendly to the measure. I am now satisfied, from the tone and temper of his speech, that he is opposed to the object I have in view, and I therefore withdraw the acceptance, and ask for a vote on the resolution which I originally introduced. I shall make no reply to the speech of the Senator, for the reason that I think the subject he has seen proper to introduce is one, the discussion of which would prove unprofitable in many respects at this time. If, upon some other more appropriate occasion, the honorable Senator from Michigan shall feel himself called upon to enter upon a justification of the course of this Administration, in taking to its embrace, as charged in that article, a set of men in this country known as Free-Soil Democrats, whose chief merit and distinction consists in having deserted their party in the hour of its greatest trials, both at the ballot-box and in the halls of Congress, I am quite sure he can find those around him neither afraid nor unwilling to take issue with him. But these are topics out of place at this time, and that I would much rather not refer to under any circumstances.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. When the Senator from Indiana was up first, he intimated, in very direct terms, that the course pursued by the Union in declining the contract was for the purpose of affecting the action of the Senate in reference to the Sentinel. Do I understand the Senator to say that I have brought it up for that purpose?

Mr. BRIGHT. I do not think there was anything in the remarks which I made which intimated that I inferred that that was the course of the Union. I did not couple the honorable Senator with my remarks; however, I will state now, though, that I have no doubt that the object of the Union in withdrawing was to defeat the proposition which I have offered.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I ask the Senator if I understand him to say that I was cognizant of the fact?

Mr. BRIGHT. I do not refer to the honorable Senator; for I do not know that he had any knowledge upon the subject.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. All the knowledge I have on the subject, is the communication from the editor of the Union. I am the advocate neither of the Union nor of the Sentinel. My object is to protect the Treasury, and to get the reporting for the Senate done on as economical terms as possible. I have had no conversation with the editor of the Union on the subject, except a mere casual one on my way from my lodgings to the Capitol. In that conversation he apprised me of his design to make a communication of that character to me. I had understood before that the Union was tired of the contract, and desired to be released from it as soon as it could. He never said so to me, but such was my understanding through a reliable source. It is perhaps very well for gentlemen to get up here for the purpose of strengthening the Sentinel, and say that the Union was prompted to such a course by such an influence; not, I presume, that the Union has done or said anything to induce them to believe that, but from the mere fact that there is said to be a contest between the two papers, both of which belong to the Democratic party. I have no object to accomplish by my course to further the objects of the Union, or, if I could, to prostrate or in the least injuriously to affect the Sentinel. My relations with the editors of both papers are of the best character, so far as I know or believe. As an evidence of my disinterestedness upon this subject, I will state that I propose to take neither of them as reporters; but to take a paper that does not belong to any party; and I really think it unfair and improper, when it is proved, not by the Union, but by a paper longer established than the Union; that it cannot live on the contract, that gentlemen should get up here and impute such motives to the gentleman who conducts the Union. I have no idea that he was prompted by any such motives as those attributed to him by the honorable gentleman from Indiana.

My acquaintance, sir, with the editor of the Union is not of long duration. I knew but little of him until I met him in this city this winter. I have not been in the habit of visiting his office very often, and then usually on business, though standing in such relations that I might often have done so, for the reason that I am connected with the printing of this body, as a member of the Committee on Printing. I have no hostile feelings to the gentleman who conducts the Sentinel, nor have I any prepossessions for this paper or that paper. My whole course has been prompted solely by a desire to protect the Treasury, and put the reporting of the Senate upon proper terms—upon such terms as would enable the publisher to live.

Mr. BROWN. It does not seem to me that there ought to be any difficulty in settling this matter. We have one official reporter, and I think we ought to have but one. The Globe is executing the reporting for the Senate admirably; better, I undertake to say, than it was ever done before for anybody, either for Congress, or for the British Parliament, or for any other legislative body. It is the best official report that ever was published. I am for continuing it, and I want to remunerate the publisher in a proper way. He prefers that we shall take a larger number of the Congressional Globe, and he puts it upon the precise reason which recommends it in the strongest manner to my mind, and that is, that by taking the paper we diffuse the intelligence among the people. It is better to pay the money for the paper, and to circulate it, than it is to pay a larger sum for the simple reporting, and not for the circulation of the document. I have no idea that we should put our light under a bushel. If the reports are worth making, they are worth circulating; and I am, therefore, for accepting some such proposition as is made by the conductor of the Globe, to take a larger number of his paper—whatever number shall be found necessary to remunerate him for his expense and trouble in making the reports. I understand that it will take about ninety copies to each Senator to do that, and I am prepared to vote for that number. I would not vote him a larger sum for the reporting, nor a larger sum for the printing, because that would be simply paying the money without diffusing the intelligence among the people. Pay him for that what you do now, and remunerate him by taking a larger number of his publication.

Then, as to these other papers, I do not consider it a matter of so much consequence whether you pay a few dollars less, or a few dollars more. The great object is to let our twenty-three millions of constituents know what we are doing here. Then I am for paying to the Union, to the Sentin-nel, and to the Intelligencer, and, if gentlemen will insist upon it, though I should not be much in favor of that proposition, you may take in the Era, to copy from the Globe, but not to report. I would pay them nothing for reporting. They should not report if they wished to do it, because that subjects you to the necessity of correcting half a dozen copies every morning, or else contradictory accounts go before the country of what you have been saying the day before. Let there be one report. Then require the other papers to copy from that, and give credit for it, saying that it is copied, "by authority, from the Congressional Globe." Make your contracts and say we will pay—I do not know how much would be fair—say $7. If $7 are enough, pay that, and let any one or two, or all of them, come in and contract at that price; and when they undertake to publish, make them publish the whole proceedings, and do all within twenty-four or forty-eight hours after they appear in the Globe. I have no idea of paying a man to publish the proceedings of the Senate ten, or fifteen, or twenty days, or a month after they have transpired. What is the use of such publication? The public mind has been engaged about other matters. They are not going to turn back and investigate the subject which has been a month passed; and if the Union, and Intelligencer, and Sentinel are willing to copy from the Globe, for a certain specified sum, I am ready to pay for it, provided they will do it as an official act, as an authorized act, simply to copy from the printed report in the Globe.

I think that settles the whole controversy. What matters it whether we pay a little more or a little less, if we spread the intelligence of what we are doing here before the country, through the several journals? I should either like to see my friend from Indiana amend his proposition in that form, or if it be sent to the committee, that they shall be instructed to bring us in a proposition of that kind. I have no partiality among the papers. God knows I have very little reason to be in a very good humor with either, especially with the Union. The Sentinel has not done me any great favors, but still it has been civil enough and polite enough. Our old friends of the Intelligencer owe me nothing, and I owe them nothing. Therefore, I am not influenced in my vote on this subject by considerations of private friendship. I do not suppose any other Senator is so influenced. My object in voting for this is, that what we are doing here should go out, through all the journals, to the people, so that every man who chooses may know precisely what we are doing; and when he reads the paper may be able to say, "I am reading an official report of what is going on in the Senate; it is not guess work; I am not reading a garbled account of a gentleman's speech by a letter-writer; I am not reading a garbled account, or a mere synopsis by a writer, which gives not what was said, but the impressions made on his mind; I am reading precisely what the Senator said." Then he has accurate information. He can make up his mind, as a man of sense, as to whether what was said was right or wrong; and I am willing that he shall take it either through the Union, through the Intelligencer, or through the Sentinel, just according to the several predilections of each man. I am not for patronizing one of them over the other. If the Union does not think proper to take the contract, let it not take it. If the Intelligencer thinks proper to take it, let it take it. If the Sentinel cannot publish the debates at the rates we propose, leave it out. Make the proposition the same to each one of them. It seems to me this will settle the whole difficulty upon an intelligible and justifiable principle.

Mr. WELLER. If the Senate is ready to vote on the question now, I have nothing to say.

Mr. BROWN. What is the precise motion? I have been out.

Mr. WELLER. Undoubtedly, after the Senator has occupied the attention of the Senate for ten or fifteen minutes, the legitimate presumption is that he knew what the question was.

Mr. BROWN. Undoubtedly. I only understand what is the general subject before us; but what the precise question before the Senate is, I do not understand, nor is it necessary that I should understand that to address myself to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WALKER.)

The question is on the motion to refer the whole subject to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. WELLER. The Senator from Mississippi undoubtedly spoke to the question. There is no doubt about that; I am only astonished that he thought it necessary to inquire after he was through.

Mr. BROWN. I guessed it.

Mr. WELLER. The usual rule is to ascertain what the question is, and then to speak upon it. My friend from Mississippi, with his strong instincts, found out what the question was before he ascended it from the Chair, and, I must say, spoke very sensibly upon it. [Laughter.]

I am very sorry that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. STUART] has found it necessary to make the remarks which he has made to-day. The only effect of those remarks would be to get up a dispute here among the Democrats, to the enjoyment of our Whig friends upon the other side, and, no doubt, to the unprofitableness of the Democratic party. That Senator knew very well that there was a certain portion of his colleagues here in the Democratic party who were opposed to the policy which had been adopted by the Administration in regard to the distribution of the public patronage. There are many of us of the old line who cannot forgive the Free-Soil faction of 1848, for treacherously betraying the Democratic party. We have believed that the lowest seats in the Democratic church should be assigned to them; and that, in the distribution of the public favor, the good and true men—the honest portion of the Democratic party—who stood by it in adversity as well as in prosperity, should receive the public patronage. Now, sir, the Senator from Michigan has dragged this in, and although he disclaims having any personal feeling whatever, so far as the Sentinel and Union are concerned, proceeds to read the Sentinel out of the Democratic church. I deny his authority to read the editors of that paper out of the Democratic party. I undertake to say that, upon all questions connected with the Democratic party, and with the principles of that party, the Sentinel has as warmly and as zealously sustained it, in all respects, as the Senator from Michigan. I claim, Mr. President, to be a Democrat.

Mr. STUART. As this matter has some reference to me personally, I beg to correct the Senator. I certainly did not make any effort to read the Sentinel out of the Democratic party. I simply read from the Sentinel's article of to-day its attacks upon the President and upon the Secretary of State, and asked whether it was the duty of the Democratic party in the Senate to take additional pains, and appropriate some $16,000 out of the Treasury, to sustain the paper that pursued that course—whether it would be wise to do so? I never undertook to say whether that was a party paper or not.

Mr. WELLER. I regret very much to be compelled to say that two thirds of the article which the Senator has read meets the approbation of my judgment, and I should be a hypocrite if I did not avow it here. Now, sir, the extracts which the Senator has read from the Sentinel do not satisfy me that it is an anti-Democratic paper, nor do I regard the head of the Administration as the Democratic party. We have certain great principles which we have heretofore rigidly and faithfully maintained, and I am not disposed to sustain the Administration except so far as that Administration may stand by those principles; and when it sees proper to confer its favors upon the Free-Soilers of 1848, you cannot expect that that will receive the sanction of my judgment. In the principles of the Administration I cordially concur; but its policy in this particular I have never approved. This opinion I am not hypocrite enough to conceal.

Now, what was the object of the introduction of this? The Senator knew very well that there were certain Senators here, as they had shown in Executive session, who were opposed to this policy. He desired to provoke a discussion, and, probably, put himself in the position of the special advocate of the Administration; and all of us who do not choose to come up and proscribe the Sentinel upon his dicit were henceforth to be regarded as enemies of the powers that be. Or did he suppose we had not the moral courage to avow our honest opinions? Mr. President, no man has more confidence in the honesty and integrity of the present Chief Magistrate than I have. There is no one who will go further in sustaining him, so long as he stands (where he has thus far faithfully stood) by Democratic principles, than I will; and there will be none who will denounce him with more violence when he departs from them. I am the slave of no man. Whilst I sustain the sound and just principles upon which the present Executive has administered the Government, I claim the right as a Democratic Senator, to disapprove the policy adopted in the distribution of the Federal patronage. When I dare not do this, I will resign my seat and go home.

But, sir, I do not desire now to go into a discussion of this question. The time may come when, in the discharge of my duties here as an independent Senator, I may be called upon to speak, and I shall speak then as I have spoken in times past, without restraint, without fear, favor, or affection. It is very strange that a simple proposition to put the Sentinel upon the same terms recently occupied and abandoned by the National Intelligencer and Union should have provoked these remarks from the Senator from Michigan. They were wholly unnecessary. They were calculated, if they produced any effect whatever, to sow the seeds of discord in the party to which he and I belong; and lead to unprofitable debate. I will not now stop to inquire which of us is the best exponent of Democratic principles. I know that I am a Democrat, and have been so all my life. I have shown it by my acts and by my votes; and if the Senator has as clean a record—and I say nothing about that—as I have, we shall both pass current in the country as Democrats. If I were compelled to express an opinion upon the subject, I should claim that upon some of the great questions of the country I am sounder than he is. That is my private opinion; but I do not wish to express it publicly. [Laughter.]

Mr. STUART. Mr. President, I have no disposition to enter into any personal controversy with the Senator from California, and I think I may say, further, that it does not lie in his power to provoke me to such a controversy. If he is satisfied with sounding to the country, as he has done within the last five minutes, his own fame as a Democrat, I have not the slightest disposition to tarnish it. I shall leave the country to find out how long I have been a Democrat, acting on the very old maxim, a tolerably sound one, that it is not wise for me at least to trumpet my own fame.

Now, sir, I have provoked no discussion respecting the democracy of the Sentinel, none respecting the democracy of the Union, none respecting the democracy of the President of the United States, or the Secretary of State. I simply, sir, met this proposition, which is, on this day, to appropriate about $17,000 out of the public Treasury for the purpose of publishing the debates and proceedings of the Senate in the Washington Sentinel. I read from the editorial article in that paper of to-day attacks upon the Secretary of State and the President of the United States by name, and upon the Administration in the aggregate, and then I asked what would the country say if the Senate of the United States, having a large Democratic majority, on the very same day that that article appeared, thus attacking the Administration, which is the representative now of the great Democratic principles of the country, selected the paper, and put $17,000 into its pockets? I thought the inference would be unfavorable to the Democratic party at large throughout the country. I think so now. I thought that any unnecessary effort to sustain any paper that does that, no matter what it is, be it Union, or Sentinel, or anything else, was bad policy for the Democratic party. In this I do not think I have legitimately placed myself under any attempted denunciation of the honorable Senator from California. Not at all. I said distinctly that I had no personal feeling, no political feeling; it was a mere question of discretion. So far as relates to the editor of the Union, I have not the honor of knowing him; and so far as relates to one of the editors of the Sentinel, I know him but partially, and am on the most friendly terms with him.

I shall certainly not consent to detain the Senate longer, because it is not necessary to exculpate myself from what I have never done, and no assertion of the honorable Senator from California can give any construction to my remarks other than what the remarks themselves indicate.

Mr. WELLER. Will the Secretary be good enough to read the amendment submitted by the Senator from Michigan to the original proposition?

The Secretary read as follows: Strike out all after the word "Resolved," and insert:

That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to contract with the proprietors of the Washington Sentinel, Washington Union, and the National Intelligencer, for publishing all the proceedings and debates of the Senate—

Mr. WELLER. That will do, Mr. Secretary. If I understand it, that proposition was submitted this morning by the Senator from Michigan as an amendment to the original resolution submitted by the Senator from Indiana. The Senator then comes in and reads an article from the Sentinel, from which he endeavors to demonstrate to the Democratic party that it would be exceedingly impolitic to bestow any patronage on that paper. Now, sir, I submit the question to the Senate, whether, after that Senator has submitted a resolution for the employment of that paper as one of the printers of our proceedings, it was proper for him to read from its editorials to show that the editor was outside of a "healthy organization?" The Senator from Michigan has put himself in that position. He tells the Senate that his only object in reading the article was to show that the Democratic party in the Senate ought to hesitate before they give $17,000—(I think it was $16,000 a few minutes ago; he has risen a thousand)—to a paper that was denouncing the Administration, or, at least, the President and Secretary of State. Then what does he do? Why, he is the very Senator who submits the motion to give employment to that paper which is thus outside of the Democratic party! Now, sir, it is very seldom that a Senator feels compelled to vote against a proposition which he has introduced himself! I have frequently known Senators to make speeches one way, and then vote the other way; but it is very rarely that a Senator introduces a proposition, makes a speech, and then moves to get rid of the question, by referring it to the Committee on Printing. Yet the Senator from Michigan has seen proper to place himself in that position! He introduces a proposition to employ the Sentinel to publish the debates, and then labors hard to prove that it is unworthy of our support.

In speaking of my Democracy I did not desire to trumpet my fame to the country. I am, perhaps, as well known to the country as the Senator from Michigan. I desire no discussion with him; I will say nothing to provoke him, for nothing but the most kindly relations have subsisted between us hitherto. He says that he would not do anything to provoke a debate with me. I am sure he meant nothing personal by that. It was only because he did not desire that members of the same Democratic family should be brought in collision here. So understanding it I pass it by.

Mr. STUART. I meant to say this. I regard the Senator from California as my political and personal friend; and I meant to say that I would not do anything to provoke any personal discussion. That is what I meant.

Mr. WELLER. I supposed it was of a political character—

Mr. STUART. No, sir.

Mr. WELLER. As it was very inexpedient, of course, to get up a discussion among us Democrats, especially when the enemy is in the field. There are enough of the Whig party to fight against, without warring against each other. The time will come when we shall have to divide. There is no doubt about that. We brought this Administration into power with the votes of all sorts of people. [Laughter.] We had Free-Soilers and Abolitionists uniting with the sound portion of the Democratic party of the North. We had disunionists and fire-eaters in the South; and all, by force of circumstances, were thrown into the Democratic party, and brought this Administration into power. The Democratic party, no doubt, requires purging. [Laughter.] I have no doubt the patient will be very much reduced in strength by that purgation; but he will be a sounder and safer man hereafter. You have got to get rid of these disagreeable adjuncts—those excrescences upon the Democratic party. But now I desire to say simply this, that so far as the remarks of the Sentinel upon this Administration in appointing men to office who were notorious Free-Soilers in 1848, and who treacherously betrayed the party, I indorse it to the utmost extent. Nor do I like the policy which retains men in office whose influence is now used to defeat the great question now pending in the House of Representatives. If I were President of the United States, I should bestow my patronage upon sound and true men, not upon those who, in days of danger and of trial, shamefully deserted, and escaped to the enemy. For truckling, time-serving politicians, who shift the sails to suit every popular breeze, I have no respect. There are true men enough in this country to administer the Government.

But, Mr. President, I will not prolong this debate. I am anxious to have the question disposed of.

Mr. BROWN. I am not going to enter into any controversy with my friend from California; but I must say just here, that I protest against this thing of repeating constantly that there is a portion of the Democratic party that is not honest. Now, I insist upon the honesty of the whole party.

Mr. WELLER. The whole party that voted for Pierce?

Mr. BROWN. Every one of them. [Laughter.] I think it is the most honest party in the world, the most honest party that ever lived, or ever had an existence anywhere. [Renewed laughter.] Brutus was an honorable man; Cæsar was an honorable man; we are all honorable men. This thing of saying that some are honest men and some are not would get up quarreling in the family, and I do not want that. [Renewed laughter.] But what I want to do is to offer an amendment to the resolution which, I think, if Senators will listen to it, will settle this whole matter.

Mr. JOHNSON. With the permission of my friend from Mississippi, I desire to ask if the Senator from Michigan has made the amendment which I suggested?

Mr. STUART. I have made the amendment suggested by the Senator, as to the time of publication, except that I put it at twenty-four hours after the publication in the Daily Globe.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let it be read.

Mr. BROWN. Read the amendment which I propose.

The Secretary read the amendment. It is to strike out "to be done within such time as the said Secretary shall deem proper," and insert "shall be copied from the Globe, by authority, and shall be published within forty-eight hours after the same appears in the Globe."

Mr. BROWN. Now read the whole.

Mr. STUART. I accept that as a part of my amendment.

The amendment, as modified, was read, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Senate be, and is hereby, directed to contract with the proprietors of the Washington Sentinel, Washington Union, and National Intelligencer, for publishing all the proceedings and debates of the Senate, or with such of them as shall desire to do so: Provided, That such publication shall be copied from the Globe, by authority, and shall be published within forty-eight hours after the same appears in the Globe, and at the rate of $4 50 per column; and that he contract with the proprietor of the Globe for five thousand additional copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for the present Congress.

Mr. WALKER. The very last branch of the proposition now before the Senate, it occurs to me, will require another amendment. I can see no object in purchasing five thousand copies of the Congressional Globe for this Congress only. If I can understand the design of the Senate, it is to put the Globe on the footing of the Senate taking five thousand copies of it, as a continuous thing, more than it is now taking. The amendment would apply to the series of the Globe for this Congress only.

Mr. BADGER. I will say to my friend, that this whole resolution applies to this Congress only; but with the understanding that it will be followed out.

Mr. BROWN. We have no right to bind a future Congress in regard to a matter of contract.

Mr. GWIN. Is the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Printing pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FITZPATRICK in the chair.) There is no motion pending, as the Chair understands, to refer it.

Mr. GWIN. I make that motion.

Mr. BROWN. I understand the Senator from Michigan accepts my amendment.

Mr. STUART. Certainly.
Mr. BRIGHT. What is the proposition now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To refer the resolution and amendment to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BRIGHT. When the honorable Senator from Michigan offered his amendment, I stated that I was willing to accept it. I think, in doing that, I showed that I had no personal feeling in this matter. Senators have spoken of a contest here between papers, yourself, sir, (Mr. FITZPATRICK being in the chair,) among the number. I participate in no contest whatever. I can say that I am as free from personal feeling in what I have said as any other gentleman who has spoken. My object in introducing the proposition was to benefit the public, not in individuals; and as the Intelligencer and Union had both declined that which is now offered the Sentinel, I certainly did not feel that it was offering any great boon to the proprietors of that paper. Now, Mr. President, I have indicated my feelings as regards this matter, by offering to accept the amendment of the honorable Senator from Michigan; that gives the same service to each paper, and the same price for it; and I again repeat, that I will accept it, if the motion to refer is withdrawn, and a direct vote can be had.

Some objection is made to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, on the ground that it proposes to take five thousand additional copies of the Globe. I think that but fair. If the Globe pays the increased expense of reporting our proceedings, additional compensation should be given the proprietor by increasing the number of extra copies we take, in order to indemnify him therefor. This is the most unexceptionable manner in which it can be done, for the reason that it gives the extra copies to Senators for distribution among their constituents. This is not money thrown away. They are valuable as books of reference in all time to come; and they are worth all that we pay for them, if properly distributed.

I hope the Senate will come to a vote, and finally dispose of this subject.

Mr. GWIN. I renew my motion to refer to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have not the most remote idea that that motion will prevail; but if it should, I will renew my original resolution.

Mr. GWIN. I happen to differ in opinion from the Senator on that point. I undertake to say no member of the Senate knows what expense will be incurred by the Senate under the resolution, if it passes. It is not now the same proposition that was at first presented to the Senate to-day. It has been changed entirely in its features since it came before the Senate, and I am entirely opposed to it. I am opposed to it in every form in which it can come to increase the number of papers in which the entire proceedings of this body are to be published. I undertake to say that there is not a man in the United States, not one outside of the Globe office, who continuously reads the whole proceedings of the two Houses of Congress. There is not a man who takes up that paper, and goes through, in detail, the whole of those proceedings. It is very important to have a full record among the archives of the country of the proceedings of the two Houses of Congress, and to that extent we should go, in my opinion, and no further.

So far as I am concerned, I am anxious to sustain the Globe; but I am utterly opposed to giving this printing to the newspapers of this District, and fastening them upon the Treasury, for the purpose of maintaining their political existence, for they are political papers. I think that when we get an official record, a paper that gives the official proceedings of the two Houses of Congress, we should be content with that, and should go no further.

At all events, I think it is disrespectful to the Committee on Printing that so important a question as this should be taken entirely away from them, particularly when two members of that committee have just been added to it. The subject has not been investigated by the present committee; and certainly we do not treat them with that respect which I think is due to every committee here, when we fail to refer the subject to them for their investigation.

I may be entirely mistaken about the necessity of printing these proceedings; but certainly when the whole of the proceedings are published in one paper in this District, in detail, from this time until the end of the session, it will cease to be a newspaper, except with regard to the doings of Congress. I do not think it is proper for us to act prematurely upon this matter; and I think no harm can result from referring it to the Committee on Printing, and letting them make a report of what we should do.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I hope the motion made by the honorable Senator from California, [Mr. GWIN,] to refer the resolution, will not receive the sanction of the Senate. For this opinion of mine I could assign several reasons; but one, I think, is entirely sufficient, and will commend itself to the consideration of every member of the Senate, and especially of my Democratic friends on this floor. First, when this subject comes up again by a report from the committee, we shall have all this debate over again. That is a serious evil to us all. Secondly, we may have some unfortunate disclosures, calculated either to widen the existing breach, or to make more discoveries respecting the existing breach between the members of the harmonious Democratic party. I should be exceedingly pained, having the greatest regard and respect for that party, and especially for my friends on this floor who belong to it, to see any more such painful exhibitions as have been presented here to-day. [Laughter.] And especially should I be sorry to hear the Senator from California [Mr. WELLER] making a statement of the heterogeneous materials which composed the triumphant unity which resulted in the election of President Pierce to the high office which he now fills; and to have my friend from Mississippi [Mr. BROWN] under the necessity of getting up and protesting on this floor—as if any man ever had a doubt of it, [laughter]—that every member of the Democratic party, of whatever shade or stripe, is perfectly honest in all his purposes and motives. [Renewed laughter.] Sir, as a friend to the Senate, as reluctant to have a consumption of the time of the Senate by a renewal of the debate, and as feeling an especial anxiety to preserve the Union intact, and to keep the character unsoiled, of the great Democratic party in the United States, [laughter,] I do insist that the Senate shall dispose of this matter now. What good can arise from delay? None at all. Are not all of us who are the true friends of the Democratic party ready to vote for this resolution? [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. WELLER. All of us?

Mr. BADGER. Surely we are. Why, therefore, postpone the subject? I hope we shall act upon it now.

Mr. GWIN. I ask for the yeas and nays upon my motion.

Mr. JOHNSON. As it has been proposed to refer the resolution to the Committee on Printing, I wish to say that I was not a member of that committee at the time this subject was considered. It has been, I will suggest to my friend from California, before the Committee on Printing, and it was considered by them. I was not a member of the committee at that time; but I have investigated the subject, so far as regards that portion which relates to the Globe is concerned, minutely. I have for weeks at a time; I have investigated every part and branch of it; and I am satisfied that that part of the proposition is right, and that if we fail to agree to something like that, we shall have a difficulty here with regard to the reports, and you cannot help it. You do not want to do injustice, and yet you will do injustice to the Globe, unless you take the five thousand additional copies, as provided for by the resolution. That I can assert as a member of the committee, on my own responsibility, without regard to my position as a member of the committee, after a full investigation of the subject. I have satisfied myself of that; and, so far as that is concerned, I do not want to see it referred to the committee at all. It was reported upon by the committee before I became a member of it.

As to the other part of the resolution, gentlemen all know the facts which have a direct bearing upon the subject. A few years ago you printed, in some three papers, all the proceedings of the Senate—

Mr. CHASE. Two.

Mr. WELLER. Three, including the Globe.

Mr. CHASE. The Globe came in in place of the Intelligencer.

Mr. JOHNSON. Did not the Intelligencer, the Union, and the Globe print them at the same time?

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. No, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON. Did not the Republic?

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. No, sir, never.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Republic never had it. Very well, then you had to pay $7 50 a column to the Union and Intelligencer. Now you propose to pay $4 50 to the papers mentioned in the resolution. The only thing that I am not prepared to answer for is as to the fairness of that compensation—whether $4 50 a column is or is not too much. Whether it is a fair compensation is the only question that is left on my mind. Gentlemen tell me that they have disinterested testimony to the fact that $4 50 is a fair compensation. On the assurance of the testimony which they have, I am willing to concede that.

Then you formerly had those papers receiving $7 50 per column, and now it is proposed to give them $4 50. It is true that you are printing in more of them now; but if you design to publish, and continue publishing in the papers here, you will have gained at the rate of three dollars a column on every column published in them by this change.

Five thousand additional copies are proposed to be given to the Globe for the purpose of increasing the compensation to that paper to meet the changes which have occurred in all things since the period when you made the first contract with that paper—changes which have been so great as to break down all the other papers engaged in this reporting and printing at $7 50 a column. We must know that the same causes act upon the Globe concern with an equal force, and probably with greater force, because at this day, and for this Congress, the reporting is done not only, as gentlemen have conceded here, better than it is anywhere else in the world, but the publication of the reports, by working day and night, by steam as well as manual labor, is done better than it ever has been before.

There is no difficulty in my mind in regard to this matter at all. As a member of the Committee on Printing, I have no idea that I shall change my opinion as to the propriety of the Globe concern being paid additional compensation. With reference to the other part of the discussion, Senators can judge as well as I can; and there is no disrespect to the Committee on Printing—for one, at least, I can say that I will not so consider it—in failing to refer it to them. If you do so refer, you will have the discussion all over again hereafter, when it is reported back from them. You have the facts substantially now before you, and can act upon them.

Mr. GWIN. I am aware of the fact that the Senator from Arkansas was not a member of the Committee on Printing when this subject was investigated; and there is also another Senator, who is not now in his seat, the Senator from Maine, [Mr. FESSENDEN,] who is also a member of that committee now.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I can perhaps give the Senator the information he is seeking. You have a report lying on your table now which is the result of the action of the Printing Committee. It has been sleeping there perhaps some two months. That subject was brought to the notice of the Senate upon a resolution introduced by the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON.] His resolution was to take the same number of copies of the Globe for the Senate as are taken by the House of Representatives. It was taken up by the committee, and very fully and legitimately discussed. At that time the committee was composed of the honorable Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. SMITH,] the honorable Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] who was chairman, and myself. We scrutinized, with a great deal of nicety, the facts connected with the whole transaction. We referred the case to an officer who is intimately conversant with the amount of the actual cost to the Globe, and the amount to which the Government would be subjected, if the increase contemplated by the Senator from Arkansas was allowed. After much deliberation, the committee reported and recommended the Senate to increase the subscription to the Globe, perhaps to the number of forty-eight copies to each Senator. The House of Representatives is composed of two hundred and thirty-four members and four Delegates. The members of that House, if I am not mistaken, receive twenty-four copies each. The members of this body receive but twelve. The resolution of the Senator from Arkansas was to allow the same number of copies to be taken by the Senate as is taken by the House of Representatives. According to the best recollections which I have now, though some time has elapsed since I examined the subject, that would have allowed to each member of this body, I think, about ninety-one copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, at a cost of what I cannot attempt to say, as I have not had the time to do it since this debate commenced; but at some very considerable increase of cost.

After the question had been fully discussed, a majority of the committee recommended the Senate to increase the number to forty-eight to be taken for each Senator. I did not concur in that report. I satisfied myself, from statistics, and from the opinion of gentlemen who seemed to be conversant with the subject, that thirty-six copies were as large a number as my discretion and judgment would authorize me to recommend to the Senate; and hence the report was not acted upon, and was not concurred in at the time it was made. Now, it is proposed to go beyond that by the resolution of the Senator from Indiana, and the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, and we undertake really to take now from the publisher of the Globe as many copies as are taken by the House of Representatives, when, in fact, the report on the table recommends that each Senator should receive forty-four or forty-eight copies.

Mr. BROWN. My friend from Alabama will allow me at this point to make a statement. The proceedings of the Senate under our rules are about as voluminous as the proceedings of the House. We have no hour rule here, and if the Senator will take the pains to look over the reports, he will find that there is about as much matter reported and printed for the Senate as is reported and printed for the House. But this House is numerically not much over one fourth the size of the House of Representatives. Now, if twenty-four copies are given to each of the Representatives, that necessarily pays the publisher a much larger sum than if you give twenty-four copies to each member of the Senate, for he sells nearly four times the number of volumes to the House that he does to the Senate. The Senator in making his calculation ought to take that into the account. When you have taken the number proposed here, you still will not have taken as many copies of the book as are taken by the House of Representatives, though they will be more, of course, to each particular member here; but the profits accruing to the publisher will be still less in the Senate than they are in the House of Representatives; while his expenditures for publishing in the Senate are equal to his expenditures in the other House of Congress. It is not a question, therefore, as to whether you shall take forty-eight copies or a less or greater number, but whether you shall pay about the same price for reporting and publishing here which is paid for the reporting and publishing of the other House?

Mr. CLAYTON. I wish to ask my friend from Alabama one question before he goes on, and that is, will this additional appropriation of five thousand copies pay the editor of the Globe, the regular reporter, a fair compensation or not?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is almost double the amount recommended by the committee.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator will allow me a moment; I have made a calculation. If you increase the subscription to five thousand and twenty-two copies, it will then divide exactly eighty-one copies to each Senator; if you keep it at the present amount, five thousand, it will be eighty copies and a fraction over. To get clear of that fraction, I intended to propose to add twenty-two more copies.

Mr. CLAYTON. Will that pay the editor?

Mr. BROWN. I understand it will, with the number taken by the House. At this point, I will ask my friend from Indiana to accept that amendment.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have no objection to it.

Mr. BROWN. Then I propose to make the number five thousand and twenty-two, so as to have them divided equally.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I was about to say that, anxious as I am to place the reporting and printing on the footing which I have indicated, I am not willing to increase the number to the extent contemplated in the resolution. I am extremely anxious to confine the reporting to the solitary paper, the Globe. From all that I have heard of that paper, I understand that the loss to the proprietor is accruing in this body. I am frank enough to say, according to the best information I have on the subject, that he sustains a loss here, isolated and disconnected from the House of Representatives, in the publication of the reports; but not one word of complaint has been made about the loss in the House of Representatives, so far as I have heard. The publishing for the House of Representatives, and the publishing for this body, are part and parcel of the same work; and when you take the profits which, I feel assured, accrue to the publisher from the large number of copies taken by the House of Representatives, and the large number here, it is a question involving great doubt whether he is an intrinsic loser by the publication of the proceedings of Congress at the price he now gets. He is required to publish six thousand four hundred and fifty-six copies, if I am not mistaken, being twenty-four copies to each member of the House of Representatives, and twelve to each Senator.

Mr. BROWN. If my friend will allow me, the publisher of the Globe sells to the House about five thousand seven hundred and twelve copies. If I am correct in stating that the proceedings of the Senate are as voluminous as the proceedings of the House, then to pay him the same remuneration which the House pays him, we ought to take the same number of copies. I have never understood that he was excessively paid by the House. He is paid a fair, living price for his work—for the expense of reporting and printing—by taking five thousand seven hundred and twelve copies. We propose to take five thousand and twenty-two, so as to make the number divide equally.

I think my friend from Alabama is altogether mistaken when he wants to charge a portion of the profit in the House to the Senate, because the publisher makes a larger profit, as he insists, in the House, and therefore, that he ought to make no profit in the Senate. I take it for granted that the House Printing Committee have looked into this matter, and have agreed to pay nothing more than a fair living profit for what they get, leaving the Senate to do what it pleases. I take what they have done as the basis of our action. Having been a member of that House for many years, and having looked into this subject, I am prepared to say that the remuneration to the Globe for these publications is barely a living profit, nothing more.

Why, look at the book! There is not a publishing house in all Christendom, or outside of Christendom, that will publish so much matter for so small a sum of money. If my honorable friend from Alabama will take the pains to look into the matter, he will find that the Bible itself, confessedly the cheapest publication on the face of the earth, is not even now by the Bible societies published so cheap, in proportion to the quantity of matter that goes into it, as is the Congressional Globe. I do not speak of the value of the matter, because it is just as expensive, you know, to set up bad matter as it is to set up good matter; and if we insist upon its publication, we pay by the bulk, and not by the quality of the book. No man can take up the Congressional Globe, and look at the type in which it is set, and compare it with any other publication that ever was made, and find a book that is published at so low a price; therefore the profit on each particular volume must be very small, and you must take a very large number to make it at all remunerative.

Mr. CLAYTON. Will this pay?

Mr. BROWN. I understand that if the number proposed in the proposition of the Senator from Michigan be taken, it will afford a fair remunerative price, and nothing more.

Mr. CLAYTON. Then I am for it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is another very important matter which seems to escape the notice of the Senate, and one which I really think should command their attention. I appeal to you, sir, and to every gentleman on this floor, to know if, after the debates have been reported and set up and the press-work paid for, for a certain number of copies, a larger number cannot be published for almost half the amount which would have been required for the original publication. That is a matter which involved the scrutiny of the committee; and although the Senate seem disposed to act in this matter without any reference to a committee, I ask them to pause and reflect before they increase so largely the subscription to the Globe. No one, I trust, will accuse me of any prejudice against that paper. From the commencement of the discussion to the present hour, I have endeavored, with all my energies, to confine the reporting and printing of our debates to that paper, and to pay the proprietor such prices as would enable him to live. It is said that the publishing of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for the House of Representatives should be considered distinct from the publication for the Senate. But I repeat, if you take the number furnished to the House, and add it to the publication here in the aggregate, it is a question involving a great doubt whether the publisher of the Globe is a loser or not.

But, sir, what is to be the great cost of the publication of the Globe? The proprietor is required to publish seven hundred and forty-four copies, in order to give to each Senator the number to which he is entitled. When, as I before remarked, the resolution of the gentleman from Arkansas, proposing to largely increase this number was referred to the committee, they submitted the question to a gentleman who was intimately conversant with this matter; and we required from him statistics to show whether that work could not be published in a larger number for a less price than the number then published by the Senate, and I will present his statements.

The Senator from Mississippi overlooks the fact that reporting, composition, and press-work are the most important items in this matter, and after you have them paid for, additional copies can be published for a very small price comparatively. I have many statistics on this subject. I have in my possession a great deal of information derived from the gentleman to whom the matter was referred by the committee, and in order that the Senate may understand the question, I ask leave to read one of his statements. Although I am anxious, and have been from the commencement, to place the publication of the debates solely in the hands of the proprietor of the Globe, I do not feel inclined to remain quiet and see so large a number voted, when I am satisfied that a smaller would afford a remunerative price. I have here a statement of Mr. Towers, chief clerk of the Superintendent on Public Printing, in which he says:

March 2, 1854.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following answer to your verbal inquiries, made yesterday, respecting the net cost to the printer of additional copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix.

Your first inquiry was, "What will be the net cost to the printer of 744 copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, in addition to those now subscribed for by the Senate?"—making in all, 24 copies for each Senator, being the same number that is now furnished each Representative and Delegate in Congress.

The answer is: As 4,920 copies is to $19,356, so is 744 copies to the answer. The net cost to the printer, therefore, will be $2,927.

The subscription price for 744 copies for the two sessions of the Thirty-Third Congress, at $9 per copy, is... $6,696
The cost, as before stated, will be..... 2,927

Leaving a profit on those copies of.....$3,769

Your second inquiry was, "What will be the net cost of 1,488 additional copies?"—being 36 copies in all for each Senator.

Answer.

The subscription price is.....$13,392
The net cost to the printer will be..... 5,854

Leaving a profit on the 1,488 additional copies of $7,538

According to the above estimates, the cost to the printer of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, for the whole Congress, over and above the number now subscribed for by the Senate, (whether the additional number be large or small,) will be $3.93 per copy, (discarding fractions,) against the subscription price of $9. The binding is not included, which is paid for at the rate of fifty-five cents per volume, and with which, I understand, the printer has no connection.

The data upon which the foregoing estimates are based are the same as those presented in my note of the 27th ultimo, herewith returned to you.

It should be borne in mind that I have made no allowance for capital invested, nor have I taken into the estimate of the cost any of the expenses incurred by the printer in reaching the point at which I commence, being that point at which the Senate subscription to the Congressional Globe and Appendix now ceases. I have confined myself simply to the inquiry as to the net cost to the printer of increasing the edition of his publication to the several numbers suggested by you and the profit thereon; and upon subsequent reflection, I can discover no reason for changing the opinion I have heretofore expressed upon this subject.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
WILLIAM TOWERS.

To Governor FITZPATRICK.

Mr. JOHNSON. In regard to the document which has just been read, I will say to the Senate that I saw it long since, and I have read and examined it. There are qualifications to be found in it all the way through about capital, and one thing or another. I have examined the statements contained in the document, and I must say that I believe it to be entirely unreliable, and as furnishing no safe data. I do not give to these estimates the importance which the Senator from Alabama does, and I say it with all respect to him. I give to it none of the force which the Senator does. I believe the matter will rest here, in consequence of the course which has been taken, until the end of this session, unless the matter is settled, and the proposition of the Senator from Michigan adopted.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The gentleman who furnishes this information is the chief clerk to the Superintendent of Public Printing. This is not a voluntary act of his. It was asked for at his hands by the Committee on Printing. They addressed him as a practical printer, as one intimately connected and well acquainted with the whole subject of reporting and printing; and I desire the Senate to listen to what he says in another letter, which I should have read before.

Mr. JOHNSON. I wish the Senate to understand that the statement which the Senator from Alabama is about to read is in answer to a resolution which I offered some months ago, and not in regard to this proposition.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The letter which I am about to read I should have read at first. It is in these words:

Answer to Senator Fitzpatrick's Inquiry.

The Congressional Globe and Appendix for the Thirty-second Congress made six volumes, and an aggregate of 5,300 pages. The subscription price is $9 for each Congress. The Senate now takes 744 copies, and it is proposed to take 5,644 copies, being an increase of 4,920 copies. The inquiry of Governor Fitzpatrick is: "What will the net cost to the printer be of the 4,920 additional copies?" The answer to this question is based upon the data above mentioned.

Answer.

The cost of paper, (3,472 reams, at $4 per ream).....	$13,880 00
The cost of press-work, (13,038 tokens, at 30 cents per token).....	3,911 40
The cost of folding, (13,038 tokens, at 12 cents per token).....	1,564 56
Total cost.....	$19,355 96

The subscription price of the 4,920 additional copies, at $9 per copy, would be.....	$44,280 00
The cost to the printer would be, as above....	19,355 96

Leaving a profit of.....$24,924 04

Or $16,616 for the long session, and $8,308 for the short one.

It appears, from the letters of Mr. Rives and others, that a large loss is incurred by him at present in the execution of his contract with the Senate; and he asks this additional subscription, which he supposes will remunerate him for his labor on account of the profit accruing on it. How far the present contract with Mr. Rives may be remunerating, or otherwise, would require much time and labor to ascertain; and I think it would be indecise in me, to say the least, to express any opinion I may entertain upon the subject until I am prepared to support it by facts and figures.

February 27, 1854.

WILLIAM TOWERS.

Here we have the statement of a practical printer, Mr. Towers, who is known, I presume, to most members of the Senate, in which, after having taken great pains and trouble to examine the question with which he is intimately acquainted, he says that, if the Senate take the same number of copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix that the House of Representatives does, it will afford Mr. Rives a profit of $24,924, according to the best calculations he has been able to make. The honorable Senator from Arkansas says he has no confidence in these estimates.

Mr. JOHNSON. I say so, because of the fact that we have the sworn testimony of two disinterested and reputable men, which do not conform to his statement at all.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My impression is that there are but very few items in regard to which they differ. Now, sir, if the Senate, in the face of the testimony which the committee have collected for the purpose of informing the Senate, go on now to increase to this large extent the profits of this paper, it is for them, and not for me, to determine. The communication of Mr. Towers, which I first read, refers to the amount which I was willing to allow Mr. Rives—that is, I was willing to allow an addition of thirty-six copies for each Senator. I was satisfied that the proprietor of the Globe was not sufficiently remunerated by this body; and I was anxious to increase his compensation to that extent. A portion of the committee, and in fact a majority, were at first inclined to yield a favorable response to the resolution of the gentleman from Arkansas, to the full extent to which it went; but such astounding disclosures were made, showing that the inordinate profits to which I have referred were to accrue, that they were not willing to report in favor of that proposition. The members of the committee differed on that point; but I think it was the sense of the committee—I am speaking from recollection—that they were willing to take half the number proposed by the Senator from Arkansas, as the report will show. I was unwilling to go to that extent. I was ready to provide for thirty-six copies for each Senator. That additional number of copies, according to the statement of Mr. Towers, who I understand to be as competent a gentleman to make calculations on this subject as any in this city, would afford a profit of $7,538 per annum.

If Senators will look at the report of the Committee on Printing, which is lying on the table, they will find that a majority of the committee recommended an increase of subscription to the Congressional Globe and Appendix to about the number that I have intimated. The whole amount proposed to be furnished by the resolution of the Senator from Arkansas, would, according to the calculations of Mr. Towers, leave the proprietor of the Globe a profit of over $24,000 a year. I endeavored to ascertain what amount of copies it would be necessary to take in order to give a fair compensation to the Globe; and, as I have before remarked, I was in favor of allowing each Senator thirty-six additional copies. That, according to the calculations, would afford a profit of over $7,000. That was the amount to which I was willing to go; but my colleagues on the committee were willing to report in favor of taking forty-eight copies for each Senator.

When a committee to which the subject was appropriately referred have made such investigations, I ask what is the use of committees, where is the necessity for their hunting up information, where is the necessity of their inquiring into and endeavoring to ascertain what would be a fair compensation for this service, if the Senate, in this hasty manner, are to override their acts, and go entirely beyond what they ever recommended? I am anxious to allow a fair compensation, but I ask the Senate to reflect before they saddle upon the country, as the permanent system of this body, the giving of a large annual increase of compensation, such as is contemplated in the proposition now before the Senate.

If I had deemed it consistent with my sense of public duty to concur with my colleagues on the committee, I venture to say the question would have been settled long since; but I was laboring under the impression that that proposition would allow too large profits, and that $7,000 a year profit would be sufficient to cover all contingencies, and place the Globe upon a proper basis. The estimate which I have laid before the Senate shows what excessive profit may be made out of this subscription. Is it possible that the Senate, in their great anxiety to get rid of this question, will override the action of the committee which investigated it, in the manner in which the Committee on Printing did this question, without even condescending to notice their report? I feel assured that it is the sense of the Senate that we should do what is right. I am willing to go with the Senate in allowing what is a proper and reasonable compensation. But this proposition to allow eighty-one copies to each Senator will fall little short of allowing a profit of $24,000, which was the amount of profit estimated by Mr. Towers as the result of the subscription proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

I was familiar with these topics some two months ago; but when the resolution came up this morning, I did not suppose we should reach this question to-day, and hence it is but a few minutes ago since I took the papers from my drawer. I have been prepared at all times, on reasonable notice, to submit the facts to the Senate, and to allow them to come to a correct and proper conclusion in regard to what is a reasonable compensation to the Globe. But, sir, the report of the committee has slept until it is lost among the papers; and now, in the heat of debate, on a mere intimation, without reference to the information acquired by the committee, it is proposed to increase the number of the Globe to nearly as large an amount as the House takes. I cannot consent to it.

The statement of Mr. Towers shows what profits will be made, if such a proposition be adopted. I undertake to say, from my knowledge of that gentleman—and I have been closely connected with him since I have been a member of the Committee on Printing—that there is no man in the city of Washington who understands the history of printing, or knows more about its details, and who can give clearer and more satisfactory statements and calculations in connection with it, than that gentleman. The committee had confidence in him; and when his estimates were submitted to them, they were unwilling to go further than to recommend that the Senate should take half the aggregate number of copies which the House takes. I did not want to go to that extent, though I was willing to report in favor of taking thirty-six additional copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix. Upon that proposition we disagreed. If I thought that number would not allow a reasonable and fair living compensation; if I believed that it would not afford enough to sustain the Globe and its proprietors, I should be willing to go beyond that amount; but with the convictions resting on my mind, and the knowledge which is in my possession, after the investigations that I have made in reference to this matter, I am decidedly of opinion that the number proposed to be taken by the proposition now before the Senate will give excessive profits. I ask the Senate, therefore, not to adopt this proposition in the hurry of the moment. There is no imperative necessity for disposing of it now. I ask them to pause and deliberate before they attempt to establish, as the settled policy of the Senate, that it shall give such enormous profits to this gentleman, however competent he is; and I concede that his competency, and that of his corps of reporters, is beyond all question.

While I am willing to adopt the Globe as the only reporter here, I hold that there is no necessity for saddling upon the Treasury the local press of this District. I believe there is as much cause and necessity for having the reports copied into one of the leading papers of each of the several States as into the papers here. We might—except a single paper to perpetuate our proceedings—with the same propriety designate a paper in each State, and say our debates shall be published in them, as to say we shall select papers here to publish our debates at the public expense. My feelings towards all those gentlemen are of the kindest character. I think, I trust, I evince no political selfishness when I propose to take a paper outside of all parties; but now when I see the sense of the Senate, as indicated by the feeling of those around me, to be in favor of giving to the paper I prefer inordinate profits, I am opposed to it, not because I have any hostility to the gentleman who conducts that paper. He is an able man, and has an able corps of reporters. He is entitled to credit for the manner in which the reports are published in his paper. It gives him credit and reputation justly throughout the country. But when, in addition to the enormous amount proposed to be paid him, we are to have placed upon the Treasury three local papers here, I think it time to stop. One of those papers declined the publication, and another has said it does not want it, and yet, in the face of that, it is said, you must give to them as well as to another paper here. Two of the most extensively circulated papers in the Union have said they did not want the publication of the debates, and, in the face of that, it is proposed now to turn round and say "you must have them." We have been told that the papers cannot live at the prices now paid, and yet we propose to make them publish our proceedings, and to increase their compensation.

Is there any great necessity for this? Are the demands of the country upon us for intelligence so imperative that we have to carry through, rough-shod and by force, a resolution of this kind? And is it to become the settled policy of this body? I repeat again, it is time, in my estimation, in view of the facts which I have submitted to the Senate, for them to pause and hesitate before they adopt the resolution now pending. I will do the gentleman who is the publisher of the Globe the credit to say that he has always said the price paid him is not sufficient. I have always said to him that I thought we had afforded him ample profit when we agreed to give him a profit of over $7,000 a year. He contended that it was not sufficient. I do not know that I can say, on authority from him, that he was content with the report of the committee; but my impression is that his friends, and those who were anxious to put his paper on a solid footing in the Senate, were satisfied with the proposition of the majority of the committee, and thought forty-eight copies were enough.

Mr. PRATT. Will the Senator from Alabama permit me to make one inquiry?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Certainly.

Mr. PRATT. The Senator has repeated several times, for the information of the Senate, that on the hypothesis of our taking thirty-six additional copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for each Senator, there would be a net profit of over $7,000 a year to the publisher, and he predicates that statement on a paper signed by Mr. Towers. I do not deny the competency of Mr. Towers to make the statement, but I desire the Senator to refer back to what he said in the beginning of his speech, that Mr. Towers himself expressly said that the starting point of his calculation was to take the Globe office at the point where it is. He only estimates the cost of printing with the material as at present existing in that office.

Now, I assume, for the purpose of illustrating the remark I make, that the Globe office, the building, the type, and everything connected with the printing, has cost, say about $150,000. That is the principal sum. The Senate will see at once that the legal interest on that amount would be $9,000. Therefore, if the proprietor were to get $7,000 net profit, according to the calculation of Mr. Towers, there would be a loss of $2,000 to him for printing our proceedings, because in the employment of his capital he gets $2,000 less than the interest upon the capital invested.

Mr. BADGER. Certainly; that is clear.

Mr. PRATT. He gets nothing for his work, but loses $2,000.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think the Senator from Maryland is about as wide of the mark as he alleges that I am.

Mr. PRATT. I beg pardon—

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I meant nothing offensive at all. I understand the Senator from Maryland to say that we must make proper allowance for the large amount of capital invested in real estate in the Globe office. I have never had the pleasure of going through the large and beautiful establishment of the proprietor of the Globe; but is it the fact that all the rooms in that spacious and elegant building are employed for the purpose of carrying on our printing? I have merely cast my eye in as I was passing along; but, if I am not mistaken, a portion of that building is appropriated to other and different purposes than the printing of the debates of this body. I take it for granted that some gentlemen on this floor are more intimate with that matter than I am, not having particularly inquired into the matter. I am satisfied that some portion of it, at least, is paying the proprietor a fine profit in the shape of rents; and when the facts are inquired into, I should be inclined to think that the whole investment in that institution should not be regarded as a charge upon the Government.

Does it require a building involving such a vast amount of capital for the purpose of carrying on the printing of the debates of this body? I think not. I do not know, nor will I undertake to say, to what extent there are other occupants in this building, or to what other uses it is applied; but my impression is that you will find only a portion, I presume the largest portion of it, devoted to public uses. Concede, however, that it is all so employed, is it absolutely necessary to have a building so costly and so expensive in its character for the purpose of carrying on the public work? That is the business of the proprietor, and not ours. I feel assured, however, that a building costing much less money, with a great deal less room, and a great deal less capital invested, would answer all the purposes of carrying on the public printing of the country. It may be that to the extent to which the building is used for the purpose of carrying on the printing of our debates the capital invested in it is a legitimate object to be considered in the amount to be paid; but I take it for granted that the capital invested in the whole building is too large for the proprietor to call on the Senate or on the Government to foot the bill for the whole amount.

I have deemed it my duty, standing in the relation which I do to this body, being the only member of the committee that investigated this matter now present, to disclose these facts to the Senate. I have done it in no ill spirit towards the Globe, or anybody else; for I presume every gentleman on this floor is satisfied that I prefer that paper to any other as the sole reporter for this body; but in attempting to accomplish that, I wish to bring its proprietor within reasonable limits. I do it for his own benefit, as well as to protect the Treasury. I do it in order to make his a permanent concern. I do it for the purpose of showing the world that he gets a reasonable and fair compensation, and that he will be regularly employed by the Government, and to dispel everything like jealousy and contention in reference to his employment.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 17, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the consideration of House bill No. 102, granting lands equally to the several States, to aid in the construction of railroads and the support of schools. The pending motion is to recommit this bill to the Committee on Public Lands; and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HAMILTON] is entitled to the floor.

SUSPENSION OF THE RULES.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was then taken upon Mr. RICHARDSON's motion; and it was decided in the affirmative.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, in the chair.)

NEBRASKA BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The business in order before the committee is bill No. 236, being a bill to organize the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska; on which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. READY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. READY, after a few preliminary observations, said the committee now have under consideration the Senate bill for the organization of the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, with the amendment proposed in lieu thereof by the chairman of the Committee on Territories. He took this occasion to state that he preferred the Senate bill to the amendment proposed by the gentleman, [Mr. RICHARDSON]; but at the same time he should not be very scrupulous in looking into every minutiae of the bill, so as to hunt out objections to this substitute. Inasmuch as he perceived the amendment embodies the great principle on which the Senate bill is based, and inasmuch as there are only differences on points of minor importance, he was willing to pass them over, and was willing to take either the Senate bill or the amendment offered by the chairman of the Committee on Territories. On a great question like this, in a bill embodying so many provisions, it was scarcely to be expected that, where so many minds were brought to bear upon it, they can all concur in every feature; but if it is found that the leading features of the bill are correct, those minor details, he thought, should be set aside.

It had been said that this is a party measure, that it is an Administration measure, and that the bill was introduced in the Senate by a distinguished member of that body for the purpose of aiding his own views with regard to the Presidency. How these things are he knew not. He was not in the secret councils to which perhaps other gentlemen may have access. He only knew of things relative to measures which may come before this body from the provisions contained in the bills which may be presented. He occupied a position different from that of the Administration and the Democratic party in this House; but yet he did not intend now, or at any time hereafter, to let his party differences with any set of gentlemen control his votes on national measures.

The bill, he said, involves a great constitutional principle. It is one in which the South is peculiarly interested, and directly involves the question of State sovereignty. Strike out the great principle of State sovereignty, and the superstructure of the Union crumbles into ruins. He maintained the confederated States have no right to restrict slavery to prescribed limits; for a Territory is a State in embryo, and so continues until it is ready to organize itself into a State government, and ask for admission into the Union.

He reviewed the history of the enactment of the Missouri act of 1820, contending it was not imposed by the South on the North.

Mr. ETHERIDGE said that for a few days past this body had presented to the American people a remarkable, and significant spectacle. Their daily deliberations, for a week past, had been a striking commentary upon those assurances which the Democratic party had given to the American people, and that, too, when that party was being borne into power, as was alleged, by the conservative and national sentiment of the country. Were they not now, and had they not for a week past been furnishing to sectional agitation a powerful and conclusive argument? Had they not for the last few months, and especially for the last few days, been engaged in bartering away the confidence of the people, and for that which they would scorn to receive, and against which the voice of the largest portion of the Union had been heard in tones of loud and indignant opposition, and against which many others of the other portion had protested in low murmurs of sorrow and complaint? Had they not for a few days past been attempting to force upon an unwilling people a measure for which they had never asked? He asked Union loving men, men of the North and South, to consider well their interests, and not now, or hereafter, hastily, for party purposes, or individual ambition, consign those interests to jeopardy or ruin.

He then argued at length to prove that the Missouri compromise of 1820 was adopted by southern votes, and that it was a compact.

Mr. OLIVER, of Missouri, advocated the bill. He said, in the course of his remarks, that the Missouri compromise did not, as it had been asserted, give repose to a distracted country. Did not the North, he asked, repudiate it one year afterwards, so far as they could, by a majority of their votes? What northern man will deny it? The record proves it. The bill, he argued, would be a means of preserving the Union, by keeping the country from future slavery agitation, and crushing the hydra-headed monster of fanaticism, which have so long agitated the councils of the nation. He replied to the speech of Mr. BENTON, heretofore delivered, and said that opposition to the repeal of the Missouri compromise was an abolition movement.

Mr. PARKER next obtained the floor.

Mr. HOUSTON. I suggest that we take a recess of an hour, and by that time members will return here. If we have these early adjournments, gentlemen will not get in all the speeches they desire.

Mr. PARKER. I do not desire to speak to-day, and will yield the floor to any other gentleman who may wish to address the committee this evening.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist upon his motion that the committee rise?

Mr. PARKER. Not against the will of the committee. If any other gentleman wishes to speak, I will yield the floor, with the understanding that I am to occupy it to-morrow.

Mr. FARLEY. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I would ask the Chair, if that motion fails, whether it would not be in order to move that the committee take a recess for an hour or two?

Mr. KEFTT. I trust, if the gentleman from Indiana is unwilling to proceed now, that some other gentleman will take the floor, and proceed with the discussion.

Mr. WALSH. I demand tellers upon the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. FARLEY. I withdraw my motion, as there is an understanding made by which the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT] is to take the floor.

Mr. WALSH. We have been repeatedly told that there were a number of gentlemen who desired to express their views upon this subject. Let them have an opportunity to do so until ten o'clock at night; but there appears to be a scarcity of speakers.

Mr. PARKER. I have been trying to get the floor for some time; and the gentleman who occupied the chair on yesterday assured me that I could have the floor to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WALSH. You had better proceed. Make hay while the sun shines.

Mr. PARKER. I will yield the floor to the gentleman from New York, with the understanding that I shall occupy it to-morrow.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That arrangement has been made very frequently with other gentlemen, and I hope it will be permitted with my colleague, as he is too unwell to speak this evening.

Mr. WALSH. I hope some of these gentlemen who are so anxious to speak will hurry up.

Mr. BENNETT. I am ready to speak now.

Mr. B. then viewed the proposed repeal of the Missouri compromise as an attempt to extend slavery over territory now free, and, as such, he was opposed to it, as were all men of all parties and creeds in his district. This attempt to repeal that compromise, which had stood for so many years, and which was made for the settlement of a great question, had been brought before Congress in a very singular manner. It was a remarkable fact that this Congress was not elected with reference to this question. It was elected when nobody dreamed that any such measure would be proposed as the one under consideration.

He then argued against the bill, as one calculated to renew the slavery agitation, and as altogether unnecessary. He denied that the compromise of 1850 repealed that of 1820, and contended that the compromise of 1820 was a compact.

Mr. STRAUB obtained the floor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STRAUB] yield me the floor for a moment?

Mr. STRAUB assented.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. With the permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I desire to move that the committee do now take a recess until six o'clock.

Several MEMBERS. No; say seven o'clock.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. My object, Mr. Chairman, in making this motion, is for the purpose of affording ample opportunity for debate, in order that there may be no just ground for saying that time was not allowed for all to discuss this question. I therefore move that the committee do now take a recess to six o'clock.

A MEMBER addressed the Chair.

Mr. STRAUB. Permit me for one moment, if you please, I believe I am entitled to the floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I understood that the gentleman from Pennsylvania yielded me the floor that I might make the motion which I have submitted.

Mr. STRAUB. I will explain myself, if the gentleman will wait a moment. I have no objection, Mr. Chairman, to yield for an adjournment, provided there is an understanding that I will have the floor when the committee meets again.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, certainly, you will have it.

Mr. WITTE. I would suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] to say seven o'clock as the hour at which the committee shall reassemble.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Very well. I now move, Mr. Chairman, that the committee take a recess until seven o'clock this evening, to meet again with the understanding that no business is to be transacted, but that members are to speak on the Nebraska question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is right; we will then have better audiences, and everything else.

Mr. SAGE. It strikes me that we have been laboring pretty hard this week; and if members are to remain here until twelve o'clock to-night, it will be quite a severe tax upon them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would remark that there is no quorum present; and if a division is called upon the motion, it must fail.

Mr. HUGHES. I call for a division upon the motion. If there is, however, a desire on the part of any gentlemen to speak, I do not wish to throw any obstruction in their way.

Mr. SAGE. It appears to me that there is too thin a House to justify us in taking a recess.

Mr. STRAUB. Will the Chair be kind enough to state the question now before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], by the permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STRAUB], was, that the committee take a recess until seven o'clock. And the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUGHES] moves that the committee rise.

Mr. STRAUB. Then I claim to have the floor.

Mr. WITTE. I was about to state, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STRAUB] yielded the floor only for the purpose of allowing the gentleman from Kentucky to submit a motion that the committee take a recess, and not to a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. STRAUB. I take this occasion to say, that if there be any gentleman here in the minority upon this particular question who wishes to make a speech, for him I will yield the floor, but to no one else.

The CHAIRMAN. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield for a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. STRAUB. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky insist upon his motion that the committee take a recess?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. My only object in submitting the motion was to afford an opportunity for fuller discussion; but as those gentlemen from whom I supposed the proposition would receive a favorable consideration object to it, I withdraw the motion, in order that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may proceed now.

Mr. STRAUB. I do not wish to press upon the committee the few remarks which I have to offer. I am willing that the committee shall take a recess, but I am not willing that it shall rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that there is no quorum present; and if the motion to take a recess should be put, under a call for a division, it would necessarily be lost. The committee can rise, however, without a quorum.

Mr. STRAUB said that he could discover no occasion for bitter and unkind feelings on this subject. He had looked at the bill, and examined its provisions, and could see in it merely the great principle of the people to govern themselves. Pass this bill, of the success of which he had no doubt, and the ambitious and enterprising men of the eastern, northern, western, and middle States, will take possession of every inch of the Territory. The only reason he could see for his southern brethren standing by the bill was, that they go for the principle. They stand on the Constitution, where every man stands who shall vote for the bill.

Mr. WADE here obtained the floor.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I trust the gentleman from Ohio will give way until I can submit a motion.

Mr. WADE. I yield.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I then move that the committee take a recess until seven o'clock.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly, at five o'clock and thirty minutes, agreed to take a recess until seven o'clock, p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The committee, according to the terms of the motion that the committee take a recess, reassembled at seven o'clock, p. m., about a dozen members being present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WADE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. With the permission of my colleague, [Mr. WADE,] I move that the committee do now rise. It is too bad to compel a member to speak to so small an audience.

The question was put; and the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. WADE then took the floor, and addressed the committee an hour in opposition to the bill. He reviewed its provisions to show its inconsistencies, and termed it a deceitful and lying bill. Its object was to make slavery a domestic institution in these contemplated Territories, and never before had it been asked to establish slavery north of the line of 36° 30'. If they would amend the bill, and say that the population of these Territories should determine their institutions for themselves by popular vote, then he would cease his feeble opposition to this measure, and cease to agitate the question before the people of the country; but they should not determine the color of the people who were to take this large region into their hands. The law which excluded slavery from these Territories was binding by law; but a compromise, which had for its object the oppression of the poor black man, was void before Heaven and earth.

Mr. BANKS next obtained the floor.

Mr. SEYMOUR. If the gentleman will give way, I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. BANKS. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman from Massachusetts does not desire to go on now, I hope he will give way for some one else to speak to-night.

Mr. BANKS. If any other gentleman desires to speak to-night, I will yield to him with the understanding that I have the floor for the morning.

Mr. ROBBINS. I understand that the floor had been assigned to Mr. PARKER, of Indiana, for the morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no such understanding.

Mr. PURYEAR. That understanding was entered into by the gentleman who occupied the chair in the morning session, [Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the arrangement to be that Mr. BANKS was to have the floor in the morning.

Mr. BANKS. I am willing to accede to the arrangement that Mr. PARKER shall have the floor in the morning, if that was the understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that there was no such understanding.

The question was put; and the Chair announced the result—ayes 17, noes 16.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I would inquire how the Chair votes? If he votes in the negative, the motion will be lost.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair votes in the affirmative.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 236, entitled "An act to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas," but had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. PRINGLE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was then taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the House adjourned (at eight o'clock and five minutes, p. m.) until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 18, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.
The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I hold in my hand an amendment, by way of a substitute, which I intend to offer for the bill which has been reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, to modify and amend the judicial system of the United States. It is an important subject; and I have some views not exactly in harmony with the provisions of the bill reported. I cannot flatter myself that I should be able to present an entire bill, but I desire to lay my amendment on the table, and have it printed. The order to print was made.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I present the memorial of Alexander J. Atocha. He complains of the action of the late Board of Commissioners on claims against Mexico. It was formerly presented, and referred to the Select Committee which recently made a report upon that subject. This select committee, in consequence of the absence of Mr. Clarke, then Senator from Rhode Island, was equally divided in opinion as to the claim. He now presents his memorial, setting forth the facts, and asks that the case be again considered. He also presents additional proofs and documents in support of the claim. I ask that it be received, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN presented a petition of citizens of the parish of Calcasieu, Louisiana, praying the establishment of a light-house at the mouth of the Calcasieu river, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORT FROM A STANDING COMMITTEE.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted a report to accompany the bill to improve the naval service; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MALLORY submitted a motion to print three hundred additional copies of the above report; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PATENT OFFICE REPORT.

Mr. STUART. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRODHEAD] has now returned, and I should therefore like to call up, at this time, the motion made by him to reconsider the vote adopting the resolution respecting the publication of thirty-seven thousand five hundred additional copies of the agricultural part of the Patent Office report.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I am quite ready myself to give the reasons why I moved to reconsider the resolution alluded to by my honorable friend from Michigan; but, sir, I should much prefer that the Senate would proceed, in the first instance, with the subject of printing the debates. It seems to me that it would be proper to dispose of that matter first. It was very fully discussed, as I understand, yesterday afternoon, and can be disposed of without much debate. I think, therefore, that we had better dispose of that matter before we proceed to the consideration of the Patent Office report.

Mr. BRIGHT. If the morning business be through, I should like to move to take up the resolution referred to by the Senator from Pennsylvania, with the view of disposing of the subject this morning.

The PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan withdraw his motion?

Mr. STUART. I cannot see what relation one subject has to another, but I am very willing to consult the convenience of the gentleman. I therefore withdraw my motion.

SENATE REPORTING.

The PRESIDENT. Then the unfinished business of yesterday will now be taken up. It is a resolution of the Senator from Indiana in relation to the publication of the debates of the Senate. The pending question is on the motion to refer that resolution, with the amendment proposed, to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. PRATT. The yeas and nays were called for.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RUSK. I shall vote for the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Printing. I am in favor of its object. I presume there can be no doubt that the Globe does not receive a sufficient compensation for the labor performed in the Senate, and I am very willing to increase it. So far as the printing of the debates in the other papers of this city is concerned, I have no sort of objection to that. I think it is not necessary to pay for a duplicate reporter. The debates may just as well be taken from the Globe and published in the other papers. I think it perfectly right and proper that some system should be adopted, so that the readers of the journals may be informed of the debates and proceedings of the Senate.

As to any matter of expense, it is inconsiderable compared with the spreading of a knowledge of the proceedings of Congress before the people generally. Under such circumstances I have no objection as to the amount proposed. There is, however, a serious objection to the proposition; and, if I am compelled to vote on the resolution in its present form, I must vote against it. The method adopted by it to compensate the Globe, is to take ninety-one copies for each member.

Mr. BROWN. Eighty-one.

Mr. RUSK. Eighty-one besides the twelve which are taken now. It would then be ninety-three to each Senator. That will embarrass us; and I should be glad if the Committee on Printing would take the matter into consideration, and adopt some other method than to take the enormous number of ninety-three copies of the Globe and Appendix for each Senator; and therefore I shall vote for the reference of the resolution to that committee.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, if we are to keep up the system of reporting, it seems to me we ought to do something like what is proposed by the resolution. The true plan would be to pay one paper for reporting, and the others for publishing, the debates and proceedings. The system would not be complete, if we were to pay only to have them reported, because it would be necessary to publish them that the public may get hold of them; and to do that the true mode is to make a contract with the leading papers of the city, and pay them for their publication as is here proposed.

If, on the other hand, the Senate should come to the conclusion that the reporting system is not a good one, I should be willing to abolish it altogether; for I believe there is much to be said on both sides. While, on the one hand, it is desirable that full reports should be had, to show the reasons and grounds of our legislation, I think it is obvious, on the other hand, that the system introduces more speaking than we otherwise would have, and perhaps deteriorates its character. I think the tendency of the system is to change it into a sort of essay writing; but still I think there is no mistake that it is the sense of the Senate and of the other House to have their proceedings reported. If so, I am willing to go the further length of paying the papers to publish them; and in doing so I would state to the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. STUART,] that I by no means think that I am indorsing the editorials of any one, or of all of them, by merely paying them to publish the proceedings of the Senate. So far from indorsing anything which is calculated to reflect upon the President of the United States, I would be as far from doing that as he is; for I believe the President of the United States is earnestly intent upon carrying out the principles upon which he was brought into power. I think his course upon the Nebraska bill and the indigent insane land bill, which are the two great practical issues of the session, has been manly, straightforward, and wise. At the same time, I believe he has erred in relation to the distribution of patronage; but whatever errors there may have been; I believe they were committed with the very best intentions. Therefore, I vote without meaning to express any opinion with regard to this or that editorial in either of the papers. I believe it is better, if we keep up the system of reporting, to have the debates published in the three leading papers of the city, if they will do it. The only point of doubt and difficulty which I have, is in regard to the number of extra Globes which it is proposed to take. I do not know but that it may be giving more than we ought to give to that one paper. I am willing to compensate its proprietor justly and amply for his services; and the only question that I have is as to the measure of the compensation. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] has examined this question, and so has the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. FITZPATRICK.] We have heard from the Senator from Alabama. The Senator from Arkansas, I think, is of the opinion that this is not too much. I see him in his seat, and perhaps he can satisfy my mind on the point.

Mr. BRIGHT. I concur entirely in all that has been said by the Senator from Virginia, and I am very sorry that the debate yesterday took a direction which would lead to the inference that any Senator here is governed by anything like unkind feeling towards the Administration, in advocating the resolution which is now before us. Nothing of the kind, at any rate, entered into my breast.

I think it unnecessary to extend this debate. I am very anxious that the resolution should be voted upon. I accepted the proposition of the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. STUART,] under the impression that, if I did so, there would be no serious objection to it. I am now satisfied that my original proposition is greatly embarrassed by the amendment offered for the benefit of the Globe; but I am further satisfied, Mr. President, after a very thorough examination of the subject, that the extra copies proposed to be ordered will not provide more than a fair compensation to remunerate the proprietor of that paper for the services we require at his hands.

I hope the resolution will not be referred to the Committee on Printing, for I have no idea, from the exhibition which we have had on the floor, that that committee would be able to agree upon a report; and, furthermore, we understand the subject thoroughly, and can dispose of it without the assistance of the committee.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I agree entirely in what has been said by my friend from Virginia, that if we are to have any system by which the Senate proposes to publish its debates, the one proposed by the resolution, in its present form, is free from every reasonable objection. It proposes to have one reporter, and I think it can admit of no doubt in the mind of any gentleman who has at all turned his attention to this subject, that it is difficult to conceive, and vain to expect, any better system of reporting than that which is furnished by the proprietor of the Globe. That being the case, by having this one reporter we accomplish the desirable object of having the reports prepared, and printed with every imaginable security that they will be a fair representation of what passes here—fair not only in substance, but fair in detail.

Having procured that, the next object is to have these reports spread before the country. They are not published for our reading. They are not intended to inform us of what passes here. They are intended, as far as possible, to enable the people of the United States, for whom we act, and the States which we represent, and to which we are responsible, to understand what is said and done here by their representatives. In order to accomplish that, this resolution proposes that the reports, thus carefully and faithfully prepared, shall be published in the three leading papers here. Surely nothing, in my opinion, can be more reasonable than this. We get rid of an unnecessary expense, involved in maintaining two or three corps of reporters; we insure at once accuracy and unity in the presentations of the discussions that take place here, and upon moderate terms we secure also the widest practicable diffusion of these reports throughout the whole country. Now, sir, in connection with this subject, I think that if we are to make any provision for publishing the debates of this body, no plan more fair, and no plan more economical, can be adopted by the Senate; therefore, if the system of reporting is to be continued, I am entirely in favor of the resolution which has been submitted.

There is another and a distinct question into which I do not enter. I refer to the suggestion thrown out by the Senator from Virginia, whether it is, upon the whole, wise to have any provision made for the reports at all? I think that matter is settled. The Senate intends to have its debates reported, and the only question for us is as to the best and most economical method.

Now, with regard to the mode in which it is proposed to make some additional compensation to the proprietor of the Globe, who has completed this admirable system of reporting, I have two remarks to make. The first is this: I believe no gentleman can have any reasonable doubt that the present arrangement of the Senate does not furnish the desired compensation. That I take to be clear, both upon the little observation which I have been able to make of it, and upon the clear and decided opinion of my friend from Arkansas, and the other gentlemen who have had full opportunities of investigation.

The second observation which I wish to make on this point is, that I prefer the method of giving that increased compensation which is proposed by this resolution to any other method. It remunerates the reporter. It enables this establishment to go on successfully, and without entailing upon its proprietor a loss which he should not suffer, and it does it by furnishing to the members of this body largely increased facilities for distributing in a permanent form, and putting into the possession of a large proportion of their constituents, the authorized published reports of the discussions and proceedings of this body. For the day, or for the hour, that may be a matter of small importance, but I have found, and I do not doubt that other gentlemen in this body have found the same thing, a very considerable difficulty, often in not being able to refer to the proceedings and debates of this body, as well as of the other House of Congress, in days gone by.

We find it important to ascertain the views and opinions entertained by those who have preceded us. It is sometimes difficult, or occasionally impossible to ascertain, for want of ready and convenient sources of recurrence, what those debates and opinions have been. Let us then, sir, by this proceeding secure at least for hereafter an opportunity of judging what have been the views, the opinions, and the course of policy indicated and supported by the present members of this body. I trust I do not place any exaggerated estimate upon the value of what we say, but at least, Mr. President, I do not think it is just to depreciate ourselves so much as to imagine that in times to come those who succeed us will not be desirous to know, and may not at least sometimes learn, too, with advantage not only for themselves, but for the country, the discussions which may have taken place in this body.

Having said this, sir, it seems to me that it follows there is no necessity for a reference of this resolution. I see no advantage to accrue from it. The subject is fully in the possession of the Senate. If the Senate is opposed to the system, vote down the resolution. If the Senate is in favor of the system, in my judgment, it cannot be materially improved in its details by the labors of any committee. Therefore, so far as I am concerned, I shall vote against the reference, and in favor of the resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON. As I do not wish to fatigue this body, and as I do not wish to fatigue myself, I shall not undertake the labor which would necessarily be imposed upon me if I should enter upon this subject in every aspect in which it presents itself. It involves much to which I shall not refer. I shall confine myself to a few facts to which I desire especially to call the attention of the Senate.

The resolution, as it stands, embraces two separate and distinct subjects; and before the vote is taken I shall call for a division of the question. One portion of it relates exclusively to the reporting of the debates and proceedings, and the printing them in the Globe. The other portion relates to printing the debates in the city papers only.

It will be seen that it is an omnibus resolution; for it embraces matters which do not necessarily stand together, and, as they are capable of division, I shall ask that they be divided.

The Senator from Virginia spoke of the cost of the Congressional Globe, and the method in which that cost should be distributed, or, in other words, as to the compensation to be received by the publisher of the Congressional Globe and Appendix; and the objection of the Senator from Texas was based on the method by which it is proposed to pay him, because it allows individual members of the Senate to receive a large number of the Globe and Appendix for distribution. Now, sir, after having considered the subject maturely and laboriously, I must say that I see no better method, nor any so good.

We must do something with that establishment, or we shall be compelled to give up the reporting and printing of our debates. The gentleman who is at the head of the establishment has not said he will quit because he makes nothing. I believe he has never distinguished himself in that way. He will go on with his contract until he is unable to go further; and what he does do he will do well. What he has done has always been well done.

In regard to the numbers to be taken, I see no better method which can be pursued. There are other methods by which it can be done. Two or three propositions have been submitted to me, which, if necessary, I will read. I have examined them all maturely. They propose to pay him for the future, but not to make up his losses for the past. At the beginning of this Congress he had lost the sum of $40,000. This will be seen on an examination of his facts. I have examined them carefully, and I am satisfied of the truth of what he says.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The Senator says that the proprietor of the Globe has been at a loss of $40,000. Is that for this Congress, or for the whole period that he has pursued the business?

Mr. JOHNSON. For the whole period.

Mr. BENJAMIN. How many years?

Mr. JOHNSON. I cannot give the exact number of years; it has been certainly some four or five. Changes in the price of work and materials have gone on, and he is going on losing at an accelerated rate. I do not wish unnecessarily to consume time; but I can produce the items in proof of the statement, and to any rational man it must be as clear as sunlight.

Sir, it will be well to advert to the authority relied upon by the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. FITZPATRICK]—the statement and calculation of William Towers. I have said that that statement is unreliable. Why, sir, there are errors all the way through it. There are errors that I have calculated; and, in addition, we have a statement by Mr. Rives pointing out its errors. Mr. Rives's statement has been published and republished for three weeks; it has been standing before the people for investigation. If Mr. Rives has published a false statement, he is not worthy of recognition by this body, or to be intrusted with the public records.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. JOHNSON. I will yield for an interruption, but certainly not for an argument.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I meant to have stated, when I addressed the Senate yesterday, that I had another communication sustaining the former statement.

Mr. JOHNSON. Establishing it?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. So I understand.

Mr. JOHNSON. Exactly. A full answer to Mr. Towers has been published to the world, and has been in his possession for three weeks. Perhaps the honorable Senator has got an answer to it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have a communication from Mr. Towers explaining the facts.

Mr. JOHNSON. Very well. I have the first document furnished by Mr. Towers, giving the result of his investigation. Mr. Towers is a printer, and, I understand, a very good one. But I have never heard of his managing a heavy establishment, which is a very different branch of business. He, however, was called upon to make a report to the Committee on Printing, which is relied upon by the Senator from Alabama with great confidence. If gentlemen will give me their attention, I will show the number of errors with which one short page can be filled. Mr. Towers says:

"The Congressional Globe and Appendix for the Thirty-Second Congress made six volumes, and an aggregate of 5,300 pages."

Error No. 1. The correct number of pages is 5,454.

"The subscription price is $9 for each Congress. The Senate now takes 744 copies, and it is proposed to take 5,644 copies, being an increase of 4,920 copies."

There is an error again. Instead of 5,644, it stood, on the papers that were before him, 5,712.

"The inquiry of Governor FITZPATRICK is: 'What will the net cost to the printer be of the 4,920 additional copies?' The answer to this question is based upon the data above mentioned."

Answer.

The cost of paper, (3,472 reams, at $4 per ream,) $13,880."

Here is another error. Instead of 3,472 reams it is 3,480 reams, and 455 sheets, showing that he has not proceeded with any strict accuracy. There is also an error in regard to the price of the paper. Instead of $4 a ream—and he knew it; he could not have helped knowing it—the very lowest price is $4 80 a ream; and you cannot possibly get paper during this session of Congress for less. Mr. Rives has his bills, and they show that he has sometimes to pay $6 50 a ream. Thus we have specimens of the kind of estimate upon which my honorable friend from Alabama has based his representations. Calculate the paper at $4 80 instead of $4 a ream, and it makes the aggregate cost $16,708 55, instead of $13,880.

The next item—and, sir, each item seems to be a gross and special error—is the following:

"The cost of press-work, (13,038 tokens, at 30 cents per token,) $3,911 40."

This, sir, is a most preposterous representation. Why, sir, the clerk of the Superintendent of Printing, who made this report, knows that his own brothers, who are printers in this city, are printing for Mr. Rives at fifty cents a token as a favor, when their machinery and hands have nothing else to do. Thirty cents a token! Why, when we look at every contract that Congress has made in regard to printing, except that made with Mr. Ritchie, we find that one dollar a token was paid. Mr. Ritchie received fifty-three cents a token for his printing, and he came back to Congress and announced the fact that he was ruined, totally ruined by it, and asked for relief. Congress then gave him over one dollar a token and still he proclaimed to the world that he had not been saved from loss. Although this was the case, Mr. Towers sits down and makes a calculation at thirty cents a token! What is a token? Two hundred and fifty impressions taken from the press. And Mr. Towers calculates 13,038 tokens; but even in that his figures are wrong. It is 13,367 tokens. Taking that at his own calculation, it would make a mistake, for the true amount, instead of $3,911 would be $4,010 10.

Now, what reliance can be placed upon his statements and deductions? It is well known that we have never had the work done at less than one dollar a token, except in the case of Mr. Ritchie's contract, and that he abandoned, and we had to give him more than one dollar, after legislating for four months on the subject. It is thus evident that Mr. Towers makes a clear mistake in that calculation, upon a single estimate, of nearly $10,000. On this subject, to satisfy my own mind, I addressed each of the printers in this city. I called upon them to know at what rates they would print for me, and the average price which they proposed was $1 06 a token. One declined to give me an answer, but said that he would print for me all that I wished for nothing. He supposed that it was merely some little printing that I wished to have done, and he was willing to do it for nothing, out of his personal kind feelings for me; but the average answer that I received was $1 06 a token, for this very item which Mr. William Towers sets down at thirty cents. His brothers, when they have leisure, print for Mr. Rives, as a matter of favor, for fifty cents a token, which is sixty-six and two thirds per cent. more than he says Mr. Rives can afford to do it for himself.

Now, I ask, what confidence is to be put in estimates like these? But we will go to the next point:

"The cost of folding, (13,038 tokens, at 12 cents per token,) $1,564 56."

There again he errs. He supposes that there are 13,038 tokens to be folded, whereas the number folded is but just half, both sides of the sheet being printed. Mr. Towers calculates for folding 13,038 tokens at twelve cents a token, and allows Mr. Rives $1,564 56 for it; whereas the number of tokens folded was but 6,519, and the amount should be only $782 28.

The aggregate errors in these calculations amount to over $12,000! Mr. Towers then proceeds to another estimate, and says:

"The subscription price of the 4,920 additional copies,"

The number should be 4,968,

"at $9 per copy, would be $44,280."

The amount should be $44,712.

"The cost to the printer would be, as above, $19,355 96."

It ought to be $21,520 67. He then goes on:

"It appears from the letters of Mr. Rives, and [the oaths of] others?"

Here are the oaths—I will not detain the Senate by reading them—which go to show that during the first fifty-nine days of this session, Mr. Rives lost upwards of three dollars a column on the publishing which was done for both branches of Congress. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Alabama to the fact, that he has studiously separated the consideration of the public printing and reporting of this House from that of the other. Sir, I treat it in gross. I put it all together, and I allege that these losses occurred from the whole, and not from this body alone. Upon the printing and reporting for both branches, he has lost, and is losing, at an accelerated rate.

But let us again look at the kind of authority upon which my friend from Alabama relies. It seems to me he ought to have examined Mr. Rives's letter in his regard for right which I know and acknowledge that he feels as sensibly as anybody. It seems to me it was most inexcusable that he did not examine it at once and satisfy himself about it; but I am informed that that Senator never read Mr. Rives's statement. Am I correct in regard to that?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. You are correct in regard to that. I have not had time to look into all these statements.

Mr. JOHNSON. I regret it, for if you had read it, I feel assured there is much in it you would have taken delight in reading. I say this because I am satisfied you want to do what is right and just.

Mr. Towers says:

"It appears, from the letters of Mr. Rives and others, that a large loss is incurred by him at present in the execution of his contract with the Senate."

That is the subject upon which he was asked for a statement.

"And he asks this additional subscription, which he supposes will remunerate him for his labor on account of the profit accruing on it. How far the present contract with Mr. Rives may be remunerating, or otherwise, would require much time and labor to ascertain."

Sir, I should like to know what the Committee on Printing was established for, if it was not for the purpose of ascertaining? I should like to know what they referred a commission of this character to that clerk for, unless it was that he should take that trouble? That is what he says after having made this wretched and erroneous calculation, and then he concludes:

"And I think it would be indelicate in me, to say the least, to express any opinion I may entertain upon the subject until I am prepared to support it by facts and figures."

What makes it indelicate in him? Why wait until he has prepared the facts and figures? Sir, I am authorized to say to you here, that the whole of that printing establishment, its books, and its most private concerns were open to him, and he was invited to go in and make the investigation, but he declined to do it. He examined but a portion of its business, and, on seeing the manner in which the speeches were altered after they were set up, he said "why that is just as bad as to have it all to set over again." They said to him "go on and examine the whole establishment, and then report the facts as you find them." He declined to do it, and went on and furnished this statement, at the end of which he says it would be indelicate in him to express an opinion as to whether a loss was sustained or not. It is strange that he should feel this delicacy after having made a calculation which, if true, would utterly destroy the veracity of the man who made the previous statement; yet it is true that when he comes to the point for which the subject was referred to him, he says he thinks it a matter too delicate for him to investigate.

Mr. President, I would, if it were possible, escape from an examination of all these details, but there are points to which I feel it to be my duty to call the attention of the Senate, and they are so plain that they will not fail to create a sensation in the mind of every man who listens to the statement of them.

I have before me the printed statement of Mr. Rives, which has been before the public and in the hands of every printer of the city for the last three weeks, and which has been at the service of every Senator, and is yet to be had by any and every Senator who chooses to make the investigation. I will turn, for instance, to this item of tokens, concerning which I have made a few remarks. Mr. Rives says:

"But Messrs. Gales & Seaton, it appears, convinced the Congress that made the reduction of twenty per cent. on the public printing that they could not stand it, and, at the end of that Congress, the twenty per cent. was restored to them."

That is, during the time they were the printers, in 1841 and 1842.

"This gave them $440 for press work and folding, and stabbing and stitching. Deduct ten per cent. for stabbing and stitching, and it leaves them $396 a token for press-work and folding, which lacks only four cents of being eight times as much as Mr. Moore now allows me!"

He is here speaking of another calculation, made by Mr. Moore, who is a brother-in-law of Mr. Towers, and who has furnished a calculation which Mr. Rives has taken great pains to answer.

"—when the wages I now pay to printers are twenty per cent. higher than Messrs. Gales & Seaton paid them."

"Mr. William Towers, the other witness who bears witness against me, is Mr. Moore's brother-in-law, and their testimony is nearer than their relationship to each other. He says the press-work can be done by me for thirty cents a token, and the folding for twelve cents a token; making together forty-two cents a token for press-work and folding. Mr. Moore said in 1840?"

Eighteen hundred and forty was a period of time when all things were cheaper than they are now.

"Mr. Moore said, in 1840, that I could do both for forty-two and a half cents a token—only one half of one cent difference! This is a strange and striking coincidence, when it is recollected that fourteen years elapsed between the times when they gave their testimony, and in the mean time the wages of printers had been changed twenty per cent."

"At the very time Mr. Towers gave his testimony that press-work could be done for thirty cents a token, his brothers in this city were doing it for me, at their leisure, and as a favor to me, and charging me sixty-six and two thirds per cent. more than he allows me."

He certainly ought to have been conscious, but may not have been, however, of the rate of charges at which his own brothers were doing business.

"They have been doing it at that rate for me for years past; and I have reciprocated their favors by letting them have paper at precisely what it cost me. They make something by printing for me at fifty cents a token, because they do it when they have no press-work of their own to occupy their presses, on my type already made up into pages for them, and by men who work by the week."

And consequently would have nothing else to do unless they had that, and still are paid.

"Thirty cents a token on the copies of the Congressional Globe, which both branches of Congress take from me, will not pay one third the interest on the capital invested and the wear and tear on materials in my office, as I will prove in less than twenty lines."

"Congress takes from me 6,456 copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix—the House 5,712, and the Senate the balance, 744, of them. The press-work on these during the last Congress was 18,340 tokens, which, at 30 cents a token, amounts to $5,509. The interest on the capital invested in my printing establishment, and the wear and tear of the materials during that time, as Mr. Moore admits, amounted to $17,680; and every printer knows, or ought to know, that at least three fourths of the capital invested in a large printing establishment is properly chargeable to the press room department, and that at least five sixths of the wear and tear of the office and machinery is also chargeable to it."

Here are facts, which gentlemen can take up and study and consider maturely for themselves, which go conclusively to settle the matter in regard to the calculation now relied upon by the Senator from Alabama as to the fairness of the compensation on this item of tokens, which is one of the heaviest items in the calculation.

Permit me in this connection to read a statement of the cost of similar work, as done in Pennsylvania and Maryland, and in England for the reports of the proceedings of the British Parliament.

They have had a fixed system for many years, and hence they afford a precedent, which may be considered good, in consequence of the much greater experience they have had in these matters, than this body of the other branch of Congress.

Mr. Rives says:

"Now, I will compare the price paid to me for the debates in Congress, with the prices paid in England for the debates in the English Parliament."

"Hansard's Parliamentary Debates for the last Parliament, commencing the 10th of February, and ending the 9th of May, 1853, made 2,216 octavo pages, averaging 2,250 ems a page, making together 4,995,000 ems."

"These were printed in three royal octavo volumes, and retailed in London for £1 10s. a volume, bound, making £4 10s. for the three volumes, equal there to $19 98, here to $32 50."

"Hansard sells his debates to the booksellers of London for £1 2s. 6d. a volume, bound, making £3 7s. 6d. for the three volumes, equal there to $14 98, here to $16 92."

"The Library of Congress paid a bookseller in London five per cent. advance on Hansard's wholesale price for the three volumes, and they amounted to $17 76."

Our Library accounts show that fact.

"The Congressional Globe and Appendix for the last Congress, at this rate, would amount to $136 a copy."

I call upon the Senate to look at a fact like that when my honorable friend from Alabama talks about gross extravagance. There are people in England who have had the experience of years in this business; and if we paid for the Globe, for which we gave $12 per bound copy, at the same rate which they pay for theirs, instead of giving $12, we should give $136 for a single copy of the Globe and Appendix. It is a startling fact, that what costs us $12 would cost us $136 at their rate; and so in proportion for the whole of your copies. This, Mr. President and gentlemen, is the character of the extravagance of which we have been guilty in paying Mr. Rives for the Globe and Appendix the rates which have been mentioned.

"The Senate paid for them, bound, only $12 a copy."

"It is clear, therefore, that the Senate does not pay one eleventh the rate for the debates in Congress that this Government pays for the Parliamentary Debates of England for the Library of Congress."

"Add to what the Senate pays for the Congressional Globe and Appendix what it pays towards defraying the expenses of reporting and publishing the debates in the Daily Globe, and then the $712 copies which the Senate is asked to subscribe for, would not cost it one seventh the rate paid for Hansard's Debates."

If the price paid to Mr. Rives for reporting the proceedings and publishing them in the Daily Globe be included, then the Congressional Globe and Appendix will not cost you one seventh of their price.

"And it is believed that Hansard takes his debates from the London papers, and makes but little alteration in them."

In other words, the system is not carried on with anything like the same accuracy, the same perseverance, the same decision, and the same rapidity, with which it is carried on for this body, for, I believe, it is conceded that the best reporting which is done in the world, for accuracy, and for rapidity, is done for the American Congress.

"Now add the facts that wages of both reporters and printers, and the price of paper, are each and all less in England than they are in this country, and then can any man give a good reason why there should be so great a disparity in the prices which the debates of the two countries are sold for? or why Hansard's should be sold so high, and Rives's so low?"

Now, sir, for another point. There is a celebrated printing establishment in this country known as "Harper & Brothers." Mr. Rives says:

"Harper & Brothers, of New York, print about 125,000 copies of their Magazine, which enables them to sell them at what is considered a very low price—25 cents a number. The Congressional Globe and Appendix, at that rate, would amount to $26 a copy for each Congress. I sell them to Congress for $9 a copy."

At the rate at which the Harpers sell their Magazine, which is deemed to be extraordinarily low, the Congressional Globe would amount to $25 a copy for each Congress. Look at that. We pay $9 a copy, and at the lowest rate at which the Harper brothers print their magazine, and distribute one hundred and twenty-five thousand copies of it—a price which is pronounced so extraordinarily low—instead of our paying $9 a copy for the reports of the debates of Congress, it would be $25. That I believe is the lowest printing establishment in the United States. There are a great many more such statements as these in this paper; but I pass them by; I do not wish to detain the Senate. It is not necessary to multiply them. These are facts which there is no such thing as getting over! But now I turn you to the case of the State of Pennsylvania, and give to you a few paragraphs which is upon that subject. My friend from Pennsylvania will listen to this, I know, with some interest:

"Before I commenced writing this answer to Mr. Moore's and Mr. Towers's statements, I wrote to gentlemen in Kentucky, Pennsylvania, and Maryland, inquiring of them how much the reporting and printing the debates of the conventions called to amend their constitutions cost those States, respectively; and since the above was in type, I have received the following answers from the two States last mentioned, and will not wait any longer for an answer to the letter written to the gentleman in Kentucky:

"HARRISBURG, PENNSYLVANIA, April 17, 1854.

"SIR: Upon the receipt of your letter inquiring of me the expense of reporting and printing the debates of the convention to amend the constitution of Pennsylvania, that sat in the years 1837-'38, I went to the Auditor General's Office, and obtained the accompanying items of expenditure, as paid upon the different warrants from time to time."

"By this, it will be seen that the reporting of the debates of said convention cost $20,488 15, and the printing and binding cost $59,668 90. These debates made thirteen volumes, amounting, in the aggregate, to about 7,000 pages, octavo, 1,500 ems to the pages, and two thousand five hundred copies were printed—that is, 1,250 in the English language, and 1,250 in the German language. I have no means of getting at the price of binding these volumes, with certainty, but think it cost between nine and ten thousand dollars."

"There were five reporters employed, viz: John Agg, principal; H. G. Wheeler, E. Kingman, W. E. Drake, and

I. G. McKinley, assistants. The principal reporter received $100 per week as a compensation for his services, and the assistants $30 per week; and $5 per column of 2,000 words were paid for writing out all matter not written out at the adjournment of the convention; which, according to the best of my recollection, was about one half of the debates, as the convention frequently sat mornings, afternoons, and evenings, and it was impossible to keep the work up.

"The price paid to journeymen printers, at the time of the printing of the debates, was seven dollars per week in Harrisburg, or twenty-two and a half cents per thousand ems. I am told they generally worked by the week.

"I am informed, at the Auditor General's Office, that no part of the $69,668 90 was paid for distributing the debates, that being paid for printing and binding alone; but you will bear in mind that the cost of printing paper is included.

"Hoping this information may prove satisfactory to you, I remain yours, truly, ISAAC G. MCKINLEY.

"JOHN C. RIVES, Esq., Washington, D. C.

"OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE, }
"ANNAPOLIS, April 12, 1854.

"SIR: The Governor has placed in my hands, for answer, your favor of the 28th ultimo. It would have received earlier attention but for my absence from the seat of government, and some delay occasioned by difficulty in procuring part of the information asked for.

"The State paid to H. G. Wheeler, Esq., for reporting, the sum of $2,505 80; and for indexing, the further sum of $800.

"The cost of printing the reports was $2,892 90. "Five hundred copies were printed for the State, and I am informed that each page contains about three thousand five hundred ems." I take leave, however, to suggest that a copy of the reports may be found in the Congressional Library, and that it might be well that you should examine them.

"I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant, NATHANIEL COX, Secretary of State.

"JOHN C. RIVES, Esq.

"OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE, }
"ANNAPOLIS, April 17, 1854.

"SIR: I am in the receipt of your favor of 15th instant. I now have the honor to inform you that I have examined the second volume of the reports referred to, and find it contains eight hundred and ninety pages, [that is the number of pages in the two volumes.] I make no charge in this matter; it has given me pleasure to have it in my power to oblige you.

"Respectfully, your obedient servant, NATHANIEL COX, Secretary of State.

"JOHN C. RIVES, Esq."

"The debates of the last Congress made 5,454 royal quarto pages, the pages averaging about 7,000 ems; therefore, the whole made about 38,178,000 ems. Congress paid me $56,242 50 for reporting and printing the debates of the two sessions in the Daily Globe; and then paid me $58,104 for printing 6,456 copies of them in book form; making together $114,346 50; which divided by the number of copies printed in book form, shows that I was paid $17 71 a copy for reporting and printing them, both in the newspaper and in book form.

"It will be seen by Mr. McKinley's letter, copied above, that $20,488 15 was paid for reporting the debates in the Pennsylvania convention; they made ten million five hundred thousand ems; $69,668 90 for printing two thousand five hundred copies in two languages and binding them, and that the price paid there to compositors, when the debates were printed, was seven dollars a week, or twenty-two and a half cents a thousand ems when they worked by the piece. The price I pay here to compositors is twelve dollars a week, or forty cents a thousand ems for breviter, and forty-four cents a thousand ems for nonpareil type when they work by the piece. All the compositors in my office work by the piece.

"Now, to make a just comparison, I must deduct for the binding of the Pennsylvania debates; for setting them up in two languages; and for paper, as they were printed on larger type than the debates of Congress are printed. I will not allow myself anything for the difference between the cost of setting up type there and here; which it will be seen is near 100 per cent. I can afford to be liberal, and will make liberal reductions:

I deduct for binding.....$10,000 00
I deduct thirty three cents a thousand for setting up the second edition.....3,465 00
I deduct for two thirds the paper it took to print both editions, English and German, 760 reams, at $4 80 a ream.....3,648 00

$17,113 00

"Deduct this sum from the sum paid for reporting and printing and binding 2,500 copies, $90,177 05, and it leaves $73,064 05, which being divided by 2,500, the number of copies printed, and it shows that the Pennsylvania debates, which make 10,500,000 ems, cost $29 22 a copy. Reporting and printing the debates of Congress, which make 38,178,000 ems, cost only $17 71 a copy. At the rates paid for the Pennsylvania debates, a copy of the Congressional and Appendix would amount to $106 24, which is a little more than six times as much as Congress pays me for a copy."

Here are facts which have been open for weeks for investigation. If they are not true, let them be investigated. There is no printer in this city but what has his enemy. We all know that. I do not know that there is any individual who has not an enemy; certainly there is no printer or publisher of a paper who has not one. These statements have been published, and all have been invited to investigate them; and if all which is contained in the statement is not correct, let them prove that it is not. These things are not light upon the man who sustains these publications, and who himself has refused to go round and annoy you, Senators, in regard to his business. He has not been in the habit of stating his private grievances, and asking for favors. He places the facts before you as gentlemen who are candid, fair, and disposed to deal with him on terms which are best for the public interest.

Now, as to the debates in the Maryland convention. When her convention met to frame her constitution, Maryland also had her reporters. She got them on the best terms she could.

"The debates in the Maryland convention were not long; they are printed with the same kinds of type that the Congressional Globe and Appendix are printed; and, therefore, the calculation to show the difference in price will be short and simple. They made 3,115,000 ems, which were printed in 890 octavo pages. The reporting and making an index to them cost the State $3,635 80; and printing 500 copies cost $2,892 90, making together $6,498, which being divided by 500, the number of copies printed, shows that they cost the State $13 a copy. A copy of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, at this rate, would amount to $159 33, which is nine times the sum Congress pays me per copy."

These things are absolutely startling. That is what was paid at our next door. Compare it with the rates which we allow to our reporter. The copies of which I speak consist of several volumes. When I speak of a copy, I mean the volumes for the whole Congress, the long and the short session, containing the debates for the entire Congress. It includes the Congressional Globe and Appendix also.

"If any other evidence is needed to prove that I am printing the Congressional Globe and Appendix at ruinous rates, it will be found in the following facts."

The Committee on Printing, before I was a member of it, and which consisted of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] my friend from Alabama, [Mr. FITZPATRICK,] and the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. SMITH,] admitted that they were satisfied he was losing, but they were not satisfied with his statement as to the terms which should be agreed upon, and they therefore cut down the amount, and proposed to take from him forty-eight copies for each Senator—about twenty-five hundred copies, instead of five thousand.

"Eight years ago, when I commenced printing the Congressional Globe and Appendix at $6 a copy for a long session and $3 for a short one—"

That is the rate at which he prints still—

—the Congressional Globe was little more than a synopsis."

It is easy to refer back to the Congressional Globe, and there you will find that private bills were never reported, nor the debates on them. Sir, the value of these records is inestimable, even in reference to the debates that take place upon private bills, when they come up before this body. Let me ask any gentleman, of the class to which my honorable friend from Alabama belongs, the economists of the strict school, just to reflect on this subject. If you had had works of this kind printed in the days of the late war with Great Britain, when claims were brought up, which have been coming here ever since, through a period of forty years, how much would have been saved? Such a work to report the facts as they were known at the time in regard to private claims, would have saved to the Treasury more than it would have cost to print the debates from that time to the present; because, if the debates had been furnished in those days, when all the facts were known, some which were necessary to the proper understanding of the claim would have been retained, and the subsequent Congresses might have appealed to them; but the facts have been lost, while others which are brought forward for the interest of the claimants, have been preserved.

But a few days ago the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] regretted that a speech delivered on a private claim in this body within a few years, had not been reported, as he believed it would have saved the Senate the trouble of re-investigating that case. In the Globe all these cases are faithfully put on record, and it will become a valuable work for future reference.

"All the debates on private bills were left out of it altogether; I had my own time to print them in, and made something on them when I sold as many as nine thousand copies."

A man can do work more profitably when he has his own time in which to do it. In those times, if a report was published some days after the discussion, Senators were satisfied, but now, when a gentleman delivers a speech of any length, he has not concluded it before it is reported in part. As he speaks it passes from this body. It is written out in your post office, by men who are kept there for that purpose, and horses kept standing outside this Capitol, bear it to the press as the sheets are produced, and not unfrequently, as we retire from this Chamber, if we call in the printing office, we find in type remarks which we have just made.

Such is the rapid and perfect style in which the work is now done; such is the praiseworthy exertion and happy success which have attended the efforts of this one solitary agent of the Government, in fulfilling his contract with us. I say this one, because I have yet to hear of the first contract that has been made by the Government of the United States with any printer, which has not been the source of some kind of confusion and complaint; whereas, from this quarter, although the expense of the execution of the contract has been increased from day to day, and has entailed a heavier cost upon him, no complaint has been made. That is the way in which he has done his work. Here is a faithful servant of the body, employed under his contract, appealing to your reason, and appealing to nothing else. He has not begged privately for help that he might make money. He has simply said, there is my contract; it has not paid me, and is this the manner in which the Government wishes its business conducted, or shall I be compelled to go on at a loss, and in the end be compelled to abandon it altogether? If it were proposed to this body to say whether or not we would adhere to this rate, and lose the production of these reports in this way, or take up any other person as a reporter, and run the risk of his doing the work, I think there would not be more than three Senators, if there would be three, and I doubt whether there would be one, that would say, I will refuse it. I can say, on the contrary, that sooner than risk a loss of that character, and injure the public service so seriously, I certainly would vote for it, and give him ten per cent. more than is proposed.

Mr. WELLER. Will the Senator allow me to give notice of an amendment which I propose to submit to the resolution, unless my friend, who has devoted his attention to the subject, should give me some reason why it should not be offered?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. WELLER. There is considerable opposition, as is disclosed this morning, to that part of the resolution which increases the number of copies of the Globe to be taken by the Senate. In order to obviate that, I shall simply move to strike out so much of the resolution as provides for an additional number of copies, and insert:

And that in lieu of the price now paid to the Congressional Globe and Appendix, there shall be paid at the rate of $9 50 per column for reporting and publishing the proceedings of the Senate.

I understand from a reliable source that the actual expense of reporting and printing is a little over $9 00 a column. Now, we are all willing to give the proprietor of that paper a fair remuneration. I think this amendment will do it; and at the proper time I shall move it as a substitute for the latter branch of the resolution, unless my friend has some objection to it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am very glad to hear that. It occurred to me last night, but I had forgotten it. It occurred to me in merely running through these calculations that this would be the plan. The honorable Senator from California has struck it exactly. It will be just and it will be right, in my opinion. I must say, that I do not think it will be as satisfactory to the publisher of the Globe and Appendix. But, sir, here are the facts in regard to it. We are paying now $7 50 a column. The Intelligencer broke down in the reporting at that rate. The Union has been broken down at it twice. We have still the Globe going on at $7 50 a column; and gentlemen come here, in order to show how conclusive this thing is, and ask you to employ all the papers to print, and leave out the reporting. Well, sir, let those papers print at a rate which is a fair compensation. I am now satisfied, from the information I have, that there is one concern in the city that will not touch your proposition to print at a cent lower than $4 50 a column, and it demands $5, even if the contract is made on the proposition as offered by the Senator from Michigan.

If $4 50 is a fair rate to pay for publishing without reporting, what is it proper to allow to Mr. Rives for the reporting? He is now paid $7 50 for reporting and printing the debates. If you deduct $4 50, which is the price now proposed to be allowed other papers for merely publishing, you will leave him but three dollars for reporting. Now, what is the cost of reporting? Evidence has been furnished showing conclusively that $4 74 a column is the actual positive cost of every column of the proceedings of this body, as reported in the Daily Globe. The cost of reporting alone, without allowing one particle of profit to the proprietor, is $4 74. Suppose you were to allow him a profit of twenty-six cents a column, it would bring up the item of reporting to five dollars a column. Then, when you allow him $7 50 a column, and deduct from that five dollars for reporting, what does it leave him for printing, for materials, and for every other expense connected with his establishment? You leave him but $2 50 a column to pay for the expenses of his establishment—for labor, day and night, necessary for the rapid execution of the work, which he has performed to the extraordinary satisfaction of every gentleman who fills a seat in this body, who is satisfied that, when he makes remarks here, there is no power on earth which can misrepresent him, or, at least, that he will be correctly represented on the official record of our proceedings. Then, on this basis, you allow Mr. Rives only $2 50 for printing, and all the other necessary expenses except reporting, while you propose to pay $4 50 to the other papers for publishing by daylight from printed copy. Thus you give him two dollars a column less for publishing than you propose to give the other papers, supposing that we allow him five dollars a column for reporting, which is the actual cost, with an addition of twenty-six cents for profit. Lest there should be a disposition to quibble about little things, I will state that $4 74 is not the amount paid to the reporter employed by Mr. Rives. Four dollars and fifty cents is the amount paid him, and the additional sum of twenty-four cents is estimated as the cost of the wages of the men who carry the copy from the Capitol to the office, and for the horses employed in that service. These items bring up the reporting to $4 74 a column; and if we allow the proprietor twenty-six cents profit, and should, in addition to that, allow him for printing the same rate which is now proposed to allow to the other papers, what would be the consequences? Why, clearly, that he ought to receive $9 50 a column for every column of the debates. The proposition of the Senator from California to pay him that amount is the one which ought to be adopted, unless we agree to the proposition to take five thousand extra copies, which I think is the best one, and the one which should be accepted.

I wish now to call the attention of the Senate to some further statements contained in this letter of Mr. Rives, and then I shall have done. I intend to say no more, after I get through with what I propose now to submit to the Senate, unless some other points are started. I believe that, from the investigation which I have made, I am capable of explaining all the points in regard to this question; at least, I understand them myself thoroughly. I have a number of copies of this statement of Mr. Rives before me, and Senators who desire to examine it for their own satisfaction, can have an opportunity of doing so.

Let me call the attention of Senators to what Mr. Rives is willing to do. He says:

"I am willing to do it well at the lowest prices it has been done for in this city; but I cannot do it for the prices that some printers say I can do it for."

He refers, of course, to printers like Messrs. Moore and Towers, and others, if there be any others, who have given such opinions as they have. He says further:

"I will agree to report and print the debates of Congress as low as either of the offices for which Mr. Moore has been foreman, has done the public printing, even when the copy has been furnished to them without cost, (which is not my case,) and no alterations made in it afterwards."

In order that the Senate may understand this point thoroughly, I will explain it. Mr. Rives means that he will report and print at as low a price as public printing alone was ever done in any office with which Mr. Moore was connected in former days, when materials and wages were less than they are now. He will report and print for Congress at the same rates that those offices printed when they had no reporting to do, and the copy from which to print the book or manuscript was furnished to them without cost. This, in point of fact, as reporting is about one half the cost, is a proposition to print for half the prices charged by the offices with which the gentleman who gives this testimony has ever been connected. Is not that a plain, easily understood proposition? Does it look like extravagance? Does it tend to show that we ought not to adopt the proposition of the Senator from Michigan? Surely not; but the reverse. But Mr. Rives continues:

"I will report and print the debates for one third the rate that Congress has ever paid for any other debates in book form. I will report and print the debates for one half the rate it pays for the lowest priced books it purchases from individuals."

That shows at what rates he is now doing this work. Does it look as if he were receiving large profits? He next refers to works purchased of Little & Brown, which I suppose may be considered as a fair criterion, for theirs is one of the largest and best conducted printing establishments in the United States. Mr. Rives says in regard to that:

"I suppose the books which Congress purchases from Little & Brown, of Boston, are bought at a lower rate than any others, as printing can be executed much cheaper in Boston than it can be done here. I believe we pay at least 33 per cent more here than they do there. I had the Statutes at Large printed by them in my eye when I said above that I would report and print the debates of Congress at one half the rate Congress pays for books purchased from individuals."

That is to say, he will report and print the debates of Congress for one half the rate which Congress pays to Little & Brown for the publication in pamphlet form of the laws of the United States. Does this look extravagant? The statements contained in this letter are capable of demonstration. They have been published for weeks; the assertions contained in it are open for examination, and certainly those with whose calculations it comes so completely in conflict would have made some attempt to show that its statements are incorrect, if such were the fact. But, sir, I say clearly, that if the statements contained in this letter be incorrect, and if Mr. Rives is capable of falsification to the extent to which he does falsify in this letter, if what he states be not true, and if he is not a loser by his contracts with this body, he is an unprincipled scoundrel, and ought not to receive the patronage of the body, nor be admitted on this floor, much less to hold a control over the public records, which involve not only the interests of the country, but the honor of every Senator who is within the sound of my voice.

Mr. DAWSON. I desire to call the attention of my friend from Arkansas to a document which I hold in my hand, and I desire to hear some explanation from him, merely for my own satisfaction. I understand him to say that the great difficulty between Mr. Towers and Mr. Rives arises out of the price of paper, and the proper amount to be allowed for press-work per token.

Mr. JOHNSON. They are two of the principal items of difference.

Mr. DAWSON. Now, I desire, on these two points, to read to the Senate a statement which I have in my hand, and then to hear the Senator from Arkansas in explanation. It will be recollected that in 1850, a committee was appointed by the House of Representatives to investigate the claims of Mr. Ritchie; and the report of that committee is to be found among the Miscellaneous Documents of the first session of the Thirty-First Congress. I wish to call the Senator's attention—for I desire to vote understandingly upon this subject—to the testimony of Mr. Rives himself, given before that committee, as to the cost of paper, in regard to which it is alleged that so great an error has been committed by Mr. Towers. At page thirty-five of House Miscellaneous Document, No. 55, for that year, we find the following testimony of Mr. Rives:

"The Congressional Globe is printed mostly on Fouldner paper, and always when we can get it. Witness thinks there are several Fouldner machines in this country. He buys of Bartow & Co., of New York city. Their paper is manufactured at Norwich, Connecticut, by Fouldner machinery. He pays $3 25 at the mills for such paper as the Congressional Globe is now printed upon. It costs about $3 33 delivered here. The paper weighs about thirty-two pounds to the ream, of the size of twenty-four by thirty-eight."

The paper of the Daily Globe, he says, is of the same kind, but is heavier, and costs $4 08 per ream. Thus we find that, according to this statement, the paper for the Congressional Globe and Appendix was manufactured at Norwich, Connecticut, and that the proprietor paid $3 25 a ream at the mills for such paper.

Then, in relation to the price for press-work, Mr. Haliday, foreman in the Globe office, testified before that committee in this way:

"The common price for press-work in this city is fifty cents per token of two hundred and fifty sheets of sixteen pages each; although, if a man has the presses, he could make money on a large job at twenty-five cents per token."

I wish to call the gentleman's attention to these two statements, for the purpose of justifying myself in voting for the reference of this subject. I am partly in favor of this resolution, but I wish to have a full report made, stating the facts, so that I can act understandingly upon the subject. Now the difference between twenty-five cents and $1 06 per token for press-work, and the difference between $3 33 and $4 80 for paper, are two material points; and in regard to them I desire to have full information.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the Senator tell me what is the date of that testimony?

Mr. DAWSON. Eighteen hundred and fifty.

Mr. JOHNSON. I presume, then, that the Senator is aware, or he will readily understand upon the suggestion, that since that time there has been a change in the price of almost every article properly entering into the calculation of the cost of an establishment of this nature. An increase of price has been going on, and is now going on, in all these things, and yet the proprietor is only receiving now the same rate of pay which he received when prices were lower. It is notorious over the whole country, that the price of paper is everywhere greater now than it was three or four years ago, and it is now extravagantly high. The operation of our Post Office laws is such that it is almost hopeless to suppose that there will be any reduction in the price of paper. Our postage laws admit the passage of printed matter through the mails at a very low rate; so that there has been a great impetus given to every description of publications, and thus the consumption of paper at this time is much more than it ever was at any former period. The demand for paper has increased so much, and is so dependent upon another branch of trade, (which is a singular one, and one which I had hardly ever thought of before I investigated this subject, though I had heard of it,)—the rag trade—that now it is absolutely impossible to get, in this country, a sufficient quantity of material with which to make paper; and the material is imported to this country from the Mediterranean and the countries bordering upon it. The immense amount of paper now consumed in the country is mainly attributable to the action of the Post Office laws; and there is hardly any room to hope that the prices of paper can be reduced to anything like what in former days would have been considered a reasonable sum. I presume the Senator from Alabama can easily ascertain at what rate Congress is now furnished, by contract, with paper for the public printing. He can ascertain that by inquiry from the Superintendent of Public Printing, and he can, no doubt, inform the Senate as to that.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have never inquired of the Superintendent what price he is paying for paper by contract.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not recollect what it is; but I understand it is alleged that the present contractor is losing, and must necessarily continue to lose, at the present prices. I have heard that he has stated himself that his loss cannot be less than $20,000 this year on his contract, in consequence of the sudden rise in the price of paper since the contract was made for this Congress. The increase in the price of paper is not a small sum to a man who is losing every day, and, in this point of view, paper becomes a very heavy item. Three dollars and twenty-five cents would have bought more paper in 1850 than $4 25, or even five dollars, will buy now; and the same increase of prices has been observable in almost everything else in the country. This is the answer to that part of the inquiry made by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. DAWSON. I thought that perhaps the Senator had a statement before him of the price paid for paper during the present year.

Mr. JOHNSON. It has been varying during this year.

Mr. DAWSON. I wanted to know for my own satisfaction, and for the purpose of voting understandingly.

Mr. JOHNSON. Since the present Congress met, the proprietor of the Globe establishment has had to pay five dollars a ream for the paper on which he prints the debates, and he has sometimes paid as much as $6 50 a ream for it. Notwithstanding this, four dollars a ream is all Mr. William Towers allows in his estimates for paper. If this gentleman knows (for he may not) anything about the matter, he is bound to know that no paper like that on which the Globe is printed can be had to-day for four dollars a ream.

I come now, sir, to the difficulty suggested by my friend from Georgia, as to the price paid per token for press-work. I imagine that, on examination, it will be found that when Mr. Haliday, in his testimony, speaks of press-work at fifty cents a token, he refers to its actual cost. It is being done at the actual cost of fifty cents for Mr. Rives by the brothers of this Mr. William Towers. Mr. Rives now pays fifty cents to Messrs. L. & J. T. Towers, printers in this city, for doing some of his press-work; and yet, William Towers estimates it at thirty cents a token! There is nothing improper, that I see, in the testimony which the Senator from Georgia has cited, and nothing at all inconsistent with Mr. Rives's calculations now. Mr. Towers's calculation for press-work is thirty cents a token, but Mr. Haliday, in the testimony which has been alluded to, said that fifty cents was the cost of it at that day. Yet now, when printers' wages have risen twenty per centum, and when the price of materials and labor of every description has increased, we find that Mr. Towers estimates that press-work can be done for less than Mr. Haliday estimated in 1850!

But, sir, there is another view which ought to be conclusive and satisfactory on this point, and it is that this work is done at very low rates in comparison with the prices paid for similar work elsewhere. Notwithstanding the rate of fifty cents a token for press-work is alluded to in the testimony which has been quoted as a proper price, Congress, when they came to settle, in a spirit of justice, with Mr. Ritchie, who was the public printer at the time when that testimony was given, finally allowed him over a dollar a token for press-work.

I am informed, further, that the contract price for the paper now used for the printing of Congress is $6 11 a ream. I am unable to state what kind of paper it is, but a statement is furnished to me that $6 11 is the price paid.

Mr. WELLER. I should like to be informed by the Senator, what is the manner in which the contract was made for paper at $6 11 a ream, for I understand that just as good a quality of paper is purchased by some of the newspaper establishments in this city at $3 75 a ream.

Mr. WALKER. They do not use as good paper.

Mr. DAWSON. I wished to justify myself by getting the proper information, but I thought it best to get it from the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, Mr. President, in conclusion I wish to say that, although I have been talking for some time in regard to this subject, I have not gone fully into the merits of the case. I took pains some months since to investigate the matter fully, and to examine Mr. Rives's statements, item by item. I made some notes of the results at which I arrived. I have not quoted those notes during these remarks, and I do not mean to detain the Senate by reading them. I will merely say that I believe before God and man that what I have stated in regard to this matter is true, and I believe we are not paying the proprietor of the Globe what he ought to be paid, and that unless we take five thousand additional copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, he cannot keep up his press and cannot go on beyond the present session of Congress. The proposition suggested by the Senator from California [Mr. WELLER] would, no doubt, afford him relief; but I think that the proposition to take five thousand additional copies is much the better form in which to give additional compensation; but unless it is given in one form or another, I fear that Mr. Rives will not be able to continue much longer.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of protracting this discussion; but I deem it proper to say a few words in answer to the able and eloquent argument of the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON.] I will not undertake to review the various estimates which he has submitted to the Senate; but there are some facts, connected with other persons who have been drawn into this controversy, which impel me to make a few remarks in answer to what the Senator has said. Before doing that, however, I wish to say a word in answer to what was said by the Senator from Indiana; and I desire that he and the Senate shall understand me on this question.

When the motion was made yesterday to refer this subject to the Committee on Printing, the Senator from Indiana intimated that the Committee on Printing, as now constituted, were prejudiced against his proposition, and consequently, that nothing was to be hoped for at their hands. Perhaps the Senate may not be aware that I am now the only member of the Committee on Printing who was a member of the committee when this case underwent their scrutiny. As I remarked yesterday, the two gentlemen who were my colleagues on the committee when that question was before us have resigned their positions as members of the committee; and besides that, they are now absent from the Senate, and, consequently, all matters pertaining to anything connected with the action of the committee before the retirement of those two gentlemen necessarily devolved upon me. I am inclined to think that that Senator comes to a wrong conclusion, when he intimates to the Senate that the Committee on Printing, as at present constituted, is committed against his resolution. It is not necessary for me to say to the Senate that the honorable Senator from Arkansas, who is a member of that committee, and myself, differ radically on this question, and that the other gentleman composing that committee [Mr. FESSENDEN] has not been in his seat since the Senator from Arkansas and himself were added to the committee. How, then, can the Senator from Indiana intimate that the committee are prejudiced against his proposition, when the Senator from Arkansas and myself disagree on that question, and when we shall have to bring to our aid, as we necessarily will do when he returns, the efficient services of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. FESSENDEN], who is now a member of the committee?

I deem it proper to make these statements to satisfy the Senate that there is no commitment on the question, so far as the majority of the committee are concerned. The Senator from Arkansas and myself both belong to the same political party, but he and I cannot see alike on this question. Hence, when the third member of the committee arrives and takes his seat in the committee room, he will sit as an impartial and independent member, prepared to do justice according to the dictates of his own judgment. Those gentlemen who were members of the committee at the time when they were sitting in judgment on this question, have all resigned, save myself, and consequently we have now two new members on the committee, one of whom has heard nothing of this debate, and will embark on the duties assigned him as a member of the committee, I am perfectly sure, without any prejudice or prepossessions for or against any paper in this matter. Hence, I cannot conceive what necessity there was for throwing out the intimation that, by referring the question to that committee, you are sending it to those who have prejudged it, and who are not inclined to give an impartial examination to the facts which may be submitted.

Although I am a member of the Committee on Printing, and have been on it longer than the Senator from Arkansas has been, I am frank to say that he seems to have bestowed more labor and more investigation on this question than I have. I have not had time to do more than I have consistent with other public duties. My object has been to get such information in regard to it as would enable the Senate to act understandingly. The Committee on Printing sought that information, when they obtained from a practical printer the estimates which I had the honor to submit to the Senate yesterday. It is perhaps due to the Senate, due to frankness, and due to the position which the question now occupies before the Senate, that I should disclose the history of the transaction connected with the manner in which we obtained those statements. When we required the statements at the hands of Mr. Towers, as clerk to the Superintendent of Public Printing, they were furnished to us. I did not conceal from the honorable Senator from Arkansas the fact that we had received such information; but, at his solicitation, I furnished him with these statements. He had submitted his resolution; and the evidence laid before the committee by the gentleman to whom we intrusted the examination of the question, differed widely, if his statements were true, from the views of the gentleman who had submitted the resolution. Hence I deemed it but fair, and such was the sense of the committee, to apprise him of the fact, that if we were to take the large number of books contemplated by his resolution, the effect would be, as we were informed, to increase the compensation of the publisher of the Globe to a larger amount than was necessary, and a larger amount than would afford him a fair and a remunerative price. After I had furnished the gentleman with these statements, the next I heard of them was a review of the whole of them in the Globe, from which the gentleman has read copious extracts this morning. The editor of the Globe took these estimates, and they underwent a very searching review from his pen, and that review was laid before the Senate. Upon it the Senator from Arkansas has predicated a large portion of his argument this morning. He has seen proper to scrutinize with some severity the estimates submitted to the committee by Mr. Towers. Why, sir, that gentleman was not a volunteer in offering his testimony to the committee. It was his duty to submit those estimates to the Committee on Printing when required by them, and he performed it.

Mr. JOHNSON. If that is so, I wish to ask the Senator, why did not the committee require Mr. Towers, when he was invited to make these estimates, to go and investigate inside the Globe office? Should not his investigation have been made directly into the matter itself? But Mr. Towers says expressly, in his report or statement, that he has not had the means of making that investigation.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is the very point which I was coming to. When the statements of Mr. Rives met the eyes of the committee, we required at Mr. Towers's hands that he should answer them, and satisfy the committee that his calculations were based on correct data. As he differed widely from the publisher of the Globe in the statement submitted by him, we deemed it due to the Globe, due to truth, and due to a correct understanding of the question, that he should review the criticism of the Globe upon his estimates, and furnish the committee with that review. I have his answer here; and I desire to have it read to the Senate, because I presume it is their object to seek information. The committee were satisfied that gentlemen who were intimate with the printing business were better prepared to shed light upon the question than other persons, and therefore it was that we called in the aid of Mr. Towers; and for that reason I now ask for the reading of Mr. Towers's reply.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

WASHINGTON, March 20, 1854.

GENTLEMEN: A printed statement has been placed in my hands, a copy of which, I am informed, has been forwarded to members of the Senate. It is without address or signature, but its ostensible object is to disprove the general correctness and fairness of certain calculations which I submitted to you at your request. It emanated from the Globe office.

It will be remembered that the proprietor of the Globe newspaper, printed in this city, addressed several letters to a member of the Senate, in which he stated that he was losing money upon his contract with the Senate for publishing its proceedings in the Daily Globe, and suggested an additional subscription on the part of the Senate to the Congressional Globe, in order that he might thereby be saved further loss. These letters (with several affidavits going to show the expenses of the printing establishment of the Globe, but not the cost of publishing the proceedings of Congress in that paper) were placed in my hands by you, with the request that I would ascertain as nearly as practicable, first, the amount of Mr. Rives's loss on his contract; and, secondly, what the net cost would be to him of four thousand nine hundred and twenty copies of the Congressional Globe, in addition to those already subscribed for by the Senate, leaving the question of profit for the consideration of the committee.

The prosecution of the first of these inquiries I knew would, besides requiring more time and labor than I have at my command, provoke a controversy with Mr. Rives most repugnant to my inclinations, more particularly as it was a subject in which I had no interest, and felt none. I therefore stated my objections to entering upon this investigation, and asked to be excused from it, to which you cordially and kindly assented.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

FRIDAY, MAY 19, 1854.

NEW SERIES....No. 77.

An answer to the second inquiry I prepared hastily, and it is this answer that has called forth the statement from the Globe office, without address or signature, which has been forwarded to Senators, and in which certain exceptions are taken to the correctness of the statement I furnished at your request. I owe it to you, as well as to myself, not to let this statement pass unnoticed.

First, as to the number of pages of matter in the Congressional Globe and Appendix. An associate in the office in which I am employed undertook to ascertain for me the number of pages in the nine volumes composing this work for the Thirty-Second Congress. He reported to me the number to be 5,300, but it appears that the actual number was 5,454. I took the first number for the basis of my calculations, and upon it they were correctly made, with the exception of the cost of folding, for which I allowed a small advance on the price paid for folding congressional documents on paper of the same size, which was too much by half.

The only difference, then, between the Globe statement and the one I furnished you, is in the cost of paper and press-work, respectively—the only items of expense of any importance in printing anything, after the type is prepared for the press. I have estimated the cost of paper, such as the Congressional Globe is usually printed upon, at $4 per ream; the Globe says it is worth $4.80. Let us see: The proprietor of the Globe, in his testimony, under oath, before a committee of Congress, on the 24th July, 1850, said "He pays $3.25 at the mills, for such paper as the Congressional Globe is now printed upon; it costs about $3.33 delivered here. The paper weighs about thirty-two pounds to the ream, of the size of twenty-four by thirty-eight inches. There was but little fluctuation in the price of paper, according to the best information I have been able to obtain, between 1850 and the autumn of 1853, and the recent rise in price probably does not exceed ten per cent.; but I will put it down at fifteen per cent., which on $3.33, would raise the price, at this time, to about $3.83 per ream. I will state a fact to illustrate the correctness of the opinion that the rise in the price of paper has not been so great as has been asserted. In December last, there were many competitors for furnishing the paper upon which the congressional documents are printed at prices below the contract prices of the preceding year, and contracts were entered into for furnishing this paper at twenty cents per ream less upon one class and forty-eight cents per ream less upon another class. Did this indicate any considerable advance in the price of paper up to the first of December last? If the publisher of the Globe is now using paper for the Congressional Globe so far superior to that heretofore used as the price he says he pays indicates, (and I have no reason to doubt that he does,) he has a reason for it satisfactory to himself. But admit that it is worth what he says, $4.80; then, according to his own showing, in the case referred to me, his profit would be $15,119 for the Congress, while I made it $15,616 upon the increased subscription of four thousand nine hundred and twenty copies—if my estimate of the cost of press-work is correct, to which I now invite your attention.

It is not asserted that, in the case referred to me, I am too low in my estimate of the cost of press-work, but that inference is left to be drawn from the following remark of the Globe: "The principal printing offices in the city—the Union, the Globe, the Sentinel, and Towers's—charge an average of $1.06 a token for printing the speeches of members of Congress, as is proved by their answers to a letter written to all of them by the Hon. R. W. Johnson; and they take their own time to print them in." Now, the Globe does not say that, in the case referred to me, the press-work would cost him more than thirty cents per token; but it attempts to create the impression that I have not only stated what is untrue, but have wilfully done so, else why this question, following immediately the above quotation: "Now, knowing these facts, how can any man say, or rather why would any man say, that the Globe office can print the proceedings of Congress, which have often to be printed in a great hurry, at a heavy additional expense, for thirty cents a token, and fold them for twelve cents a token?"

The answers of the Union, the Globe, the Sentinel, and the Towers's to the letter of Senator Johnson have no bearing upon the question at issue, because the price they would ask for executing a particular job of press-work in one case, (such a one, for instance, as was put to them,) is no criterion to judge of the cost to them of executing some other job. But I will state a few facts that will throw some light upon this subject, and enable the committee to draw correct conclusions.

The proprietor of the Globe is almost daily having "speeches of members of Congress" printed at one of the offices mentioned (not his own) at fifty cents per token, which pays all expenses, and leaves the printer a fair profit.

The proprietor of the Globe can make a contract with as responsible a printing establishment as any in Washington for the execution of all his press-work at fifty cents per token, clear of all other expense to him.

During the last summer one of the offices mentioned was helping another of them "out of a drag" of press-work at fifty cents per token. It was taken from the office executing it, and taken to the Globe office to be executed, under the plea that too much was charged for the press-work, and it could be done cheaper at the Globe office.

Well, if fifty cents per token will pay all the expenses of press-work, and leave a fair profit to the printer, is it unfair to estimate the net cost at thirty cents, with the explanation I gave the committee?

But this is not all. In an investigation which took place before a committee of Congress in the summer of 1850, upon the subject of printing, the following testimony was elicited, under oath:

J. F. Haliday. "I am foreman at the Globe office." [Mr. H. occupies the same position now.] "The common price for press-work in this city is fifty cents per token of two hundred and fifty sheets of sixteen pages; although, if a man has the presses, he could make money on a large job at twenty-five cents."—See Ho. Miss. Doc. 55, 31st Cong., 1st Sess., pp. 1 and 5.

George Gordon sworn. "I am pressman at the Union office." [Mr. G. occupies the same position now.] Press-work can be done at twenty-five cents per ream, (or twelve and a half cents per token,) and it will realize a small profit. Take, for instance, our Napier press; it will make eighteen thousand impressions a day; divide by four hundred and eighty, the number of sheets in a ream, and you have thirty-seven and a half reams worked off in a day, at twenty-five cents per ream, is $9.37½. (Mr. G. then goes on to show the expense of running the press.) You will see that a profit is rendered instead of a loss, though it is small."—See same doc., pp. 38 and 69.

The machinery used in the Globe office, at the time the above testimony was taken, was the same as is now used there. That to which Mr. Gordon refers, it will be perceived, is the Napier press, which is almost entirely discarded for book work, but almost the only press in use for printing newspapers.

There is a mass of testimony in the document referred to of the same character as the above, and upon other branches of the printing business, worth looking into; but not one iota going to show that the information I furnished at your request is not truthful, and entirely reliable for all practical purposes. "Now, knowing these facts, how can any man say, or rather why would any man say that the Globe office can [not] execute press-work for thirty cents a token and fold them for twelve cents a token?" particularly when it was stated that no allowance was made in this statement for interest or capital invested.

I regret exceedingly the necessity which I think exists for troubling you, gentlemen, with this communication. My apology must be found in the fact that I have nothing to sustain me in the good opinion of my fellow-citizens but whatever character I may possess for truth and honesty. I acknowledge your right to put questions affecting the public interests to me, and my obligation to answer them truthfully. And when I answer otherwise, or furnish information the general correctness of which cannot be fully sustained by competent evidence, I shall deserve and expect the withdrawal of that confidence of the committee which I feel proud to believe that I possess.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM TOWERS.

To the COMMITTEE ON PRINTING of the Senate, U. S.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That, sir, is the argument of Mr. Towers, furnished to the committee in answer to Mr. Rives's review of the first estimates submitted by him. If, in view of this conflict of testimony, the Senate determine that they are competent to say, without the investigation of a committee, what is a reasonable compensation to be allowed, and to fix upon a permanent basis as to the reporting for this body, let them do so. I have discharged my duty. I have already mingled in the debate more than I designed to do. I have done so, however, from the fact that the two honorable gentlemen who were my colleagues on the committee when this question was submitted to their consideration, are now absent. I have nothing further to do with this matter. I have already occupied the attention of the Senate more than I designed, and I will now leave the question. I intend to say nothing more about it unless forced to do so in explanation.

Mr. WALKER. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Alabama to the character of the testimony upon which he is relying. I wish to refer him to one simple point in it, and then to ask him if he thinks that he can repose with confidence upon such testimony, much less ask the Senate to rely upon it.

It appears, sir, that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] addressed a letter to Mr. Moore, and accompanying that letter, he submitted the estimates of Mr. Rives, and requested him to review them, and give an opinion upon them. In place of doing that, Mr. Moore went into calculations of his own. In giving his opinion upon one very simple point, it will be found, by reference to his letter, that he was so far erroneous, and so far erroneous within his own knowledge, that it would seem to me we ought to condemn his whole testimony.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The communication which has just been read is Mr. Towers's, and not Mr. Moore's.

Mr. WALKER. I know that; but I am speaking now of the testimony of Mr. Moore; and we know that the testimony of Mr. Towers is very curiously corroborated by that of Mr. Moore.

In his calculation, Mr. Moore says, that "$6 40 a column is sufficient for reporting and publishing the debates in the Daily Globe, and then correcting, altering, and making them up in book form, making a second edition for the Congressional Globe and Appendix." I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that Mr. Moore, being the foreman of the Intelligencer office, must himself have known that that very office had surrendered its contract with the Senate, and refused to fulfill it when it was paid $7 50 per column for the simple publication in the Intelligencer, without having to correct, put in book form, and convert it into a second edition. He knew that fact; Mr. Towers knew that fact; every member of the Senate knew it. Not only did the Intelligencer do so, but the Union did likewise. I have before me the letter of the proprietors of the Intelligencer refusing any longer to carry on the contract at that price, because it did not remunerate them; and yet it is proposed to take the testimony of their foreman as conclusive on this subject, when he says that, for all that is done by Mr. Rives, $6 40 per column is a sufficient compensation. It does seem to me that in points so glaring and so uncontrovertible as these, the man himself has shown most conclusively that his testimony is not to be relied upon.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I certainly should not have contested the question before the Senate in the manner in which I have done unless I had the most implicit confidence in the estimates furnished to me by Mr. Towers. I know that gentleman, but I have not known him very long. With Mr. Moore I have a very limited acquaintance; I think I never saw him but once, and that was a few hours ago, just as I was leaving my room. Whether Mr. Moore and Mr. Towers agree upon the isolated question referred to by the Senator or not I do not undertake to say, for I must really declare to the Senate that I have not minutely examined the communication of Mr. Moore. It was elicited by a letter from the then chairman of the committee, and, although it was placed in my possession, I filed it among the papers, intending to review the whole matter before the question ultimately came up before the Senate. But if I had not an abiding faith, and a conscientious conviction, that these gentlemen, particularly Mr. Towers, approximated to the truth, I should never have presented the statements which I have done.

Mr. WALKER. I concede that such is the impression of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I knew the Senator meant nothing offensive. I believe that Mr. Towers himself, though he may not be strictly correct in regard to every minute item, thinks he is in the neighborhood of what is right; and I have confidence in his capacity to come to correct conclusions.

Mr. WELER. But will the Senator explain the point referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Do Mr. Moore and Mr. Towers agree on that point?

Mr. WALKER. I do not know to what extent they agree.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think the Senator will find that Mr. Towers does not concur in that statement. They agree in many things, I understand, but not in all.

Mr. WALKER. It will be found that the results of the calculations of these two gentlemen are very similar indeed.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. On many questions, they are.

Mr. WALKER. You may take up the points given in the testimony, one by one, and you will find that the errors are no more egregious in the instance which I have given, than they will be found to be in almost every other. I give this only as an instance; I do not wish to detain the Senate, or I could go through all the points made by Mr. Moore. Mr. Rives, in reviewing the testimony, says that the statements of Mr. Moore and Mr. Towers agree more nearly than their relationship; and the errors are very great in both. The instance which I have given is but a fair illustration of the errors and blunders which they have committed throughout.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The difference between Messrs. Moore and Towers on the one side, and the Globe on the other, or at least one difference is, that in their calculations they only allow about half as much per token for press-work as the Globe claims. The great difference, in my recollection, is, perhaps, about half a cent; and that, perhaps, applied to a token. Of this, however, I am not certain.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Mr. President, so long as this discussion was confined to our friends on the other side of the Chamber, as a family affair, I never intended to interfere with it; but as it has assumed a different phase, and as I may now possibly have some interest in it, I desire to suggest to the Senate some of the difficulties which lie in my way. So far as I am personally concerned, I would not give a copper for the newspaper press of this city. I feel no concern for the Union, the Intelligencer, the Sentinel, or the Era; but I do feel some concern about the reports of the Senate; I feel some concern about the Globe. It is not a political paper; but it is a record of the proceedings of the Senate of the United States; and to that extent I have an interest in it. It seems to me, however, that it is very difficult for any Senator here to form a satisfactory or correct judgment upon this subject, with the information which we have now before us. Here are two members of the Committee on Printing who enjoy the confidence of the Senate to the fullest extent, not only for their capacity but for their integrity and honesty: and yet they differ toto calo upon this question. I have every confidence in the judgment and integrity of the Senator from Alabama; and I have every confidence in the honesty and integrity of the Senator from Arkansas; but they differ upon this question. Then where shall I go? Upon whose judgment shall I rely? These Senators concur in scarcely a single fact connected with this matter. They are the only two members of the Committee on Printing now present. There is a third member, as I understand, who as yet has never been acting with the committee. But we are called upon now to decide between these two gentlemen.

Why establish and organize committees here? It is for the purpose of investigating such questions as it is impossible for the Senate, in its aggregate capacity, to examine. The committees report facts to us, and we act upon their suggestions. The members of the Committee on Printing, who are present, are equally divided upon the subject, and we are called upon to decide this question between them. I confess I am not prepared to do it. I want to do exactly what is right; and I presume every Senator has a desire to do what is right; but how are we to ascertain what is right? The Senator from Alabama assures us that if we take the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas we shall do wrong; and the Senator from Arkansas is equally certain that if we follow the lead of the Senator from Alabama we shall do wrong. Where then are we to go, and what are we to do? But, sir, what public necessity is there for such urgent haste? Why should we be required to vote on this matter to-day, or to-morrow, or next week? When it is proposed to vote away, perhaps, $100,000 of the public money, is it not better to wait, and take time and let the full committee get together, and let them agree, or let a majority of them agree upon this question?

There is but one point in this matter about which I feel any interest, and that is in sustaining the reporter of the Senate. If he is receiving a fair and adequate compensation, I am for giving him no more; and if he is not, I am for giving such compensation as will be fair, and equitable, and just. That far I am willing to go. But when a proposition is made to publish our proceedings in the newspaper press of this city, at an expense of $48,000 a Congress, I am not prepared to vote for it. I do not care a straw whether they are published in the Union, the Intelligencer, or the Sentinel. If they do not choose to publish them for the benefit of their readers, let them go unpublished; but let us publish them here, in the organ which we have selected, which is not a party paper, but which belongs to the Government, so far as its reports go.

Now, sir, this resolution proposes to pay three papers in this city for copying our proceedings from the Globe. I do not see upon what principle it is to be done. I do not think I can bring myself to vote for it. If it is to be done, I do not see upon what principle of equity or justice the Senate can refuse to incorporate the National Era into this proposition, and I am not prepared to go for that. The same principle that would lead you to publish in these other papers would justify the publication in the National Era. You might as well go further, and propose to publish the proceedings in some leading paper of every State of the Union, as in either of the papers proposed by this resolution.

Mr. PETTIT. And better.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Yes, sir, in my judgment, far better. Then we are to appropriate $48,000 a Congress, according to the estimate of the Senator from Michigan, which I presume is correct, to the local newspaper press of the city of Washington, to publish in their papers the proceedings of the Senate of the United States, and the whole amount of the daily circulation of all these papers is only four thousand one hundred. We are then to pay $48,000 to get the proceedings of the Senate published to, and circulated among, four thousand one hundred people. In my judgment, it would be infinitely better for us to establish a press of our own, and send out one hundred thousand copies a day, if we wish to do so; and I apprehend that we could do it for this amount of money. But if this is to be done merely for the purpose of disseminating intelligence throughout the country, which is a very laudable, proper, and patriotic object, I think we had better stop and inquire whether there is not some better way of doing it, and some way that will be more equal and just to the whole country.

I hold in my hand a resolution which I understand was reported from the Committee on Printing, as to the amount of increased pay that should be given to the Globe. If you will satisfy me that it is necessary to take five thousand copies from its proprietor, I am willing to vote for it. If it is necessary to take ten thousand copies, I will vote for that; but if a lesser sum will answer the purpose, and give him a fair remuneration, I am for that lesser sum. Here is a resolution, reported, as I understand, by a majority of the committee, in which they propose to take one half the number of copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix proposed to be taken by the resolution now before us. The question arises, are we to take the report of this committee or not? If we are not to take their report, for what purpose did we organize them? If, however, they were mistaken, what does wisdom suggest? Surely to refer the subject back to them, allow them to reinvestigate it, and bring before us such additional facts as will satisfy us that we ought to make the appropriation for five thousand copies instead of half that number. I repeat that, if it can be shown to me, by any satisfactory evidence, what amount is necessary to sustain this paper, I will vote for that amount; but I am not willing to vote for more than is fair and reasonable. It is in this view, seeing that the gentlemen from Arkansas and Alabama cannot agree on the subject, that I submit to them, and to every Senator here, whether it is not safer and better that we refer the matter back to the committee, and let them reexamine and re-investigate it, and come here with all the facts, and present them to us, so that we may be enabled to vote intelligently. That is all that I wish to do.

Mr. WELLER. There have been some facts discussed here this morning which have attracted my attention, and I wish to obtain some information in regard to them from the Senator from Arkansas, who is a member of the Committee on Printing. In the first place, I have ascertained from some papers which have been read from the Secretary's table, that printing paper may be purchased here at $3 33 a ream. I also understand that the Superintendent of Public Printing has purchased paper which he furnishes to the printer of this body at $6 11 a ream. Now, I desire to know how that contract was made—whether the Superintendent of Public Printing invites competition, or whether he has his favorites to whom he gives these contracts? If it be a species of favoritism, I desire that it shall be exposed, and discontinued as speedily as possible.

I desire to have it explained to me why it is that such paper as that upon which our newspapers are printed costs but $3 33 a ream, whilst the paper which is furnished to the Senate printer costs $6 11 a ream? Can my friend from Arkansas give me this information?

Mr. JOHNSON. I have been a member of the Committee on Printing for only a short time, and I am unable to furnish the information which the Senator from California desires. The fact which he has mentioned, however, goes to show, that in the case of a man who is doing his work properly and fairly, and in a manner to satisfy the Senate, he is endeavored to be cut down to the lowest prices; while in another branch of the service you are giving perhaps extravagant prices. If the prices so paid are extravagant, surely they ought to excite some part of the indignation which is exhibited against a proposition to pay the proprietor of the Globe a reasonable compensation. It would seem, however, as if one was to go to the dogs, while the other branch was to be fostered and fed at the expense of the Government.

I have before me a sample of the paper which is used in our public printing. It is such as is in this book, (exhibiting one of the public documents.) It is rather ordinary paper. It is pretty good common paper, and for it we pay $6 11 per ream. I understand the Superintendent of Public Printing advertised for two months before making the contract. He advertised in October and November, and the contract was given out at the commencement of December. The lowest bid was accepted. I am not informed what number of bids were put in. But I see that the chief clerk of the Superintendent of Public Printing [Mr. Towers] is now in the Chamber; and if my colleague on the committee—the Senator from Alabama—will inquire of him, he will, no doubt, be able to ascertain how many bids were put in, and what were the circumstances attending them. I know nothing about that. Six dollars and eleven cents a ream is what we pay for the lowest priced paper which we get for our public printing; and yet gentlemen talk about $3 25 a ream as being a proper price! The Senator from Georgia referred to the testimony given by Mr. Rives in 1850 as to the price of paper. I do not think it is a sound argument to suppose that, because Mr. Rives testified that paper was worth a certain sum in 1850, it is therefore worth exactly the same now. We know that it is not a correct assumption, and we also know that the rise of price in everything, and particularly in paper, has been very great since 1850; for it has been since that time that the postage has been reduced; by which reduction a great impetus was given to the circulation of all newspapers and periodicals, which of course created an increased demand for paper. I have called upon Mr. Rives to ask in regard to the prices which he paid then, and the circumstances attending them. In regard to that matter he states:

"I advanced $89,700 to the mill at Norwich, Connecticut; this is the reason why I got paper so low. The mill has failed, owing me every cent of that money."

Mr. Rives states that he advanced $89,700 to this mill in order to get his paper for a lower price; but that the mill has failed, and still owes him the money. That is among the class of his misfortunes, and, I presume, the heaviest one. I have some other statements.

I suppose the facts in this case will come out. I suppose that men will not authorize to be said on this floor, as coming from them, what is false; for what we say here will go to the public, and will be investigated, and falsehood will be pinned, wherever it may originate. Mr. Rives has authorized me to say that the journeymen's prices per token for printing a paper the size of the Globe is seventy-one cents a token when printed by men, and sixty-one cents a token when printed by a man and a boy, and the paper and all the materials are furnished by the publisher.

I have a few words further to say in regard to the price of paper, which has been referred to. I have before me a number of Mr. Rives's bills for paper during the present session. They show for themselves, and the evidence which they bear on their face cannot be contradicted. They are from a responsible firm, and I will exhibit some of them in full, so that it may be seen that there is no mistake about the matter. Here is one of these bills:

BALTIMORE, March 1, 1854.

Mr. J. C. Rives bought of Wheelwright & Mudge, No. 14 Hanover, corner of German street.
150 reams, 24 by 38, 45 pounds, $5 87.....	$281 25
134 reams, 24 by 38, 44 pounds, $5 75.....	770 50
69 reams, 24 by 38, 40 pounds, $5 25.....	362 25
Drayage.....	5 50
	$2,019 50

Marked R, ten bundles by express.

It will be seen that the first item of paper in this bill is that which weighs forty-five pounds to the ream, being the same weight, and of the same quality, I presume, as that used in the book to which I have referred.

Mr. DAWSON. The statement to which I referred was in regard to paper weighing thirty-two pounds, on which the Congressional Globe was printed.

Mr. JOHNSON. That was so at the time that testimony was given; but, as I stated before, I have ascertained, after full investigation into the manner in which Mr. Rives's contract is being executed by him, that he has made an improvement in every respect upon what was done, or what was expected to be done when the contract was made. It is in this that his good faith stands preëminently before us, and on this account his case preëminently claims consideration and relief at our hands. Here is another bill:

BALTIMORE, March 11, 1854.

Mr. John C. Rives bought of Wheelwright & Mudge, No. 14 Hanover, corner of German street.
50 reams printing, 24 by 38, 36 pounds, $4 90.....	$245 00
Drayage.....	75
	$245 75

Paper was so scarce that he was compelled to buy it by dribblets, and get it as he could, at different rates, at different weights, and at different prices. One bill which I presented is for paper weighing thirty-six pounds to the ream, which is below the average of that which he uses in his publication; and for that he paid $4 90. All that he complains of is, that, in the calculation of Mr. Towers, which has been relied upon here, he is not allowed at least $4 80 for the paper on which he publishes the Globe, and even that calculation is much below the rate at which the Superintendent of Public Printing has accepted bids for furnishing paper for the printing of Congress. The lowest priced paper which he obtains for congressional printing is paid for at the rate of $6 11 a ream.

Mr. Towers calculates that $3 33 is the rate at which paper can be bought.

I have other bills by which it appears that on the 14th of March Mr. Rives bought of the same parties fifty-one and a half reams of paper, weighing forty-nine pounds to the ream, at $6 12½; on the 15th of March two hundred reams at $6 50. That bill is for paper measuring twenty-four by thirty-eight inches, but the weight is not stated on the face of the bill. On the 17th of March he bought one thousand reams, weighing forty pounds to the ream, twenty-four by thirty-eight inches, at $5 25; fifty reams, same size, thirty-six pounds to the ream, at $4 90; and one hundred reams, same size, thirty-four pounds to the ream at $4 25. The last was a small quantity of inferior paper, and $4 25 was the lowest price at which he was able to purchase a ream of paper at that time, suitable for printing the debates. The price of the different lots varies from $4 25 to $6 50. Then, on the 27th of April, he bought one hundred and six reams at $4 25.

These bills show the prices which Mr. Rives has paid for paper during a part of this session; and yet in not one of these bills does the price come down to so low a rate as that stated in Mr. Towers's estimate, on which the Senator from Alabama relies, $3 33 or even to $4. There are only two cases where the price was less than $4 80, the amount assumed by Mr. Rives, as the basis of his calculation; but, on the contrary, in one case he paid as high as $6 50 a ream. He has been compelled to use some paper of very inferior quality; but even that has cost him more than Mr. Towers seems to think should be allowed to him for paper.

It is not necessary for me to say to the Senate, after this showing, how improper it would be to throw yourselves at sea among printers who say that this can be done at a less price. Here you have the bills, and you can judge of their assertions. Here you find that $6 50 has been paid in one instance for paper, while Mr. Towers only allows half that sum! You would find, if you were to abandon Mr. Rives, who has done the work faithfully, that you would be thrown at sea among printers who would charge you $6 50 a ream for paper, and a dollar a token for press-work, which is the price now paid for the printing of Congress in every other form, except the Congressional Globe and Appendix. I say, then, that if you abandon this establishment, you will find yourselves charged his prices over and over again, and instead of improving your condition, you will be much worse off. Here is a man who has done your business faithfully, and better than you believed it could be done at the time when you made the contract. He has improved it each succeeding day. The Globe has been under the management of a man who has staked himself upon this business, and has expected to make a reputation in carrying it on, and with the hope, at the same time, of being able to make a living by it of course.

Mr. WELLER. If he got paper at $3 33 a ream, and other things in proportion, I suppose he could go on at present prices.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir; the suggestion is a good one. If he got his paper at $3 33, or even at $4 a ream, and if his workmen would come down to the prices which they received at the time the contract was made, twenty per cent. below the present prices, no doubt he would be able to go on with the compensation which he at present receives. Every one who knows anything in regard to the printing business, knows that in every city of the Union there has been an increase of twenty per cent. in the cost of printing. We have all heard of the strikes of printers for increased wages; and they have obtained an advance. But if Mr. Rives could have his paper at $3 33, or $4 a ream, and have the press-work done at the rate set down in Mr. Towers's and Mr. Moore's calculations, he could afford no doubt to go on at $7 50 a column, and perhaps the other papers that have already declined it, might go on at $7 50.

Every other paper which had a contract for publishing the debates at $7 50 has given it up. You know that you must have your debates published. Will you break down the Congressional Globe and Appendix, and leave the business to those who have heretofore abandoned it at the old prices? Will not the Senate bear in mind that the papers which were paid at the price now allowed the Globe, refuse to carry on the contract, and the Globe alone has published your proceedings in a prompt and faithful manner. Will you now abandon that establishment by refusing to do what is just, upon a suspicion that perhaps you are paying too much? Will you enter upon that policy which has been distinctively known for ages past as "penny-wise and pound-foolish?" Will you break up what you have here now as a permanent, a good, a successful, and faithful establishment, and throw yourselves at sea among the men who make these calculations to break it down? I will not say that is the intention, but I fear it will be the effect. I venture to say that if you abandon this establishment, you will not get another one to do this work for $9 50 a column, which my friend from California proposes to pay in the event that this body shall refuse to take additional copies, but you will have to pay $11 or $12 a column; or, perhaps, you will be asked to come up to British Parliament terms, and pay $136 for what is now furnished in the Globe at $12. Perhaps you would have to come up to Maryland prices, where this business was conducted on as cheap terms as it could, by a reporter whose name is familiar in both Halls of Congress. Or, perhaps, you would have to come up to Pennsylvania terms, or to Kentucky terms, where they have failed, if not refused, to answer as to what rates they paid for services of the same character.

The Senate and the other House have been in controversy for years past upon this interminable, wretched, and pestiferous subject of printing, with its various adjuncts. I hope the Senate will not quit the subject now until they dispose of it, or else discharge me from the Committee on Printing. The last Congress was engaged upon it almost every day. Every morning I heard of "printing! printing!" "prices!" "pay!" "consideration!" "broken contracts!" "ill faith!" complaints of every kind, "frauds and swindling." All this was being charged, and it threw members into the greatest confusion. I ask you now to settle this question and dispose of it. Let us fix upon the terms which, as rational men, we presume we can stand upon.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have obtained from the chief clerk of the Superintendent of Public Printing the information which the Senator from Arkansas desired me to obtain from him. The Senator from Arkansas permitted himself, I think, to be led into an error when he presumed that the paper for which the Superintendent of Printing has contracted is the same quality of paper as is used for newspapers. Such is not the fact.

Mr. JOHNSON. I did not state that the same paper was used for newspapers.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I will state to the Senate that in December, 1853, the contract price for the paper used for the public printing was $6 10. In 1852 it was $6 30. Thus the paper now used is twenty cents a ream less than that used the year before. This reduction has been made, notwithstanding the extraordinary rise in paper, to which the Senator has alluded. The paper contained in the book to which the Senator referred, is called book paper, and its price is regulated according to its weight. Six dollars and ten cents is paid for that paper, but that is not the highest price. I am informed by the chief clerk of the Superintendent, that there is some paper which is sold as high as eight dollars a ream. The price depends upon the weight and quality. The paper contained in the book referred to by the Senator is of the weight of forty-five pounds per ream, and is furnished for $6 10 a ream. The weight is the criterion by which to test paper, and by which it is sold, and its price is regulated. Well, sir, in reference to the manner in which the paper was purchased, I presume the gentleman will acquit the Superintendent of anything wrong in that matter, when he learns that there were from eight to ten bidders for the contract, and that the gentleman who got the contract was the lowest bidder. No blame, therefore, can be attached to the Superintendent.

Mr. JOHNSON. Did the Senator understand me as casting any imputation upon the Superintendent of Public Printing in that matter?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I beg pardon, it was not the Senator from Arkansas who made any such imputation.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have not done so, and I will not do so. I should dislike very much to say that he had done anything wrong.

Mr. WELLER. All that was said by the Senator from Arkansas on that subject, was said in reply to interrogatories put by myself. I desired to have an explanation why it was that $3 33 was paid for a certain quality of paper very little inferior to that for which the Superintendent of Public Printing was paying $6 11; and I asked how it was that that contract had been made, whether competition had been invited, or whether the Superintendent had given the contract to some favorite? I did not know whether such was the case or not; but if it was, I desired that it should be explained. The statement which the Senator from Alabama has now made is perfectly satisfactory, because it shows that the contract was entered into after competition was invited, and ample competition, for there seem to have been ten bids put in. I did not desire to be understood as casting any imputation upon the Superintendent. I only wished to have the fact ascertained why this discrepancy should exist between $3 33 and $6 11.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The difference results from the quality and weight of the paper.

Mr. JOHNSON. I know I am a very unguarded speaker; but if anything has fallen from my lips which is calculated to make an impression that I intimated any such thing as corruption on the part of the Superintendent of Public Printing, it is altogether wrong; there is no ground for it. I have intended to make no such charge, and I am sure I made none.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The explanation is satisfactory. I must do the Superintendent the justice to say that so far as his conduct has fallen under my observation, he is a very faithful and intelligent officer. The Senator might easily have been led into error, without this explanation, on account of the great discrepancy of price. I am assured by the Superintendent's clerk that price is regulated by the weight of the paper, and that a much higher price is required for a superior article of book paper than for that on which the Globe and other newspapers are printed. Such is my information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. COOPER in the chair.) The question is on referring the resolution to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope it will not be referred to the Committee on Printing. I shall ask to be discharged from service on that committee, if the subject be sent back to them.

Mr. BROWN. Let the Senate settle the question.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senate have all the facts before them, and they can go on and investigate the matter as well as the committee can. I hope, therefore, the Senate will not refer the subject to the committee. I have another reason for hoping that this will not be done, and that is a personal one, and one of delicacy. The report which was made by the committee was rather adverse to the proposition which I at first submitted: but I have laid the facts before the Senate. The whole question has been presented to them, and I do not wish to have the matter gone into again upon the report of the committee.

Mr. GWIN. I do not wish to obtrude this question on the Senator from Arkansas, if it be disagreeable to him; but I conceive that it is my duty to insist that the question shall be investigated, so that we may understand exactly what we are voting for; and therefore, if he does not wish to have the subject referred to the committee of which he is a member, let us have a select committee to examine it. It is perfectly evident that there is not a member of the Senate who does understand this question. Who of us understands the elaborate statements which have been made this morning by the two Senators on the Committee on Printing? Not one of us. One of those Senators does not even understand the papers which the other has brought forward. The Senator from Arkansas does not understand those which have been brought forward by the Senator from Alabama; and the Senator from Alabama does not understand those which the Senator from Arkansas has presented. It is evident, then, that we do not understand the question.

I am perfectly willing to act with the Senator from Arkansas in providing for putting the Congressional Globe upon a permanent footing; but I hope we shall not be compelled to vote blindly on this question. I suppose the result of this resolution, if it be adopted, will be to add an expense of from $50,000 to $100,000 a year to our contingent fund. Now, I should like to know if any Senator can state what amount of appropriation we shall be placing on this fund by our action on this resolution. It is well known to the Committee on Finance that there is scarcely a session of Congress that we escape from almost direct insult from the other House on account of the manner in which they treat our contingent fund. I suppose there is scarcely a member of the Senate who has not investigated it, who knows the amount of expenditure from that fund at this time. We are now expending upwards of $200,000 a year out of our contingent fund; and here is a proposition to put on that same fund an indefinite amount—from $50,000 to $100,000. All admit that it cannot be less than $50,000. We do not know how many of these papers will accept this proposition.

Why are they not consulted? Why are they asked to print our proceedings without our knowing whether they wish to do it or not?

I think it is due to the Senate that we should investigate this subject before we go any further, so that we can have an elaborate report on it, that we may not fasten on the contingent fund of the Senate such an enormous expense without knowing the amount, and without the Senate being convinced of its necessity. If this printing is to be done, let us put the amount of the appropriation in the general appropriation bills. Let us not bring odium on the Senate by making our contingent fund such an enormous charge upon the Treasury. By this resolution, if we act upon it now, we give ourselves a large additional quantity of books.

Mr. JOHNSON. Perhaps I can give the Senator the information which he desires. We are not as barren of information as he thinks. Every Senator can estimate the amount for himself. The additional number of copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix proposed to be taken is so near five thousand that we may assume that round number as the amount. We know that the cost will be nine dollars a copy for a Congress—for two years. This gives $45,000 as the amount of additional expense for the Congressional Globe during the whole Congress. The Senator assumes that the expense cannot be less than $50,000, and may be $100,000. The question of the contingent fund has nothing to do with what is a fair price for this work.

Mr. GWIN. Out of what fund is the money to be paid?

Mr. JOHNSON. Out of the contingent fund.

Mr. GWIN. That was my argument. The Senator speaks of the Congressional Globe alone; but the resolution provides for the publication by the other papers, at $4 50 a column; and it has been estimated that that will amount to $16,000 each. Can the Senator tell what papers will accept the proposition?

Mr. PRATT. The resolution is, I understand, that a proposition shall be made to three papers, each of them to publish at $4 50 a column. Any paper which accepts will, it is said, receive $16,000 for a Congress. Now, if all three accept, there would be $16,000 to each, making $48,000 for a Congress. Add this sum to the $45,000 additional subscription for the Globe, and you have $93,000 as the utmost expense which can be incurred by the passage of this resolution, for two years.

Mr. GWIN. I am thankful to the Senator. The question I made was this: whether the papers who are invited to make these publications had presented themselves here asking for them, or were willing to accept the terms? I take it for granted that this is not known, for otherwise the information would be laid before us. I take it is not known that these three papers will accept; but if they do, it will make an expense of $48,000. We shall incur under this resolution $45,000 expense for the Congressional Globe. These two items will make $93,000 to be added to our contingent fund, the appropriations for which now exceed $275,000 a year.

Mr. BROADHEAD. Is the $45,000 additional or aggregate?

Mr. GWIN. I confess I have been trying to pay some attention to the matter, and I do not know whether the $45,000 is additional or aggregate. Who can tell?

Several SENATORS. Aggregate.

Mr. WELLER. Additional.

Mr. GWIN. One Senator says it is aggregate and another says it is additional. This shows that we are all at sea about this matter. I do not wish to force this question upon the Committee on Printing; and certainly, if a select committee be raised for the investigation of the subject, I cannot act upon it, for I have more than I can attend to. All that I wish is to have a committee of this body examine and report upon the subject, and give us all the facts.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I hope the Senator will move to refer this matter to a select committee. I unite with my colleague on the Committee on Printing, the Senator from Arkansas, in saying that I would, with a great deal of pleasure, be released from service on that committee. I prefer having no connection with it. I have investigated matters falling within the province of that committee until I am really worn out with the subject. I trust, therefore, the Senate will adopt the proposition of the Senator from California, and refer the question to an independent, select committee. That, it seems to me, cannot but be satisfactory to the friends as well as the opponents of this measure. If such a committee be raised, I wish to be excused from serving on it; but I hope the subject will be referred to a select committee to be appointed in any form the Senate may suggest.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the subject is to be referred to a select committee, I wish, also, to be excused from service upon it, because I do not wish to have anything to do with it. I hope, at any rate, the Senate will not send the subject back to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. TOOMBS. Mr. President, I have listened very diligently to the remarks which have been made by the gentlemen who are members of the Committee on Printing, who seem to have thrown up this business; and, after the explanation which they have given, I shall have no difficulty as to the principle on which my vote shall be cast, although I have some little difficulty as to the facts of the case. I am inclined, however, to concur generally in the statements of the Senator from Arkansas, who seems to have paid much attention to the subject, and I have looked over the statement of the publisher of the Globe, and that has confirmed my opinion. We ought to print our Journals and proceedings. We are required to do so by the Constitution, from time to time. This work has been now for a number of years before the public, printed by the authority of Congress. The work has been done well, excellently well; and I am willing to give a fair consideration for the Congressional Globe. All seem to be agreed that this is right; that we should give what is a fair compensation and liberal pay. Just let me know what that is, and I will vote for it. So far as the case now stands, I am rather inclined to think that the Senator from Arkansas is nearer right than the Senator from Alabama, and therefore, if driven to a vote, I shall have to vote with him; but, I must admit, with some difficulty in my mind with regard to the subject. I am willing to give a liberal compensation for work which is well done.

As to the proposition to provide for the publication of the debates in the other city papers, I regard it as wholly unnecessary, and I am opposed to it. We discharge our duty when we have our debates published in such a manner that every one who wants them can get at them; and I cannot see any propriety in paying a number of other papers from $40,000 to $50,000 for additional circulation among four thousand subscribers. It is probable, as the subscription price of these papers is ten dollars a year, that they circulate among a class of people who could more easily get at the reports as they are now published than any other, and to whom they are more accessible; while the four millions of voters and the twenty millions of inhabitants of the United States will be excluded. You cannot make the publication sufficiently general so as to inform everybody without an enormous expense. This is a proposition to incur a large expense merely for the purpose of giving it to the local papers here.

Some gentlemen have put it on the ground that it is for the purpose of informing gentlemen of different parties. I object to it on that ground. I do not consider that any of these papers represents me. You have here the representative of the Administration. That does not represent me. Then you have the representative of the Democratic party, I believe, in the Sentinel. That does not represent me. Then you have the National Intelligencer. That represents the Free-Soil division of the Whig party, and is no representative for me. Therefore where are we, the Republicans of the South, and those whom I represent on this floor, the Republican Whig party of the South, to look? You do not give it to all. If you are to act on this principle, why not include the National Era, which I am told has a great many more subscribers than either of these other papers, or all of them combined? If you do not intend to divide this work in little jobs between small divisions and cliques of the Democratic or Whig parties, publish your proceedings in the Globe, where they are accessible to all. When you have done this, you have complied with your constitutional duty. Pay liberally for it, and have it well done, and leave the rest to the public. I am therefore opposed to this part of the resolution, and I shall vote against it; but so far as the Globe is concerned, I think we discharge our duty when we publish the debates there, and pay it liberally. Let us put that on a good basis. For that purpose I shall vote at present with the Senator from Arkansas, believing that what he proposes is as near as I can come to a liberal and fair compensation to that paper.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the motion to refer the subject to the Committee on Printing, resulted as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chase, Clayton, Dawson, Dodge, Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Gwin, Jones of Tennessee, Rusk, Sillidell, Stuart, Sumner, and Toucey—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Badger, Benjamin, Bright, Broadhead, Brown, Cooper, Douglas, Hunter, James, Johnson, Mallory, Morton, Norris, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Sebastian, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, Wade, Walker, Weller, and Williams—25.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I now move to refer the whole subject to a select committee of five members, to be appointed by the Chair.

Mr. CHASE called for the yeas and nays on this motion; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 14, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benjamin, Chase, Clayton, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Gwin, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Rusk, Sumner, and Toucey—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Badger, Bright, Brodhead, Brown, Cooper, Douglas, Hunter, James, Johnson, Morton, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Sebastian, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, Wade, Walker, Weller, and Williams—23.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. Upon the reading of the resolution it will be seen that it is capable of division. The first part relates to the matter of printing in the city papers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. COOPER in the Chair.) The chair understands that an amendment has been proposed by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. JOHNSON. I believe the Senator from Indiana accepted that amendment.

Mr. BRIGHT. I accepted it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the original resolution will be so modified. As it is susceptible of division, the question will first be on the first branch of the resolution, in these words:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to contract with the proprietors of the Washington Sentinel, the Washington Union, and the National Intelligencer, for publishing all the proceedings and debates of the Senate, or with such of them as shall desire to do so: Provided, That such publication be copied from the Globe "by authority," and shall be published entire within forty-eight hours after the same appears in the Globe, and at the rate of $4 50 per column.

The question is upon this branch of the resolution.

Mr. SLIDELL called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should like to have Senators understand one question about which nothing, I believe, has yet been said; but which the Senate had better understand before they take the vote. The branch of the resolution upon which we are about to take the question, provides for printing the proceedings in three papers, not the proceedings of Congress, but simply the proceedings of this body. That will not make more than half the whole proceedings of Congress; for the debates of the other House are about the length of ours. It has been alleged that the cost will be $16,000 per Congress for each paper.

Mr. BROWN. It will be a little less than half of that.

Mr. JOHNSON. That will be the amount for the debates of this body.

Mr. BRIGHT. There has been a great misapprehension on that point. The sum will only be half the amount which has been stated.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think my friends ought to understand that question before they vote.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 17, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Badger, Benjamin, Bright, Brodhead, Brown, Clayton, Cooper, Dawson, Douglas, Hunter, James, Johnson, Pratt, Stuart, and Thompson of Kentucky—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Gwin, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Morton, Norris, Pettit, Rusk, Sebastian, Slidell, Sumner, Toombs, Toucey, Wade, Walker, Weller, and Williams—21.

So the first branch of the resolution was not agreed to.

Mr. WELLER. I wish to give notice that I shall move a reconsideration of this vote to-morrow, with a view to take the question when there is a full Senate present. I voted in the negative for no other reason than to enable me to move a reconsideration.

Mr. GWIN. Then I hope the whole subject will be postponed. If we are to have any part of the subject up to-morrow, let us have the whole of it up then.

Several SENATORS. Let us take the vote on the other branch of the proposition now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the second branch of the resolution in these words:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate contract with the proprietor of the Globe for five thousand and twenty-two additional copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for the present Congress.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move to amend by striking out "five thousand and twenty-two," and inserting one half that number—"two thousand five hundred and eleven." The Committee on Printing have reported in favor of taking two thousand five hundred and eleven; and, as they have come to that determination, and, as I understand the proprietor of the Globe will be satisfied with this, I think it is quite sufficient.

Mr. DAWSON called for the yeas and nays upon the amendment; and they were ordered.

Mr. WELLER. I am willing to vote for the amendment submitted by the Senator from Louisiana, provided the appropriation for the expense of reporting and publishing be increased. I have already said this morning, that I have the most satisfactory evidence that it costs something over nine dollars a column for reporting and publishing our debates in the Globe. That is the actual cost without any reference to the interest upon the money invested in the establishment. I intimated a while ago, that I intended to submit a motion to increase the rate to $9 50 a column, which would give the publisher some forty cents profit per column of the reports of our debates which will, of course include the interest on the money invested. Now, I am willing to vote for two thousand five hundred copies with the understanding that the Senate will agree to fix the compensation for reporting and publishing at $9 50 instead of $7 50 a column; but it would be no remuneration whatever to the publisher of the Congressional Globe unless we agreed to that, and until I am satisfied on that point, I shall be compelled to vote against the proposition of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Mr. President, I have never been actuated by a parsimonious spirit as regards the expenditures of the Government of the United States; and more especially would I avoid anything that would savor of such a spirit in the publication of the debates of this body. It is understood that the proprietor of the Globe is not sufficiently paid. I think that is the sense of the Senate. We must, therefore, pay more money. There are two modes of doing that. One mode is that pointed out by the Senator from California, by increasing the amount paid to the proprietor for each column of the debates reported and published. The other mode of paying him is to take a greater number of the copies furnished by him at the present prices. The sole question before the Senate is which of these two ways is the best. I presume no Senator desires first to increase the price, and secondly to increase the number. It seems to be also the general sense of the Senate that if we are to pay more money to the proprietor, it would be well to have more copies of the publication instead of paying him a larger sum for the present number of copies.

There remains, therefore, but a single question for our decision, and it is this: what additional number of copies will suffice to secure to the proprietor of that journal an adequate remuneration for the labor and expenses incurred by him in the publication? The proposition is to pay to him the subscription price of five thousand and twenty-two copies, which, according to the best information I have been able to obtain, after listening very attentively to the entire discussion, would yield him a profit of over $20,000, in addition to the present prices which he receives. I further understand that an increase of the subscription of half that amount will yield him about $12,000; and I still further understand, that when the Committee on Printing reported back a resolution to this body to subscribe, in addition to the present number, for a number equal to one-half that now taken by the House of Representatives, the proprietor of the Globe was not indisposed to accept that as an adequate remuneration. I think, sir, he will be satisfied with it. Of course he would like more; but I am confident, from all that I have seen and heard on the subject, that this will satisfy him; and we may be assured, if it will satisfy him, that it is a liberal price. I trust, therefore, that however gentlemen may be disposed to sustain this publication—and I yield to none of them in the sincerity of a desire to sustain it—yet they will reflect that this is a very large sum of money we are voting away, and that if one half the amount will suffice, we ought not to go beyond it. I agree fully with everything that was said by the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] this morning, on that subject. With two thousand five hundred and eleven copies, I believe the Globe can be sustained; and I have, therefore, made the motion which is now submitted to the Senate.

The question being taken on the amendment by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 10, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Benjamin, Chase, Dawson, Dodge of Iowa, Fitzpatrick, Hunter, Jones of Tennessee, Pratt, and Toucey—10.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Brodhead, Brown, Clayton, Cooper, Dodge of Wisconsin, Foot, James, Johnson, Mallory, Morton, Norris, Pettit, Rusk, Sebastian, Slidell, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, Wade, Walker, Weller, and Williams—25.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHASE. I believe it is the universal wish of the Senate, in which probably every Senator concurs, to give to the Globe a full compensation for the printing of the proceedings and debates of the Senate. I certainly concur in that wish; and in voting for the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, I did not mean to be understood as having any different opinion; but I do desire to submit one or two suggestions to the Senate in reference to this matter, which I hope may meet their concurrence.

It is stated that by taking from the Globe this number of additional copies we shall secure to it a sufficient profit to indemnify it fully for the cost of publication, and leave a reasonable compensation to the proprietor. That is the object which we all desire to secure. Now, sir, if some such amendment as that offered by the Senator from Louisiana, coupled with a provision authorizing the Committee on Printing to contract with the proprietor of the Globe to furnish his paper to each of the different newspaper establishments in the country, could be adopted, it would secure the full object of giving him an ample compensation, while it would effect that which some Senators seem to desire—to reduce the number of copies given to each individual member.

Mr. WELLER. He furnishes to seven eighths now.

Mr. CHASE. I know he furnishes now, at a very considerable cost, an exchange to a great number, not, however, anything like seven eighths of the newspapers.

Mr. WELLER. I should have said seven tenths.

Mr. CHASE. Not, I think, more than one quarter. But, Mr. President, if we provide for supplying this publication to all the papers in the Union, at some reasonable cost, to be ascertained on a conference between the proprietor of the Globe and the Committee on Printing, the effect would be that the authorized report of the speeches of every Senator would go, not merely to the audience here, and not merely to the audience supplied by the Globe, but to an audience composed of the editorial corps of the whole country. They would be furnished at once with the means of knowing exactly what transpires in this Chamber and in the other House, and they would have it in their power to furnish such portions of it to their readers as they should see fit.

I do not wish to detain the Senate, but simply to throw out these suggestions, and to submit the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana in connection with an additional provision. I will barely say, that the price can be so graduated that the cost to this body will be no greater than the cost which we propose to incur by printing the whole number. The provision which I submit, in connection with the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, is the following:

"And that the Committee on Printing be authorized to contract with the proprietor of the Globe for furnishing a copy of the Congressional or Daily Globe to each newspaper establishment in the United States."

Mr. WELLER. At what price?

Mr. PRATT. I suppose that will be a cost of half a million of dollars at east. The Daily Globe is now furnished, I understand from its publisher, and certainly without profit to him, at five dollars a year. I suppose, if you take every press in the country to which the amendment applies, and send a copy of the Globe to it, he could not, of course, be required to send it at a less price than he is now giving it to us—five dollars a copy; and that would cost, I guess, if I may be permitted, without being a Yankee, to guess, at least half a million dollars.

Mr. MALLORY. Can the Senator from Ohio inform us how many newspaper establishments there are in the United States?

Mr. CHASE. A little over six thousand; and then, taking the estimate of my friend from Maryland, and multiplying six thousand by five, the whole cost would be $30,000. So much for the estimate of half a million. But it is not necessary to give five dollars. You can give a smaller amount, but enough still to yield a profit. I merely wish to submit it. I do not feel any particular interest in it. I wish it to be coupled, however, with the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BENJAMIN. That has been voted down.

Mr. BADGER. This will soon be with it. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Louisiana has not been agreed to.

Mr. CHASE. I ask to have mine read in connection with the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana. That has been voted down, it is true, but I adopt it as part of my amendment, and it becomes a substantive proposition.

Mr. BADGER. You put the two together.

Mr. CHASE. Yes. My proposition is to strike out "five thousand and twenty-two," and insert "two thousand five hundred and eleven," and then to add the provision which I have stated, so as to make it read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to contract with the proprietor of the Globe for two thousand five hundred and eleven copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for the present Congress; and that the Committee on Printing be authorized to contract with the proprietor of the Globe for furnishing a copy of the Congressional or Daily Globe to each newspaper establishment in the United States.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the second branch of the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to contract with the proprietor of the Globe for five thousand and twenty-two copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for the present Congress.

Mr. RUSK called for the yeas and nays on the resolution; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 29, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Benjamin, Brodhead, Brown, Chase, Clayton, Cooper, Dodge of Wisconsin, Foot, Gwin, Hunter, James, Johnson, Mallory, Morton, Norris, Pettit, Pratt, Sebastian, Sillidell, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, Wade, Walker, Welles, and Williams—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Dawson, Dodge of Iowa, Fitzpatrick, Jones of Tennessee, Rusk, and Toucey—7.

So it was agreed to.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 18, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

RIGHTS OF NEUTRALS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, in answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 1st instant.

Mr. DEAN. These papers refer, I presume, to the Black Warrior affair?

The SPEAKER. I do not think that they do. The letter of the Secretary of State will be read.

The letter of the Secretary, which was read, states that, in accordance with the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 1st instant, he had transmitted the papers embraced in the correspondence which passed between this Government and foreign Governments on the subject of the rights accorded by declaration or otherwise to neutrals, and the rights claimed by belligerents in the war pending between certain European Powers.

Mr. DEAN. I move that the message and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and printed.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

SUPERINTENDENCY OF ARMORIES.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. The committee appointed by this House, some time ago, to inquire into the propriety of selecting military officers to superintend national works, have concluded that part of their duty relating to national armories, and have directed me to ask the unanimous consent of the House that the testimony and documents in reference to that subject may be ordered to be printed. The committee desire it for their own convenience while making up their report and prosecuting the investigation. It will not require to be reprinted.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER stated that the question first in order was the consideration of the bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands, "granting lands equally to the several States to aid in the construction of railroads, and for the support of schools," and that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HAMILTON] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield the floor to the gentleman from Illinois.

NEBRASKA AND KANSAS BILL.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

NEBRASKA AND KANSAS BILL.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. OLDS in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 236, "to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas."

Mr. BANKS spoke in opposition to the bill. He argued that wherever the Government got the right to acquire territory there they got the right to control it. He contended that the present Congress could not say upon what terms additional territory should be acquired. The people hereafter would determine the question for themselves. Let the past stand, and let the future, when it comes, be decided by the people who shall then have the power and control.

They were called upon to repeal the Missouri compromise because it was said to be unjust to the South. All he had to say in reply was, that the South made it, and he denied that it was unjust or unequal, as regarded the South. Every southern man had the same right to carry his property to these Territories as the North had. But then southern gentlemen said that they had a class of property which was only made so by local or municipal laws, and that they were prohibited from taking this kind of property to these Territories. All he had to say was, that this prohibition was their own, and for this prohibition they had already received their advantages. They of the North did not believe it was the right of the southern States, under the Constitution, to carry this species of property to these Territories, unless there was a statute there, either of Congress or of the people, establishing it.

He then argued to prove the constitutionality of the Missouri act of 1820, and said that although this bill admitted the right of the people to govern themselves, it practically denied them the power to do so.

Mr. MILLER, of Missouri, alluded to the objection made to the bill, that its passage would violate solemn Indian treaties. He denied that such would be its effect, and maintained that the bill did not propose to violate any treaty with any tribe, not even the smallest.

He then answered the objection that the South now proposed to violate a solemn compact, entered into in 1820. He thought this charge came with an ill grace from the gentlemen of the North, especially those who were the successors of the men who were anxious to violate a solemn treaty made with France in 1803—the one by which this Territory was acquired—by attempting to drive a portion of that property from the limits of the State of Missouri, which France had expressly guaranteed should be secured to the inhabitants who possessed it.

He then made an argument to prove that the North had imposed this restriction—the Missouri line—upon the South, and replied to various arguments advanced by his colleague, [Mr. BEN-TON.]

Mr. PARKER next addressed the committee. He referred to the fact that he was elected on the compromise of 1850, over a candidate who advocated its repeal; but, (said he,) had it been most remotely surmised that that compromise in any way affected that of 1820, I verily believe I could not have mustered two hundred votes out of the fifteen thousand which were cast.

He believed it was a woful mistake to suppose that this bill would drive agitation from the Halls of Congress. It might scare it hence, but only to send it forth to perpetrate its ravages over the whole of this broad land to return here once more to distract the councils of the nation. There were too many reminiscences connected with the compromise of 1820 to allow its repeal to be quietly perpetrated.

It was the duty of members to leave this question where it was at the commencement of the present session, before the demon of discord was again unchained to scatter his firebrands among them.

He contended that the bill did not contain the principle of popular sovereignty, and declared that the effect of its passage would be to break down the present barrier which kept slavery out of these Territories, thus allowing it to go there.

Mr. PECKHAM said he had ever been a national Democrat, and had ever been what is technically called "a Hard." He was so still. He was no politician. He came to this House against his own judgment and inclination, surrendering both to the wishes of his friends; and therefore he would speak for himself alone, and not for any others.

He then alluded to the course heretofore pursued by the "Hards," saying the Administration had proscribed its friends and rewarded its enemies; and he complained of the action of southern men towards that portion of the Democratic party.

The Administration could lay down no Democratic course for him; but if it could, it would not be difficult at all to find himself standing somewhere with the Administration on this bill; for the Administration had been on every side of it. The Administration was said to be a unit; but this was a gross libel. It could only be a unit on the cohesive power of public plunder. The members composing the Cabinet are as much opposed to one another in principle as the Turk is to the Christian, and the Jew is to the Gentile. Another figure would better describe it. Though it may not be a unit, it is a cipher.

He then proceeded to speak of the subject under consideration; and said, in the course of his remarks, if the Missouri compromise, as it had been argued, was void, whence the propriety of declaring it null. Let the question be decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. He did not believe in the principle of squatter sovereignty.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee, obtained the floor.

Mr. SAGE. If the gentleman will give way, I will move that the committee take a recess.

Mr. TAYLOR. Certainly, I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. SAGE. Then I move that the committee take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman permit me to make a single remark?

[Cries of "Hear him!"]

Mr. SAGE. I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not know how many gentlemen there are who desire to speak upon this bill. It is, however, very desirable that an opportunity to be heard should be afforded to all; and when we came back here last night, we had but one speech. It would be better, therefore, unless it would be too great an inconvenience to the gentleman from Tennessee, who has the floor, that he should proceed now, with the understanding that we will go on and speak until eight or nine o'clock to-night.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would rather have a recess.

A great many of us have had no dinner yet.

Mr. SAGE. I insist on my motion.

The question was then taken on Mr. SAGE's motion, and it was agreed to nem. dis.; and thereupon (at five minutes after four o'clock, p. m.) the committee took a recess.

EVENING SESSION.

The committee resumed its session at seven o'clock, p. m., (Mr. OLDS in the chair.)

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee, being entitled to the floor, rose to address the committee.

The number of members present at this time was very small indeed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. With the permission of the gentleman, I will move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield the floor for that motion?

Mr. TAYLOR. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is of no use to speak to such a "beggary account of empty boxes" as this.

The question was put on Mr. CAMPBELL's motion; and, on a division, there were—ayes 7, noes 8.

So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. LINDLEY. I desire to say a few words to the committee, and I am not particular about the number of the audience.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will yield the floor to the gentleman from Missouri, if I can resume it when he has concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, that arrangement will be made.

No objection was made.

Mr. LINDLEY (Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee, having yielded the floor) submitted some remarks in vindication of the policy of granting alternate sections of land to aid in the construction of railroads, and more particularly in support of the bill donating land to the Northern Missouri railroad. He said that he introduced this bill at the early part of the session, and it was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, whom he had good reason to believe would favorably report upon it. The cost of this road would be about $7,000,000. The State of Missouri had loaned her credit to the enterprise to the amount of about $2,000,000. Upwards of $2,000,000 had also been subscribed by counties and individuals, and it was believed that the aid now asked from the Government, some half million of acres of the public land, would insure the success of the road.

He showed the benefit which would accrue to the counties situated on the line of the proposed road, and complained of the hostile feeling exhibited by gentlemen of the eastern States towards the West.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee, said he told his constituents before he came to this House that he was in favor of the organization of the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska; and so he had been, and so was. He had told some of his colleagues when he came to the city that he was inclined to support the Kansas and Nebraska bill; but he had not then investigated all its bearings, and the drift of the whole subject. Never, until he came hither, had he had an opportunity to read the bill now under consideration.

He, in the outset of this contest, desired, if he could consistently with his judgment and conscience, go for the Kansas and Nebraska organization, as offered by the Senate to the House. But it was due to his position as a member of this body, it was due from him as a representative of an independent constituency, that he should investigate calmly, clearly, and dispassionately, the whole merits of the question; and now he had to state that he had made that investigation, and that every step he had taken, from beginning to end, had brought him nearer and nearer to a conclusion; and at last, to the conclusion that this bill embodies in it elements that are ruinous to the peace of the country, ruinous to the interests of the South, ruinous to the harmony of the Union, and a violation of the pledges, oral and written, made by the two great parties of this country, and by the President, and violative of the best interests of the whole country. He regretted exceedingly, but he could not avoid the rupture on this subject which was made in the delegation of the State which he had, in part, the honor to represent. However, he would vote against this bill, if he stood solitary and alone. He repeated, he was in favor of organizing governments for those Territories, but not for the repeal of the Missouri compromise. Right there, he said, we divide.

He asked by what authority can Congress repeal the act of 1820? What right has Congress to touch that sacred and solemn compact, or compromise made by our fathers, some of whom now sleep beneath the sod of the valley? Have gentlemen the authority of their constituents? Did any gentleman here agitate this question before he was elected to Congress? Was there one? If there was, he had never yet heard of the man. He challenged any gentleman to show his credentials to justify him in voting for the proposed repeal.

He could see no hardship to the South from this act. So far from injuring, it was one of the great elements of prosperity. It was adopted as the basis of permanent peace to the Union. He answered the charge that the compromise was unconstitutional. If so, let the proper tribunal decide the question. It had been acquiesced in for thirty-four long years, as a monument of those who had passed it, to be as durable as the Government itself; and its authors were canonized as the saviors of their country. He proceeded to show that the acts of 1820 and 1850 are part and parcel of one and the same policy, which is as old as the Government itself, adopted alike by wise men, and are perfectly consistent and homogeneous. They are a final settlement, in principle and substance, of the questions to which they refer.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Massachusetts, took the floor, and controverted the argument that this bill, if passed, would be the means of withdrawing slavery agitation from the Halls of Congress. Slavery, he said, was so connected with the Government of the country, and with its industrial resources, that it had all the elements of a national question—a question that was to be met, not at our firesides, not in the Legislatures of the States, but here, in these Halls of legislation. It had always been so from the foundation of the Government, and it would always be so, as long as the Union should continue.

The Missouri compromise was a settlement of the conflicting claims of the two sections at the time of its adoption. It was a settlement binding upon both parties. It was understood to be an adjustment of the whole question, and was considered a fair and equal settlement between the two sections. He maintained that the South had been fairly dealt with by the North, although it was now said that northern men attempted to break the compromise of 1820 in the subsequent year.

The North, in attempting to exclude Missouri, then, did what was right and proper, as the constitution of that State prohibited free negroes from coming into her territory, which was in violation of that provision of the Constitution of the United States which allowed a citizen of one State to go into another State—free negroes being citizens of some of the northern States. This point he argued at length.

Mr. LETCHER replied to charges that Virginia had been illiberal towards the West, in refusing, through her Representatives, to grant that section of the country lands for railroad schemes. Virginia considers the public lands as having been ceded to the General Government for the purpose of being sold for the benefit of all the States of the Union. He commented upon the schemers and lobby members coming to this city to bore and engineer for such grants, and to have the duties on railroad iron remitted to benefit certain railroad companies. He likewise alluded to the existing abuses in relation to custom-houses, on the subject of which, he said, the House would soon be called to act, there being appropriations in the deficiency bill for those purposes.

Mr. MEACHAM addressed the House in defense of the New England clergymen, who had petitioned Congress on the slavery question.

Mr. KERR made some remarks, in reply to Mr. MEACHAM, touching and censuring the conduct of the clergy in their interference, in a clerical capacity, with the legislation of Congress upon the Nebraska question.

Mr. CHURCHWELL here resumed the floor. Mr. SEYMOUR. If the gentleman will yield, I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I yield.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I make that motion.

The question was put; and the motion agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman pro tempore of the committee (Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, had, according to order, had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and more particularly House bill No. 236, to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. PRINGLE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put; and the motion agreed to. The House accordingly, at eleven o'clock, (twenty-five minutes, p. m.) adjourned until tomorrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 19, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The PRESIDENT. This is private bill day, and no other business can be received except by the unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. COOPER. I ask unanimous consent to lay upon the table, with a view of having it printed, a substitute which I intend to propose for the bill allowing a credit for a limited period for duties on railroad iron imported into the United States.

There being no objection, it was received informally, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey, presented the memorial of John D. Gibson, praying for commissions on his disbursements as acting purser of the United States schooner Enterprise; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WADE presented a petition of the inhabitants of Tallmadge, Ohio, remonstrating against the extension of slavery by the passage of the Nebraska bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Also, two petitions of inhabitants of the United States, praying the passage of the homestead bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS FROM A STANDING COMMITTEE.

Mr. PETIT, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the following petitions and bill, submitted adverse reports thereon; which were ordered to be printed:

Petition of Sarah D. Brigham, praying permission to locate land within the limits of the Bastrop claim;

Petition of F. A. Underwood and H. A. Crane, heirs of Jehu Underwood, praying the confirmation of their title to certain land; and

Bill to confirm the claim of John Ervin to a certain tract of land in the Bastrop grant.

THE STEAMSHIP WASHINGTON.

Mr. SLIDELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be requested to inquire into the expediency of presenting to Captain Fitch, the officers, and crew of the American steamship Washington, some proper testimonial of the sense entertained by Congress of their praiseworthy and gallant conduct in rescuing the crew and passengers of the American ship Winchester, wrecked on her passage from Liverpool to Boston; and that they do further inquire into the expediency of providing by general law for compensation to be allowed to the owners, officers, and crews of vessels aiding in rescuing the crews and passengers of American vessels from shipwreck.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Before the private bills are taken up I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to allow me to present, and have passed at this time, a bill of which I gave notice a few days ago. It is a matter of local concern to my State. It is a bill "regulating the time of holding the sessions of the district and circuit courts of the United States in the eastern district of Louisiana." The bill has been prepared in accordance with the views of the judges of the district and circuit courts, who desire the passage of the bill, as well as the bar and the people of the State.

Leave to introduce the bill was granted, and by unanimous consent, it was read a first and second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct that there shall hereafter be annually only three stated sessions of the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Louisiana, which shall be held at New Orleans on the third Mondays of November, February, and May; but the judge of that court is authorized to adjourn any stated session to any time previous to the next stated session, whenever he may deem it expedient. It also provides that the full term of the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Louisiana shall hereafter be held on the first Monday of November, instead of the third Monday in December, as heretofore provided by law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

FLORIDA LAND DISTRICT.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report a bill to establish an additional land district in the State of Florida.

The PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the report will be received.

There was no objection.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. As it is a matter of very great interest to that section of country, and has been somewhat delayed, I ask the Senate to consider the bill now.

The bill was read a first and second time, by unanimous consent, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to create all that part of the present Tallahassee district lying west of the line dividing ranges ten and eleven west of the principal meridian into a new land district, the office of which is to be established at such place as the President may from time to time direct; and makes the usual provision for the appointment of the proper officers. It is not to go into effect for at least six months after its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUNTER. This is private bill day, I believe. I rise to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the Indian appropriation bill. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs thinks we can finish it to-day, if the Senate will take it up. I hope it may be the pleasure of the Senate to take it up, so that we may dispose of it. The chairman [Mr. SEBASTIAN] is here.

Mr. PRATT. There are one or two private bills which I know the Senate will pass. They are perhaps of as much importance as that bill. I should prefer not to suspend the rule.

Mr. HUNTER. Of course I am in the power of any Senator. Any one can defeat my proposition.

Mr. PRATT. I hope at least we will commence with the Private Calendar, and go on with it for an hour.

Mr. HUNTER. If we begin with it, my fear is that it will be gone on with, and we shall not get up the Indian bill.

CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE AND APPENDIX.

Mr. TOOMBS. I wish to enter a privileged motion, to reconsider the vote on the proposition of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. CHASE,] to provide for sending a copy of the Congressional or Daily Globe to the different papers in the United States. I think that proposition requires more consideration than it received at the hands of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT. Does the Senator propose to reconsider the vote adopting the resolution?

Mr. TOOMBS. No, sir; only to vote upon the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the final vote must be reconsidered before that can be reached.

Mr. TOOMBS. I do not wish to reconsider the final vote.

Mr. BENJAMIN subsequently made the motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution providing for an increased subscription to the Congressional Globe and Appendix was adopted.

The PRESIDENT. Did the Senator vote with the majority?

Mr. BENJAMIN. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT. The motion will be entered.

Mr. WELLER. I desire also to move to reconsider the vote by which the first branch of the resolution, in relation to the publication of the debates in three of the city papers, was rejected.

The PRESIDENT. That motion will be entered also.

WILLIAM G. RIDGELY.

The Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill for the relief of William G. Ridgely.

It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to audit the claim of William G. Ridgely, for tobacco destroyed by the British in 1814, at the warehouses at Nottingham and Magruder's ferry, in Prince George's county, and at Benedict, in Charles county, Maryland, and from such proof as may be exhibited to them, within six months after the passage of the act, to ascertain the quantity and value of his tobacco so destroyed, and to pay the amount so ascertained.

Mr. PRATT. This claimant is a resident of the District of Columbia. The principle embraced in the bill is identical with that embraced in the bill for the relief of Hodges and Lansdale, which, after full debate, was passed by the Senate some four or five Fridays since. I do not propose to discuss the claim. It is for tobacco destroyed at the same warehouses, at the same times, and under the same circumstances, as the tobacco for which that claim was made. Senators who were here when that bill was debated, will recollect the circumstances without having the report read; but I merely wish to state, for the information of those who were not here then, that the tobacco was rolled out of the warehouses, used by our forces as a breastwork from which the enemy were fought, and that the evidence is that the tobacco was destroyed by the British because of that use. Such is the testimony. The question made by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] now absent, was, whether the principle of the obligation to pay, could apply to personal as well as real property.

Mr. NORRIS called for the reading of the report of the Committee on Claims, and it was read. It sets forth that the facts are precisely the same as those in the case of Hodges and Lansdale, for whose relief a bill has already been passed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

On the question, "Shall the bill pass?" there were, on a division—ayes 19, noes 9; no quorum voting.

Mr. PRATT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and taken with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Benjamin, Bright, Brodhead, Brown, Cass, Chase, Clay, Cooper, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Foot, Morton, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Rusk, Sebastian, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wade, and Weller—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Fitzpatrick, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Norris, Shields, Slidell, Sumner, Toucey, Walker, and Williams—12.

So the bill was passed.

MOORE AND HASCALL'S PATENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, next proceeded to consider the bill for the relief of Hiram Moore and John Hascall, which had been reported from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

It proposes to grant Moore & Hascall, and to their heirs, assigns, and legal representatives, for the term of fourteen years, from June 27, 1850, the full and exclusive right and liberty of making, constructing, using, and vending to others to be made or used, the improvements for cutting, threshing, or cleaning grain, which were invented by them, or either of them, and embraced in the model, drawings, or specifications connected with letters patent granted to them on the 28th of June, 1836, for a machine commonly known as "Moore & Hascall's harvesting machine," together with the improvements invented by them, or either of them, in perfecting that machine, or any part thereof, from the date of their original patent, to the day from which the same is hereby renewed and extended.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. President, the bill now before the Senate is one of a great deal of importance. It involves interests which I apprehend, at first view, are not properly estimated by the Senate. Upon several occasions I have felt it to be my duty to make opposition to this bill, and I find the duty no less imperatively imposed upon me now. I regret, sir, that I feel this duty devolving upon me. I feel that the performance of it is the more unpleasant, as this is known not to be one of those subjects which elicit the attention of the Senate; but I think that before this discussion is over, if I can get the attention of the Senate, I can satisfy them that they ought not to pass this bill; that they ought not to pass it for considerations affecting deeply some of the most important interests of the country, connected with agriculture.

I shall, before the debate is over, go pretty fully into this subject; but at present I propose to name but the points of objection, and then to hear whether there be any explanation which obviates the objections; and if not, that at all events it may be shown that this is a case where an exception should exist to the general ideas and general rules entertained upon such subjects.

The honorable Senator from Michigan [Mr. STUART] has heretofore, in remarking upon the course that I have pursued upon this bill, promised to the Senate that he could and would answer the objections that I have taken to it, and satisfy the Senate that there was nothing in those objections, and that we could with propriety, and ought in justice, to pass the bill, and let it become a law.

Mr. President, the reading of the report in this case, until you come to the last clause of it, gives no idea of what the provisions of the bill are, nor does that last clause give a sufficiently correct idea of what are those provisions. From the reading of almost the whole report, one would suppose that this bill is but of the ordinary kind proposing an extension of a patent; but it goes far, very far, beyond that. It proposes, sir, not only to extend the patent, but it proposes to add on to it, to splice upon it, and make a part of it, any improvements which may have been made by the parties claiming the extension and the benefit under the bill, for the last eighteen years, I believe.

The enormity of this may not be seen at first view. It may not be seen why these men should not be entitled to have now granted to them, by the legislation of Congress, what improvements they have made during that period of time; but if gentlemen will reflect, and that too but very slightly, they will see how it may affect the community in the most injurious manner. Why, sir, the time through which they are to be permitted to run back, and allege and show their improvements, is more than the period for which a patent will run; and consequently, anything that might now be claimed, may have been claimed by others in the mean time, and may have been patented by them; and yet the provisions of this bill would come in, and by legislation on the part of Congress, set aside the acquired rights in the mean time, and assign them over, transfer them from those in whom they are now vested, to Moore & Hascall.

That is the first objection—that it proposes, in this sweeping manner, to renew to them not only their patent, but to permit them to go back and show anything which they may allege they have invented during that time, and attach that to their renewed patent, and give them the benefit of it for the time proposed in the bill. To illustrate further how this will operate, I will make this statement, that it would be unnecessary, under this bill, for these persons to manufacture a solitary machine for the public. Why is this so? Why, just pass the bill, and all that they will have to do is to be perfectly still. Why so? They know and feel, or they can know and feel, that there is already invested in the manufacture of harvesting machines a capital sufficient to make it the interest of almost every person engaged in agriculture, or any manufacturer of agricultural implements, to compromise with them, and pay them more than the manufacturing of their machines would amount to.

The fact is, and it shall come out in the debate before we are done, that these parties claim every important part now embraced in any other reaping machine. If they claim it before the Patent Office, of course they will endeavor to prove it; and if they prove it, of course they will get attached to their extended patent every important part that is contained in any other reaping machine. When that is done, how will others go on and manufacture reaping machines? If they cannot do it without infringing this renewed patent, then, of course, they are at the mercy of these parties; they have to render obedience to the renewed patent and the law under which it is renewed. The result will be that, without establishing a manufactory, without manufacturing one of the machines, they can, by their injunctions, suppress the manufacture, or compel those engaged in the manufacture to pay a tribute to them. They can do not only this; but, during the harvesting time, when the agriculturist is engaged in the harvest, they can go and stop the working of every machine. If what they allege be true, if they obtain a renewal of their patent for what they claim, there is not a man in the community who can use a reaper at all, except at his peril. These people, without a manufactory for the building of the machines, will have their agents all over the country, wherever there is a reaper in use. These agents can demand that that use be stopped. If it is refused, I apprehend, under the law, it could be stopped by injunction. Then, of course, when the agriculturist is in the midst of the harvest, it will be a matter of calculation with him how much he can afford to pay, and yet not lose all. In the scarcity of labor, the almost impossibility of obtaining it, to harvest by hand, it will be a question of calculation with him how much he can pay so as to save something from his harvesting, and I will venture to say, that without investing a dollar in the machines, the money can be levied upon the farmers of the country.

This, I say, is what can be done under this bill. I will now give the reasons why it will be done. In the first instance, I do not believe that one of these machines ever will be manufactured. Why do I say so? Why, sir, in the lapse of time, since 1836 to the present, the report itself says that they never have sold a machine, never have sold a right, and, I believe, they never have manufactured but five machines. Why is this? Why is it that these machines have not been built during the whole period of this patent? Simply, sir, because one of them never could have been sold if it had been built. There must be a reason for that; it is simply that the cost is so enormous that no farmer ever thought of buying one of them. The cost is $1,600. The team required to work it is sixteen horses. Is there any gentleman in the Senate, at all acquainted with agricultural matters, who will believe that in the region of country where reapers can be used most profitably—the western country, upon the western prairies, and in the old country, where the fields are old, and the stumps have been removed—any mortal man would ever think of expending $1,600 for one of these machines, and then purchase or hire sixteen horses to work it? At present, about the least price for which you can purchase a horse suitable to work such a machine, is $200. Your team, therefore, will cost $3,200, and then the machine besides, $1,600, making $4,800 for this machine and team; and when you have got it up, Barnum's twelve-elephant team would not begin to compare with it.

Only think of it! Four four-horse post teams turned out in the harvest field to turn corners and reap grain! It involves such an absurdity as I will venture to say was never proposed to the farming community. The very idea is preposterous.

I say, then, from the allegations of the report, no machines have been used for eighteen years; and, from the further considerations of the cost of the machine, and the enormity of the team that is to be used to work it, it will never be manufactured. Hence it will be seen that it is necessary, if this bill is to benefit these parties, that it should be in such a form that they can, not by the manufacture of the machine, but by levying black mail upon others manufacturing it and upon the farming community, make out of it what they cannot make by the manufacture of it.

It seems that the bill has to make a departure from the ordinary bills extending patents, otherwise it would be of no benefit to these people, and are we going into this course of legislation, and thus sacrifice the agricultural community and the immense interests which are involved in reaping machines, simply for the purpose of enabling Moore & Hascall to make a fortune without ever expending a dollar for the benefit of the community? Let me ask what benefit have they bestowed upon the community? Have they ever given it a machine? Who ever heard of it at the London fair, or at any other fair? It would have been laughed off the field if it had been taken there. Present the farmer in England, or the farmer in the United States, a machine costing $1,600, with a string of sixteen horses ahead of it, to go into an ordinary field to turn corners and reap his grain, and it would present to him such another anomaly and absurdity that he would hiss to scorn the idea that he should be asked to purchase it. And yet, sir, we are asked, under this bill, to legislate a monopoly into the hands of those people who cannot manufacture the machines if they would, and would not if they could; because they can make more profit under the bill without manufacturing them. I may be going too far when I say "because;" but that is what may be found out afterwards. I do not want to attribute, and I wish to disavow attributing, to any friend of the bill in the Senate, any improper motives. In speaking plainly, I wish to be understood, whatever my language may be, that I disavow that; but I am speaking, or intend to speak, of the effect of the bill. Upon that point perhaps enough has been said.

I have alleged that, in the first instance, this bill was not in the form that it has now assumed. When it was introduced into the House of Representatives, in the first instance, a most important feature in it was left out. It will be perceived that in the provision in regard to improvements, the language is somewhat peculiar. It is this:

"Together with the improvements invented by them, or either of them, in perfecting said machine, or any part thereof, from the date of their original patent," which, I believe, was in 1836,

"to the day from which the same is hereby renewed and extended. And the Commissioner of Patents is hereby directed and required to make a certificate of such renewal and extension, and append an authenticated copy thereof to the original patent, with the proper specifications and claims: Provided, That the said patentees shall first pay into the Treasury, to the credit of the patent fund, the fees required by law for the renewal or extension of patents: And provided also, that whenever the said Moore & Hascall, or their heirs, assigns, or legal representatives, shall file in the office of the Commissioner of Patents an application specifying the inventions and improvements claimed under this act," —which, mind you, run back through eighteen years,

"the said Commissioner shall cause public notice to be given of the time and place of hearing and considering said application, according to the provisions of section eighteen of the general patent law, approved July 4th, 1836, and shall thereupon, determine and decide their right as original inventors, according to the provisions of this act, to the claims embraced in their application; from which decision an appeal may be taken, as in ordinary cases.

I ought to have commenced reading a little further back. The bill provides that there shall be extended unto the parties,

"the full and exclusive right and liberty of making, constructing, using, and vending to others to be made or used, the improvements for cutting, threshing, or cleaning grain, which were invented by the said Moore & Hascall, or either of them, and embraced in the model, drawing, or specifications."

There is a secret about this matter that has been mentioned before to the Senate; but there may be some present who do not remember it. There is at this time no model existing in this case. The model was destroyed when the Patent Office was burned, shortly after this patent was issued. You will perceive that anything which is embraced in the model, drawings, or specifications, is to be extended to these parties. Upon whom are we to rely as to what was contained in the model? Are we to rely upon anything of record? It may be said that the drawings will show what was in the model. How do you know it? Because you will perceive that the provision is not that the Patent Office is to be governed by what was embraced in the model, drawings, and specification, but in either of them. You may advert to the drawings, and you will find a certain part omitted. Look at the specifications, and you find a certain part not there; but then comes the allegation that it was in the model. Why? Because this man who, eighteen years ago, saw the model in the western country, in the center of Michigan, knows it was there. Bring him on. He comes forward and swears to it. Who is he? What security is there for the public in this state of the case? He proves it; and under this legislation Moore & Hascall are to be entitled to a monopoly in their patent; notwithstanding the same thing may have been patented by others, and their patent may have expired, for the fourteen years may have run within the eighteen. It may have been on the patent of Atkinson, or of Hussey, or of McCormick, or of others; but it is now shown by oral testimony to have been in the model of Moore & Hascall, which was burnt sixteen years ago, and therefore they are to be entitled to take the exclusive right of using them. If you allow this, there is not a man now using a reaping machine, there is not one who will propose to use one, that will dare to venture upon the purchase of one of them.

Sir, if I were disposed to engage in such a business, I would ask nothing more than to obtain from Moore & Hascall the authority to go to every farmer in the country, and tell him to cease cutting grain in the harvest time when everything is depending upon his proceeding with his business; when, perhaps, his pecuniary salvation depends upon that harvest. I would say to him, "Stop;" and if he should ask, "Why?" I would say, "You are using what is embraced in my patent." "My dear sir," he might say, "I have used this machine for ten, twelve, or fourteen years." I would reply, "I do not care; Congress has told me that I may go back for eighteen years, and claim this thing." "How do they tell you so?" "Why, I had a secret model once; it contained just what you are using there; it was burnt a long time ago, it is true; but Mr. Grimes swears, in the Patent Office, that it was in the model; and here is the seal of the Government telling you that it was there; now stop, it is mine." That is what I would say to him if I were engaged in a business so nefarious. He would have to stop, or I should compel him to do so. If he did not, I should levy upon him to the amount, perhaps, of everything involved in the harvest; and, God knows, that is almost all that some farmers in the country have to depend on.

Sir, I am surrounded by a community that is using harvesting machines. I am using them extensively myself, and, as God is my judge, if this bill shall pass, and the patent shall be renewed in this form, I do not know how it would be possible for me to feel myself safe in putting my teams to the machines, and cutting another acre of grain. I should almost shudder to see anybody coming into the field, when I knew this terrible act had been passed, and that such a monopoly had been granted to individuals. When the farmer is told to stop using his machines, he might turn to these parties and say, "If you will not permit me to use the machines, in the name of common sense, manufacture one that we may have, for we cannot get manual labor to do the work." "Well, we will do it." "What price will you charge?" "Only $1,600!" I believe the one which I have cost but $100 or $150. "Well, with your $1,600 machine, what team will have to be had?" "Sixteen horses." "Have you any manufactured?" "No." "Well, I do not want it," the reply would be. They could not sell one if they had it; and if there was one manufactured it could not be worked with an ordinary sized team; and this is the manner in which the community is to be treated by this legislation.

But I was adverting to the fact that this feature was not in the original bill. The original bill, as introduced into the House of Representatives, did not contain this model feature. It has assumed that shape since, no doubt because, as is represented to honorable members who are advocating the bill, that it is necessary to have the model provision in it, for the persons interested in it have doubtless said that they cannot get their rights without its being there. Suppose they cannot, how easily, its being there, are they enabled to deprive others of their rights? And hence how apparent is the injustice which will be done under its provisions?

Now, Mr. President, to cut short my present remarks, I will advert to another fact. When this bill was under consideration in the Senate at a former Congress, it received at each time but precious little favor. When it first came from the House of Representatives, it was recommended to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, upon the motion of a gentleman no longer a Senator, [Mr. Wales.] It was then amended in the committee, and the amended bill was brought back to the Senate by yourself, I think, (Mr. Dawson in the chair;) but in that bill, as it went to you, there was no provision in regard to this burnt model. After that was done, the bill failed. At the next Congress it passed the House of Representatives, and came to the Senate. Upon a pretty full discussion, it was then recommended to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, as I understand, with, if not express, implied instructions that the committee should bring it back as a bill simply extending the patent. This allegation on my part has been denied by the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. Stuart:] and I wish now to bring to the notice of the Senate that from which I inferred that the committee was so instructed. I will read a very short passage from the remarks which were made by myself at that time, after the conclusion of which the motion to recommit was made, put, and carried. I said:

"I have made myself to a considerable extent an interested party in this matter, because I represent an agricultural country, and I do not want the farmers of that region to be placed in this predicament. I have begged the parties to take a simple extension of the patent. They will not do it. And now, since they have come to us and asked for legislation, my advice is, that we take this bill and amend it, and make it a simple bill extending the patent of these gentlemen, and then let them have it. In order that this may be done, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office."

"The motion was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 22, noes 18."

Mr. STUART. What is the date of that?

Mr. WALKER. The 25th of February, 1853. This then was the manner in which the bill went back to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, the second time. It may be said that there was no order instructing the committee to amend it, making it a bill for the simple extension of the patent; but, sir, I will venture to say that every Senator who was present then understood that it was implied that if the committee brought back the bill at all, it was to bring it back in the form implied in those instructions, for the motion was made expressly, as was then declared, "in order that this might be done."

Immediately the vote was taken in the Senate, and they voted, as I implied, that the bill should go back to the committee, in order that it might be thus amended. I believe the committee did not return the bill at that session. It was true it was near the close of the session; but it would not have taken either a member of the committee or its clerk five minutes to draw up a bill extending the patent in the simple language in which patents are extended, and then it could have been reported back to the Senate if that had been done. Being one of those who principally opposed it, I stood pledged to vote for it. I stand so now. Bring in a bill extending the patent simply, and I will vote for it to-day, to-morrow, or on any other day on which I may be called upon to do so. I have not the slightest aversion to the gentlemen asking for the extension of their patent; but I do ask in my own name, as one of the class, and in the name of the agricultural community, that such an enormity as this shall not be passed by Congress; that they shall not be subjected to the power of any man or any two men in America; for whatever may be said upon the subject, I have my convictions that everything can be done, under the provisions of this bill, that I have alleged can be done.

Why, sir, should we step forward at this late day and revert these parties to their alleged rights? Why, when they made an improvement two years after their first patent was taken out, did they not come forward and patent that? Why, when four years after the patent was taken out, they made another improvement, did they not patent that, and so on, from time to time, until they had perfected their machine? Why did they not do it? The patent laws gave them the right and power to do it. There are express provisions in the patent laws upon the subject. They did not do it. They lay back while other ingenious minds were at work in the country, during the period of eighteen years, making inventions and improvements in harvesting machines, have perfected their rights, have gone to the Patent Office, have acted up to the law, and have obtained their patents; and now, after all this has been done, it is proposed that, at one fell swoop, we shall strike from them all their rights under it, and confer them upon Moore & Hascall, of Michigan, saying to all others stand aside, and to all who have purchased machines, cease using them. That is the effect of the bill. I do not believe it is designed by the Senators from Michigan to be its effect; but that it is so I have not the least doubt. I do not blame them for their advocacy of it, upon two grounds. In the first place, these gentlemen are their constituents; and in the second place, their Legislature has instructed them to go for the bill. But in these instructions, I will venture to say, it was never dreamed that, by the words "extending their patent," they were also to embrace every improvement running through a period of eighteen years, for which a patent had been given to anybody else.

Mr. STUART. It perhaps, sir, is not the least difficult task for a man to undertake to answer an argument that is made up wholly of illimitable statements and declarations. I conceive that if a gentleman were to rise in his place to-day, and tell the Senate of the United States that to-morrow, at noon, the sun would be extinguished, the earth would be annihilated, and the whole planetary system would be utterly and entirely destroyed, there is not a man in the world who could refute that argument by reason and logic. He could only say, he did not believe it. Now, sir, I find myself very much in that position.

The Senator from Wisconsin started by characterizing this bill as one of the greatest enormities that ever was sought to be practiced upon the credulity of the Senate of the United States. If there is a word in the English language which is more extended in its signification of infamy than that which has been employed by the Senator from Wisconsin, it is a word which has never reached my notice. He tells you that the attempt is made by this bill to give to Moore & Hascall not that which they have invented, and to which they have a right, but all that they claim; and he says he knows they will claim everything that attaches to any reaping machine which has ever been invented, or is now in use.

Mr. WALKER. I say they have done it, and they can do it under this bill.

Mr. STUART. Mr. President, I will not undertake to deal in any such language as that which has been indulged in by the Senator from Wisconsin, although I shall meet him very cordially in saying of him, as he does of me, that I do not impute to him any improper motives. I will take it for granted that the Senator is mistaken from the commencement to the termination of his argument.

I trust the Senate will indulge me in saying that this whole transaction, from the time of its inception down to its completion, has been carried on in the county in which I reside—within twelve or fourteen miles of my own residence—and if there is any subject which I have had an opportunity to understand, by observation and by examination, from first to last, it is the subject which is now before the Senate of the United States. And when the Senator from Wisconsin tells me that I am here the advocate of a measure which carries upon its face, and in its effect, such perfidy, as he ascribes to this, when I know all about it, no other inference can be drawn from his language—however he may intend it—except that I am here in the dishonest advocacy of a very dishonest measure. This is a subject about which I cannot plead ignorance. I do not stand here as the advocate of these men. I do not stand here with any particular solicitude in regard to them, because they are immediate constituents of mine. I stand here to-day, Mr. President, not only seeking, but desiring, to pledge what little reputation I possess in the opinion of my colleagues in this body, upon the fact that this measure is the reverse of what the Senator from Wisconsin has characterized it, from the beginning to the end. I will seek to show the truth of what I say in a few words, for I do not intend to give out to the Senate, as the Senator has done, that I am going to discuss the subject at any very considerable length. I can state the case in a nut-shell.

The inventors, who are sought to be provided for in this bill, are very intelligent men; and I may say of the one, who is, perhaps, more immediately concerned, Mr. Moore, that he is one of the ablest men that can be found in the country. He is not only able as a farmer, but he is able as a mechanic and an inventor; and he is entirely free from that difficulty which almost always follows a high order of inventive talent; he is not visionary; he does not spend his time nor spend his money about subjects which can be of no practical good. Looking abroad, sir, upon our prairies in 1832, he discovered at once that a single man, with a team, could, besides attending to his ordinary farming business, put in eighty acres of wheat; but he saw instantly that it required a great many men to harvest that wheat in the ordinary method, by a cradle. He therefore saw, either that a great portion of the western country, consisting of prairie land, must lie comparatively idle and unproductive, or else means must be employed to provide for harvesting after the crop was in and ready to be harvested. He said to his neighbors, "I believe I can invent a machine which will harvest this wheat perfectly." As a matter of course, they all laughed at him. They did not believe him any more than a man would have believed, a few years before it was demonstrated, that intelligence could be communicated by telegraph. He went to work, however—to do what? I wish to call the attention of Senators to the work which this gentleman set about. It was to produce a machine which would go into the field, and could thresh, clean up, and put into bags the wheat at the rate of three acres an hour. That was a pretty large undertaking. Has he succeeded? The report of the committee says he has; and as the matter has passed under my own observation, I know it to be so. Since he began, in 1836, to try his machine, I have seen it operate annually; and I tell you, sir, and I pledge myself to the Senate of the United States, that it does this work more thoroughly than it can be done in any other way. It is done with less waste. There is less loss of wheat by shelling. The farmer gets more bushels of wheat into his barn by this mode than any other which has yet been proposed.

It will be seen at a glance that it necessarily took a good deal of time to complete the invention of a machine of this kind, so as to make it perfect. The outline of it, of course, cost a great deal of time, labor, and money; but when the outline of it was perfected, the machine must be tried. It could only be tried in harvest time, and Senators who are acquainted with grain growing, will see that it could only be tried while the wheat was fit to thresh. With the cradle you begin a week before the wheat is ready to thresh; but with this machine you cannot operate until the wheat is ready to thresh, because it cuts, threshes, and cleans up at once. For this reason the time during which the machine can be operated is reduced to ten days, or two weeks at the outside. Thus a man could experiment but once a year with a machine to do this great work. He could experiment only ten days in that year; and then, however defective his machine might be found to be, he had to go over until next year before he could perfect it and try it again.

Moore & Hascall took out their patent in 1836. It was necessary for their protection. The machine patented was a somewhat crude one, and far from being perfect. They then commenced operations; and what has been the fact? Why, they had fourteen trials under their patent, one every year—the patent running for fourteen years, and they could only test it in harvest time. They had therefore, I say, in order to perfect a machine of this magnitude, complication, and importance, fourteen trials of it under a patent; and that is all they have had.

Mr. President, it seems to me that I need not elaborate this question. Senators, like courts, are legally presumed to know something. It will be seen from these facts that the whole time of the patent was necessarily exhausted in perfecting the machine; and it would be, I think, a most fortunate occurrence if a man could perfect such a machine as this in fourteen trials after he had got the crude invention together.

Thus the matter stood at the expiration of the time limited by the patent. These gentlemen said to themselves then, "the Constitution of the United States in terms gives to inventors the exclusive use of their inventions for a limited time as a recompense. The Congress of the United States have passed a general law, by which an inventor, after his machine is perfected, shall have a patent for fourteen years, and if he is not remunerated within that term of fourteen years, the Commissioner of Patents is authorized to extend the patent for seven years more, so that he has twenty-one years' use of a machine after it is perfected." We know that the greater number of machines can be perfected in secret, and when a party takes out his patent he is ready to commence the full tide of operations, and then he has for twenty-one years the full and perfect use of a complete machine. These gentlemen, as the report states and as I know, found themselves at the end of fourteen years where ordinary inventors are when they get their patents—just ready to do something. Well then what did they say? They said "if we go on and take an extension of this patent now for seven years, we shall only have one third of what is given to ordinary inventors; we will therefore ask the Congress of the United States to extend our patent for fourteen years, and we will show them the reason why it ought to be done."

I will not dwell much upon the history of this case, but I will briefly go over the points. They applied, as I stated in the report, in 1850, in time, so that if Congress, in the ordinary course of legislation, had refused the patent, they could still have gone to the Patent Office, and got an extension there for seven years. That extension, of course, would have been confined to the original patent, and would have been very far from doing them justice. The House of Representatives passed the bill in 1850, and it came here to the Senate, but did not receive the action of this body. At the last Congress, as early, I think, as the 8th of February, 1852, at any rate, early in that month, when I was a member of the House of Representatives, the House passed the bill. It remained here in the Senate during the whole of that long session, and was not touched. On the 25th of February, 1853, as the Senator from Wisconsin has shown, five or six days before the termination of the Congress, by dint of exertion, my distinguished colleague [Mr. Cass] and his associate at that time, [Mr. FELCH,] got the consent of the Senate to take up the bill. It was at a time when we were surrounded by all the appropriation bills for the service of the country, and only five or six days of the session were left. We know that, under such circumstances, members are unwilling to attend to private interests at all; and it was only as a matter of courtesy to the Senators who occupied the floor at the time, that it came up at all. The Senator from Wisconsin made just such a speech then, as he has made to-day. He frightened some men, not so much by what he said, as by the manner in which he said it. He characterized this as a transaction fraught with infamy of the deepest dye. He said that his own reapers in his own fields would be stopped if Congress passed the bill. Sir, ordinary courtesy would prevent the Senate from walking into the harvest field of the Senator from Wisconsin, and stopping his harvesting in the midst of harvest time, and letting his grain go into the ground again. I was not a member of this body at that time, but I was in the Chamber at the time, and I listened to the Senator, and I confess I was as much amazed at his argument then as I have been to-day.

That is the whole transaction up to that time. Here is a bona fide invention of a most important character, ready to be used profitably to the inventors, and they simply ask the privilege. Why shall it be refused?

The Senator says there is one portion of this bill that is wrong, because it seeks to renew whatever was contained in the "model, drawings, or specifications, instead of saying 'the model, drawings, and specifications.'" I draw the attention of the Senate to this fact, because I want the bill understood. I want it to meet every objection, and I wish to have the judgment of Senators on this question after it is thoroughly tested and understood. If it will not bear the light of examination, far be it from me to ask them to pass the bill. But, sir, what are the facts? This was an invention patented in 1836. There was much less skill then in preparing specifications than there is now. Congress thought it necessary and proper to pass a general law, by which, when specifications were imperfect, the inventors might yield them up and have a new hearing, and have embraced within their patent whatever they were actually entitled to.

Now, Mr. President, I ask the Senate—and I invite the especial attention of the Senators who are present—if they can conceive of a single invention, which, in its character, would be less susceptible of the practice of fraud than this one under the yielding up of the specifications and taking new ones? Here is an immense machine. It is worked in the open field, where the whole community see it. It is not so complicated in its character but that every farmer can understand it. He can see every part of it; and, therefore, when the inventor undertakes to claim what he is not entitled to, you can produce a whole cloud of witnesses, as many as were summoned to try George III. at the bar of Paradise. Everybody, every farmer, could be called upon at once and say, "I have seen this machine operate for five or six years, and there is no such thing in it." Any attempt at fraud in this way would be detected at once. The model has been burnt up. Who is to blame for that? It was placed in the Patent Office of the United States, an insecure building. The Office took fire and burnt up, and in that burning these men's model was consumed. They, therefore, must produce another model, and must resort to parol evidence to show its identity. Is there any other way known by which they can secure other evidence? Certainly not. Then where is the danger? If you give men what they have actually invented—for the bill limits them to that—what they are the first and actually inventors of, has anybody else a right to it? I ask the question, has anybody a right to what these men invented? How did they get it? The worst phase that can be put upon this matter is, that it is not a question between these inventors and other inventors, but between these inventors and the public. Now, the Constitution says, inventors shall be entitled to the exclusive use of their own invention for a reasonable time. Is there any other means of ascertaining what they invented than such as are provided for in this bill? Certainly none at all.

Again, objection is made to this bill because it proposes to give these men what they invented while they were improving the machine. I come, now, to some places where it is necessary for me to correct the Senator from Wisconsin. He says, the bill gives these men the whole range of eighteen years from the time they took out their patent to this day. That is a very great mistake. The bill gives them the right to claim such original inventions as they themselves made in perfecting this machine during the fourteen years while they held the patent, and were actually perfecting it. That is the language of the bill. Here is a point to which I can bring the Senator to a demonstration in argument. The bill provides that this patent shall be renewed for the term of fourteen years from the 27th of June, 1850. It provides that the renewed patent shall include "the improvements invented by them or either of them, in perfecting said machine."—I call particular attention to this—"from the date of their original patent to the day from which the same is hereby renewed and extended." That is, from the date of their patent in June, 1836, to the time from which we now propose to extend it, June, 1850. I mention this for more purposes than one. I mention it to show that in the zeal, I may say the unparalleled zeal with which the Senator from Wisconsin attacks this measure every time he gets a chance at it, and in his zeal to characterize its enormity, he has overlooked the express language of the bill.

Sir, what is there unreasonable in the proposition? These men, as I have said, were necessarily engaged in perfecting their machine. Wherever they found it defective, they had to make a new invention.

Here is another fact to which I will refer in this connection. If these men were of the character that the Senator from Wisconsin seeks to satisfy the Senate they are, mere blood-suckers upon the producing community, they would have gone on and patented those little inventions for improvements as fast as they made them. They would have done what has been done by some others in this country, whom I could name, who are undertaking to get great clat before the community, and every two or three years are taking out new patents for a part of the identical machine originally patented. But, sir, I can tell the Senator from Wisconsin that there is a wide distinction between these individuals and some others. They are honest men. They were seeking in this invention to give to the community the most valuable machine that has been invented, and were not stopping every year or two to take out a separate patent for an arrangement of a seat, or for a mere dividing iron running through between the grain to be cut and the standing grain. They did not deal in that sort of small fry for the purpose of laying their fangs on original and honest inventors, and thereby taxing the community. They are a different class of men from that. As I said before, they kept on perfecting their machine. The bill proposes to give them an extension for such improvements as they made in perfecting it. Why is this necessary? Without this provision, the extension is good for nothing.

The Senator from Wisconsin may well tell the Senate that he is perfectly willing that their original patent shall be extended for the crude and imperfect machine for which they took out a patent in 1836. He may say so, because there is no claim that the original patent of 1836 interferes with certain other claims which, but for the agents of some men, would not trouble the Senate. I wish Senators to understand that if Moore & Hascall simply asked for an extension of their original patent, men who have made $300,000 or $400,000 out of their inventions would not be here to-day, battling this bill as this is contested. There is the cause; there is the difficulty. I say these people may well say they do not object to the extension of the original patent.

Now, sir, I ask—and I ask it with some sort of confidence and not a little of feeling—if, when the Senate of the United States is presented with a bill which is simply to put these men on a footing with others, which is to give them a patent for what they shall actually prove, after notice and full hearing, that they originally invented, it can, with propriety, be characterized as an enormous proposition? Sir, I know something about this matter; I know a little about the agencies; I know a little about the propelling power; and, sir, I can say to you that I know on some subjects a little more than I wish to know.

But, sir, my object is to call the attention of the Senate item by item to this transaction; and I ask now why should not Moore & Hascall have included within this extension of their patent for fourteen years, the improvements which they shall prove by valid, incontrovertible testimony, they are entitled to as original inventors? Can anybody tell me?

There are some other remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin, which I wish to notice. He says the report shows that these men have not been remunerated because they have never sold a machine, and he says, in no legitimate way can they ever be remunerated because they never can sell a machine. Let me look at that argument for a moment. Take the case of an inventor perfecting his machine in a secret room; a machine which he can take into his own room, and there perfect without the world knowing anything of it; would he go about selling that machine before he had patented and perfected it? Did anybody ever hear of such a thing? Have not Moore & Hascall been precisely in that condition under their original patent? Could they, as honest men, go and seek to sell patent rights over the country when those rights were imperfect, and when a machine built according to the original patent would not be of any actual service to the builder or the vendee of the right? They would have been disgraced before the community if they had attempted it. They stand now ready to sell. At the expiration of the term of their patent they stand in the same condition where other inventors begin—just ready to sell and make something. That disposes of the whole objection as to why they cannot sell. It is because they would not sell an imperfect and useless machine.

Again, the Senator says it costs $1,600 to build one of these machines. So far from that being the case, it costs but $600. There is a mistake of $1,000, nearly two thirds of the calculation. I am speaking that which I know. It costs these men now $600 to build one of these machines; and no doubt improvements can be made in machinery, by which they can be built at a less price.

Mr. President, [Mr. WELLER occupying the chair,] you know something about agriculture in the northern and northwestern States, and you will appreciate what I am about to say. What does this machine embrace? A threshing machine which costs $200 or $300 by itself. I will not speak positively, but my recollection is that you cannot buy a good threshing machine now short of $200 or $300. That is embraced within this machine. It has a fanning mill also embraced in it, and remember that it has not only to be embraced but to be coupled with the other machinery, and it has to be so made that it can stand; for you know if you take the horse-power, which will carry a threshing machine, and apply it to an ordinary fanning mill, you would tear it all to pieces. Therefore the machine has to be so geared and regulated that you can have power enough to thresh, which takes eight horses, and you must regulate that power so that it shall propel the threshing machine, propel the wheels of the whole machine in the field, propel the power to cut; and yet be so delicately arranged that it cannot tear the fanning mill all to pieces. A fanning mill can be turned in any man's hands; so that the difficulty of combining heavy machinery with it can readily be seen.

This machine, so far from taking sixteen horses takes but twelve; so far from costing $1,600, it costs but $600, and Mr. Moore is of opinion that improvements can be made in the manner of building it, so that he can build it at a cost of not over $400—very little more than a single threshing machine now costs. I am not a very rash man, especially in pecuniary matters; but I should be willing to enter into a covenant in order to relieve my friend from Wisconsin, for I certainly would not injure him, and I will give good security, that if this bill be passed by the Congress of the United States, and everything which the inventors claim under it shall be given to them by patent, neither his reaper, nor the reaper of any other man in the field, shall be touched or stopped.

Mr. WALKER. It will not be because it cannot be done under the bill.

Mr. STUART. I say it will be because it cannot be done under the bill. Why, sir, Hussey's reaper was patented before this, and has been in operation all the time, and nobody ever dreamt that the two came in opposition or sought to stop that. Nobody has ever contested a suit with Hussey—nobody has ever brought a suit with Hussey—seeking to show, either as plaintiff or defendant, that there was any collision between his invention and Moore & Hascall's. Talk about stopping reapers in the harvest fields of the country! That argument cannot be touched with logic, because there is no beginning and no end to it. These men expressly said in their original patent that they did not claim the invention of a threshing machine. Such machines have been used for years. Nobody holds a patent for them now. They do not claim it. They do not claim to be the inventors of a fanning-mill. They do not claim to be the inventors of a rake. They do not claim to be the inventors of the cart-wheels by which this machinery is propelled. But they claim that they have combined these threshing powers and cleaning powers with certain cutting apparatus which they have invented, so as to secure a patentable machine. Why, sir, talk about stopping threshing machines, and stopping fanning mills, and stopping reapers! The thing is an absurdity.

There is no doubt about one thing, and I do not seek to disguise it here; and, as the Senator has given the notice that he is going very extensively into this argument, I will say to him that, if he chooses to touch that branch of the question, I shall be delighted to meet him, not on account of any particular prowess that I claim for myself, but because "truth is mighty and will prevail;" and is nowhere more certain to prevail than in the Senate of the United States. It is not denied that other individuals do claim, in respect to the cutting apparatus, what Moore & Hascall claim. Hussey does not claim it. As I said before, there is no collision with Hussey's machine; but there are persons in the country who have sought to obtain glory, reputation, and écât over the inventions of Moore & Hascall, and Hussey. I will ask my friend from Maryland, [Mr. PEARCE,] if he has time, to look into it and he will find that Hussey is an original, true, and meritorious inventor, entitled to the thanks of the whole agricultural community. He will find Moore & Hascall to be of the same class. But, sir, he will find that the man who went to England, and sought to carry off everything by écât, has never invented a machine of this character at all. He has invented nothing. I do not seek to involve myself in any controversy about other machines; but I dare meet the Senator on this point. I speak on this question to my fellow Senators here with a little feeling for this reason: Moore & Hascall have expended $30,000 in inventing the only machine that will operate. They are the sole inventors of the sickle applied as they apply it—in a manner that is worth anything. McCormick's machine will not work unless he can use Moore & Hascall's sickle.

Now, sir, what do I ask in this bill? I ask, and I appeal to my fellow Senators; if it is not fair to these constituents of mine, that they shall have leave to go to the Patent Office, and file a specification of what they claim to be the original inventors of; that the Commissioner of Patents shall then give notice to the whole world that these things are claimed, so that Hussey, and Mc-Cormick, and Atkinson, and anybody and everybody, may come in, and see whether Moore & Hascall are the original inventors of this machine or not. And now let me inquire, what does the argument of the Senator from Wisconsin go to show? Either that there will be an investigation which will be fair, and will secure to these men what belongs to them, or else that the Senate has to come to the conclusion that the Commissioner of Patents and the judge of the court to whom the appeal may be taken, are not entitled to the common confidence of the community. What room is there for these sweeping declarations and denunciations, when the bill is guarded? I repeat, Moore & Hascall must prove, according to it, that they are the original inventors of everything they claim, or they cannot have the extension. What is the effect of it? I mean to be fair, and I will state it. It is to save all question of abandonment to these men while they have been applying to Congress; that is all. They have been since 1850 urging Congress to pass this bill; and it is therefore so framed as not to allow this time to be pleaded against them, and thereby to make out an abandonment of their inventions. That is the whole thing, and it is all there is of it. Is there any reason against it?

Mr. President, the fact cannot be concealed that there are moving causes against this measure, which do not fall within the line of legitimate argument or defense. I know what those causes are. I know how a thing may be misrepresented. I know how a continual dropping will wear out a rock, and I know how a continual dropping of remarks into the ears of Senators and members of the House of Representatives will prejudice the best human mind before the owner is aware of it. But if this were a new question, if it never had been presented to the world before, the plainest man, humble as myself, could go before any ordinary tribunal, and in twenty minutes show that there never was a more meritorious case presented to the consideration of man. I have, Mr. President, sought to show that from the fact that the original model was burnt, from the fact that there can be no room for fraud, because this is a machine which works out of doors and in the eyes of everybody, there is no danger in allowing the inventors in this case to specify their claims, just as they might have done originally at the Patent Office, and surrendered them up. Any man can go and surrender up his specifications, file new ones, test the case anew, and take out a patent according to his new specifications. It is an every-day occurrence at the Patent Office. The patentee, by this course, only subjects himself to prove that he is the original inventor of what he claims under his amended specifications. Now, this bill proposes to do that in this case; and, I say, inasmuch as the machine is of such magnitude, that all its operations were out of doors, and must inevitably have been always open before farmers, plain men, mechanics, honest men, is there any danger of the practice of a fraud upon the community, or upon other inventors? Is there a case in which parol evidence could be resorted to with such safety in reference to any other class of machines? I think not; and I think that all question ought to be removed as to who are the original inventors.

I have sought to show that these men must be entitled to what they invented in perfecting the machine, or else you do them no justice whatever. You may as well say to every inventor, "we will give you your original crude ideas; but the things which you invented, while you were trying your machine in your room, perfecting it, and bringing it to maturity, you shall not have." That is the argument reduced to a few words.

Now, sir, after providing, as the bill does, for this renewal and extension, upon complete examination by witnesses before the Commissioner of Patents, after providing, as it does, for an appeal as in all other cases, suppose a patent be granted. The question is still left open, before the courts of the United States, whenever the parties choose to try it, between Moore & Hascall and McCormick, or anybody else, as to who is the original inventor. What injury, then, can be done by this?

A few words more in reference to stopping the Senator's reaper, and I have done. Mr. Hussey is making reapers under a patent. As I have already said, there is no collision with him, and none is pretended. Mr. McCormick is making reapers under two patents, one of which he took out in 1845, and which, as I claim, is for the sickle that Moore & Hascall commenced using in 1836. But he took it out in 1845, and it has fourteen years from that time to run. How is the reaper to be stopped, if it cannot be stopped now? Mr. McCormick is taking his patent fees under his patent of 1845, and will continue to take them for fourteen years from that time, and no man can build a reaper and use that sickle, during those fourteen years, unless he pays McCormick a patent fee. How, then, I ask, is any man's reaper to be stopped, if this bill passes, that cannot be stopped without the bill? The only point in dispute is as to that sickle. I say McCormick holds a patent for it running for fourteen years from 1845. We claim that he has no right to it. We claim that it is an invention of these men, and that they are entitled to it, and ought to have the emoluments growing out of it. The bill proposes to put them in a condition where they can contest that question. They cannot contest it now. Suppose some man has a suit with McCormick, and proves that Moore & Hascall invented the sickle; he defeats McCormick, but does not help Moore & Hascall; he gives the property to the public, makes it free, but that does not remunerate the real inventors. How stand these real inventors? Thirty thousand dollars out of pocket. They are men who claim, for themselves, to be meritorious; and they are men whom I claim, on my responsibility as a man and a Senator, to be meritorious. I speak from knowledge. They are my neighbors. This thing has been done in my community. It has been done where I know all about it, if I know anything. Therefore I say, after an expenditure of $30,000 out of pocket, these men ask the Congress of the United States simply to put them into a position where they can contest with McCormick, or anybody else, the question of whether they are or are not the original inventors of this machine and its improvements. Why not do it?

Mr. President, I cannot consent to detain the Senate longer upon this question. I hope that nothing may be said, under the notice that the Senator from Wisconsin has given us, which shall make it necessary for me to say more; but such is my belief in the honesty of this transaction; such is my knowledge of its honesty and of its merit; such is my belief of the duty of Congress to enable these men to get remuneration, that, if it shall be necessary for me to answer any other argument which may be thrown out, I shall ask the courtesy of the Senate to do so. I trust it may not be necessary to do so. But I hope to see, though late in the day, something like justice done to these men.

Mr. WALKER obtained the floor, but yielded to

Mr. DAWSON, who moved that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until Monday.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

On motion, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that the House had passed a bill to authorize a register to be issued to the steamer El Paraguay by a new name.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. DAWSON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened; and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 19, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

STEAMER EL PARAGUAY.

Mr. FULLER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report a bill from the Committee on Commerce, and to have it put upon its passage. It is a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a register to a vessel. It is one of those cases which justice requires should be legislated upon without delay.

Mr. COBB. It is right. There will be no objection.

No objection being made, the bill was introduced, and read a first and second time by its title, as follows:

A bill to authorize a register to be issued to the steamer El Paraguay by a new name.

Mr. FULLER. I move that the bill be now put upon its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was subsequently read the third time, and passed.

MEDALS STRUCK BY AUTHORITY.

Mr. DAWSON asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to this House copies of any reports he may have received from the director of the Mint, touching the condition of dies of medals struck by authority of Congress in commemoration of patriotic services and national events, and of the propriety of establishing in the Mint a medal department, for collecting and preserving such dies, and of authorizing impressions to be made in bronze for distribution among the States, or otherwise, under such regulations as may be prescribed for the same.

There being no objection, the resolution was adopted.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. HOUSTON. There is a committee in the Senate which has now under consideration a subject which has been referred to the Committee of Ways and Means in this House, embraced in the petition and papers of the officers of the penitentiary for the District of Columbia. I ask the permission of the House to withdraw those papers from the Committee of Ways and Means, in order that they may be referred to the committee of the Senate.

No objection was made, and leave was accordingly granted.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. WALKER. I find in the proceedings of the House on Monday, at a point of time just previous to taking the final question upon the adoption of the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] that I am represented as having moved to lay that resolution upon the table. The record is in these words:

"Mr. WALKER. I move to lay that proposition upon the table."

"The SPEAKER. The Chair decides the motion is out of order."

I beg leave to say that I made no such motion. I was not within the bar of the House when that motion purports to have been made; and if I had been, I believe I am the last man upon this floor to make such a motion.

NEBRASKA AND KANSAS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. OLDS in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on yesterday, it had under consideration House bill (No. 236) for the organization of the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska; and upon that bill the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CHURCHWELL] has the floor.

Mr. CHURCHWELL said, having made up his mind on this subject, he would not have risen to address the committee to-day but for the bold and defiant manner in which one of his colleagues had invited him to the tournament.

In the course of his remarks, he said the very principle which the House were asked to acknowledge was established as a permanent principle by our fathers when they framed the Constitution of the country. He replied to the remarks of Mr. CULLOM, saying he believed, before Heaven, and he should be a coward if he did not assert it—he would not be a Tennessean if he did not assert it—that Tennessee was the first State, after the formation of the Federal Constitution, which came into the Union with a slavery clause in her constitution. He thought that the honor of his State would have been better defended if his colleague

[Mr. CULLOM] had taken this side of the question, and come up in aid of the principle ingrafted in the constitution of that State, namely: that the people have the right to govern themselves in their own way, and Congress has no right to interfere.

When the South has an opportunity to place herself in the position of the original States, they find four or six southern men coming up with Abolitionists and Free-Soilers, taking a stand against the repeal of the Missouri act of 1820, because, forsooth, it will occasion agitation in the country, and because, forsooth, it has been in existence for thirty-four long years! But, during that period, under this geographical expedient, the South has had nothing but trouble and turmoil, growing out of the attempt to establish a line of latitude, instead of the principle that the people have a right to govern themselves.

Mr. DEAN said he had refrained from speaking on this bill heretofore, because he had hoped that it never would be brought to a vote. He had hoped that gentlemen of the South would see its effect upon themselves, and that the members from the North, before the hour had arrived for deciding the question, would hear such a voice from their constituents as would induce them to oppose it. He felt fortified in this hope when, by a commanding vote of the House, the bill of the Senate was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and that, too, after it had been announced to the House and the country that such a reference would be equivalent to the defeat of the measure.

Representing, as he did, the district of James Tallmadge, the mover of the Missouri restriction in this House, and the district, home, and burial place of Smith Thompson, a member of the Cabinet of Mr. Monroe, who, in writing, gave his opinion that the Missouri compromise was constitutional, he could not but say in public what he had always said in private, that this was a bill to be denounced rather than to be discussed.

Having adverted to the important public business which had been set aside to bring the bill under consideration before the committee, he declared that this was a measure to be resisted by all the parliamentary tactics which the minority were capable of using, and for the reason that no member of this Congress had been elected for the purpose of disturbing this Missouri compromise. If members had been elected on this issue, he would have yielded to the will of the majority, without anything more than a silent vote. He proposed that they now abandon this bill, and go on with the ordinary business of legislation, and let the people elect to the next Congress men who would be competent truly to represent the opinions of their constituency on this question.

He denied that the bill contained the doctrine of popular sovereignty, and termed it a double-faced bill. He contended that the Missouri compromise was constitutional, and declared that the North had always stood up for it, and would be willing to abide by it to the end of time.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, a stern sense of duty to myself and my constituents compels me to address this committee for the purpose of giving some of the reasons which control my vote upon the Nebraska and Kansas bill.

When the bill was first introduced into the Senate, and before I had examined it, supposing it contained the principles which its friends claimed for it, I was predisposed in its favor, and I so expressed myself to my friends. As the bill began to attract the attention of the country, and petition after petition against its passage was laid upon your table; when men of the South rose in their places in this Hall and in the Senate, and conjured their brethren to maintain in its integrity the faith plighted to the North: and when the bill had assumed a definite shape, then, sir, I felt the urgent necessity of a most thorough and careful examination of the bill. I made it; and I arose with the conviction that I could never give my support to this bill without doing violence to my oath and my conscience. Sir, I believe in the sanctity of compromises. I believe that their maintenance in all their length and breadth, their height and depth, is the only conservator of the union of these States; and believing thus, I can never sanction, by my vote, either directly or indirectly, the repeal of the compromise of 1820. I believe, sir, that the compromise measures of 1850 affirm and indorse the compromise of 1820; that they do not clash or interfere with one another; and the man or men who dare assert they are inconsistent, libel the God men of those trying crises that gave them birth, and the avowal of such sentiments in the campaign of 1852 would have committed them to the rack of public opinion until there was not a whole bone left in their bodies.

This bill does not carry out the doctrine of non-intervention, inasmuch as it takes from the people the source of all power, the right to choose their own officers, and makes their legislation subject to the revision and veto of the mere creature of the Federal Executive. I believe, sir, in the language of the last Baltimore convention:

"That Congress has no power under the Constitution to interfere with or control the domestic institutions of the several States, and that such States are the sole and proper judges of everything appertaining to their own affairs, not prohibited by the Constitution; that all efforts of the Abolitionists or others made to induce Congress to interfere with questions of slavery, or to take incipient steps in relation thereto, are calculated to lead to the most alarming and dangerous consequences; and that all such efforts have an inevitable tendency to diminish the happiness of the people and endanger the stability and permanency of the Union, and ought not to be countenanced by any friend of our political institutions."

"That the foregoing proposition covers, and was intended to embrace, the whole subject of slavery agitation in Congress; and therefore the Democratic party of the Union, standing on this national platform, will abide by and adhere to a faithful execution of the acts known as the compromise measures, settled by the last Congress, the act for reclaiming fugitives from service or labor included: which act, being designed to carry out an express provision of the Constitution, cannot with fidelity thereto be repealed or so changed as to destroy or impair its efficiency."

"That the Democratic party will resist all attempts at renewing, in Congress or out of it, the agitation of the slavery question, under whatever shape or color the attempt may be made."

Elected upon that platform, pledged to resist agitation, I cannot and will not stultify myself by giving this bill my vote. I wish it to be distinctly understood that I do not oppose this bill because it is an Administration measure. I am controlled by higher, holier, and loftier motives. I am controlled by the oath I took before entering on my duties, and the dictates of my conscience. These, sir, are influences before which Presidents sink into insignificance, Cabinets become as nothing, and the insane ambition of presidential aspirants dwindles into besotted idiocy. Sir, did I believe this measure right; did I believe this bill would give lasting peace to the country; did I believe that it carried out the doctrine of non-intervention and the right of self-government; that the repeal of the Missouri compromise was not affirmative intervention, legalizing and legislating slavery into territory now free, before God, who is my judge, I would vote for it. I would give it a most cordial and hearty support. The threats of political death could not intimidate me. The frowns of my constituents would not awe me. The fact of its being an Administration measure would not swerve me from my duty. If right, I would support it, although fifty recalcitrant Presidents, and as many imbecile Cabinets, stood at its back. If my conscience approved it, in the language of the immortal Jackson, "no earthly power could drive me from my position;" for I believe I would be standing upon the immutable principles of justice.

Sir, I came into political life upon the compromises of 1850. I supported them as a measure of adjustment between the North and the South—foremost and ever, early and late, in good repute and bad repute, in prosperity and adversity, I have upheld the compromise measures of 1850: I have proclaimed their sanctity; I venerate them as the savior of our country from an impending and awful ruin; and with the same feelings, actuated by the same motives, believing in the saving efficacy and binding force of the compromise of 1820, I will uphold it so long as God gives me strength; and if fall I must, I wish no more glorious fate than to go down in defense of the compromises of the Constitution, upon which this Union is based, and without which this Union cannot exist. Such a fate, sir, I court.

Mr. BENSON. As one of the Representatives of the State of Maine, whose admission into the Union is and forever must be associated in history with the enactment of the Missouri compromise, and whose people are strongly attached to that safeguard of freedom, and coming from a district more thoroughly opposed to the extension of slavery than any other in my State, I have felt it to be my duty to my constituents to present their views, as expressed in primary meetings, public assemblies, and in remonstrances which have been presented to this House, against the passage of the measure now under consideration—a measure which, in my judgment, was uncalled for by the slave States, which is unjust to the free States, and which must be injurious to the nation.

For this purpose, as you are aware, Mr. Chairman, I have sought frequently to obtain the floor, but without success. My health to-day is not sufficiently good to enable me now to say what I would like to say on this subject. I can do neither the subject nor myself justice. And I therefore propose to take the course which many other gentlemen have pursued, and to avail myself of the press, if I see fit so to do, to communicate my sentiments to those who are interested to know what they are. If I desire to do so, I shall take it for granted that I will be permitted to print what I have to say.

Mr. WALSH took the floor.

Several MEMBERS. Come up the aisle, where we can hear you.

Mr. WALSH. I do not desire, Mr. Chairman, to leave my seat, as a good many gentlemen have done, and taken their position up the aisle, thereby promising a good deal, and not performing very much. [Laughter.] I do not wish to raise expectations too high.

Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the committee, if I had consulted my own desire, I should have contented myself with a silent vote on this question. And it is only now, in compliance with the wishes and requests of other gentlemen, that I have consented to say a few words. I am, however, backed up and strengthened in doing so by the fact that some of my colleagues from New York have also availed themselves of the same opportunity.

Sir, I do not need to stand here and make any speech in vindication of my course. That is known, not only to the people of my district, but to the people of the whole country. I have not been a man of idle and empty professions; I have been one of performances; and every act of my life has proved the sincerity of my motives. When I was elected to represent my district in Congress, I was asked for no pledges—no pledges but my past life and my present conduct. The people of my district knew me, and I believe they knew the worst side of me before they learned the other. [Laughter.]

This bill, designed to give organic law to the people of Kansas and Nebraska, has been so thoroughly discussed, that it would be presumptuous on my part to undertake to throw any new light upon it, or to illustrate the history of the measure, which seems to form a great and leading obstacle to certain Democrats in this House.

It was discussed thoroughly and ably by those on the side of the question upon which I stand—by the gentleman from Georgia, weeks and weeks, if not months ago; and I will not attempt to traverse the ground over again, for the purpose of speaking for my constituents. Whenever I speak for them, I speak to them. I never write out speeches. I never correct one; and I never care a straw what becomes of them after they have been made.

Sir, the history of the Missouri compromise, I shall, as I said before, not attempt to discuss. I care not what proud array of names may be now brought forward to give sanctity to, or to perpetuate its existence. It is enough for me to know that its enactment was a violation, and a gross one, of the Constitution of the United States. If it were a compromise at all, it was a compromise of that glorious instrument.

Sir, the constitutional convention was the place for compromises. It was at once the birth-place and the grave of all compromises. Sir, the Federal Constitution is the organic law of this land. It is a solemn compact between the Federal Government and the several States, under which the relative powers of each are properly guarded; and no Congress, no thousand Congresses, no tacit, cowardly assent upon the part of any one, can make a violation of its humblest provision binding upon posterity.

The course pursued by the opponents of this bill is well known to every man throughout the land. The hurried and imperious manner in which it was sent to the Committee of the Whole, under the spur of the previous question, without an opportunity of saying one word in reply—without the opportunity of asking a single question—is well known. When that act was done, then came the exultation of all the Federalists and Abolitionists, from one end of the country to the other, over the supposed death of the Kansas and Nebraska bill.

What a change came over the spirit of those gentlemen, when they saw that bill quietly, without any ostentation, without any underhanded, sneaking, or unmanly advantage, rescued from the oblivion to which they thought to have effectually consigned it! What their consternation when they heard a notice given here by a gentleman who had the matter in charge, that on a certain day he would move to take it up; and then heard him state the purpose of the motion which he would make!

What then was the course of the opponents of this bill after it was extricated? Here we sat up for thirty-six hours in a parliamentary contest unprecedented almost in our legislative history.

I do not know but that the physical endurance of that contest may have been a very great trial to some gentlemen, but to one who had gone through the drilling which I have, it was a source of infinite amusement. [Laughter.] Sir, thirty-six hours to a person who had slept in engine bunk houses, and gone through the "coffee and cake shop" test, seeing who could set up the latest and the longest, it was a matter of refreshing amusement; while I saw those who were the loudest and most determined to sit it out, stretched out, and covered up with cloaks and shawls. [Laughter.]

Now, sir, the whole of that scene was grossly misrepresented, as everything upon this side of the question has been. As a single illustration of the gross perversion which has taken place with regard to it, I will simply refer to an account of a little night scene which took place between the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. EDMUNDSON] and the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL], which reminded me very forcibly of a model artist establishment in Canal street, where men work in a stable during the day and represent the gods at night. The one is represented by a telegraphic dispatch as rushing down upon the other armed to the teeth, like Sampson slaying the Philistines. Why, sir, so far from carrying a knife or pistol, he never carried a tailor's bodkin. The other is represented as standing with his arms thrown behind him in a position similar to that of Ajax defying the lightning. [Great laughter.]

Now, sir, from the commencement of this discussion, what were the appeals that were made to gentlemen upon our side of the question? Were they such as should be made by one honorable man to another; or were they the appeals made to a craven dog? Appeals to the fears of gentlemen? And we have heard about the trumpet-voice of the people. The people! I happen to know something about the people; not the people who have learned their politics in liveried carriages, nor in their furnished parlors; but, sir, I happen to know something about the people of this land in the position of cabin boy, and of deck hand upon the Mississippi, of fireman, working bareheaded and barefooted. I am in the position of a man who never had a dollar from the earnings of any human being but myself. I, sir, cannot be accused of pandering to arrogance. I, sir, cannot be justly accused of pandering to the slave power. I have never three times in my life known what it was to be worth two hundred dollars. I have always been the employee, and never the employer. Sir, I am no lover of oppression. I am no lover of wrong. I never oppressed any human being upon earth. No man, woman, or child on the face of God's broad earth ever can point to me as the author of their wrong. Sir, from whence come these trumpet-voices of the people of which gentlemen speak? Trumpet-voices! They would be far better characterized as penny-whistle screeches. [Laughter.] I know the men who have figured in these meetings at the North. I knew them when they exhibited the same hostility to the annexation of Texas. Others, who have known them longer than I have, have known them in their opposition to every single solitary stride that the Democratic party has made in its onward march; every effort it has made to advance the prosperity and glory of this noble country; other men have known them in their inveterate opposition to every square inch or acre of territory which has been added to the Republic since the formation of the Government. And, sir, this opposition now comes from the same source. It comes from men whose object is to revolutionize the land. I know them—a set of peanut agitators and Peter Funk philanthropists. Revolutionize! Why, ten thousand of them could not revolutionize a barber's shop or an oyster box. [Loud and prolonged laughter.] Now, gentlemen, this is no subject of laughter. [Renewed laughter.]

Wherever you hear of meetings called irrespective of party, it simply means a congregation of all the factions and fag-ends of faction throughout the land, who hate and detest the success of the Democratic party. That is the whole sum and substance of it. Sir, an appeal to any gentleman's fears is an argument far more worthy of a mock auction shop and its denizens, than men who are representing constituencies in the Congress of the United States. For one, I am free to confess that I am ready to declare that, whenever my constituents feel disposed to change their Representative, and look around for one more in accordance with their views, I shall feel—particularly if it should be on a question like this—that I have cut loose from a degenerate set of individuals, and that it is a sign they have sadly backslided during my absence. [Great laughter.] The duty of a man, no matter how humble, no matter how elevated the position to which he has been advanced, is to perform the requirements of that position to the utmost of his ability, and in strict keeping with the promptings of an honest conscience; to do it utterly, and contemptuously disregarding of any effect it may exercise on his own immediate or prospective destiny.

It has, it is true, been, and I regret to say it, the misfortune of the Democratic party to have nursed the reputation of men who were an honor to it while they remained with it. It has been the misfortune of the Democratic party to have given the jewel of its affection to men who have subsequently, for the purpose of gratifying their own unjust malice and disappointed ambition, used it to the disadvantage of that party whose only crime had been that of having been too munificently bountiful towards them. But, sir, let the record of all history tell those gentlemen that the Democratic party can strike down effectually and forever any man, or any number of men, no matter what their elevation, no matter what halo may hang around their names, who turn recreant to it, and form coalitions with its enemy in its hour of peril and trial.

Mr. Chairman, another charge which has been made here is, that every man who came up to the support of a measure which is based on the fundamental principles of the Democratic party, and the principle which stood forth at the formation of the Constitution with those who advocated it, had to encounter the same opposition to the diffusion of power among the people.

But, sir, in those days there were no political cowards. The Federalists of that day, erroneous as may have been their principles, disdained concealment. They were men of high and lofty daring—men who disdained to sail under cover of a pretext into any triumph. Sir, there were too many men in that day, thank God! whose amputated limbs and war-scarred bodies bore testimony to the part which they had taken in that long, dreary, and desperate struggle of the oppressed against the oppressors; there were too many widows and orphans, whose protectors had been slain in that fearful struggle, and too many unbled patriot's bones still bleaching upon our battlefields, to permit of their succeeding in their nefarious purposes. At every stage of our progress, we have met the same opposition. We have met it under other pretexts and in other forms, but with the same intention. Sir, when gentlemen say that the Administration controls the votes of gentlemen who stand by the principles of their whole lives in sustaining this measure, I would ask them to look at the records of each. It comes with a bad and miserable grace from men the records of whose whole lives, from their cradles to the present hour, has been one unbroken exhibition of selfishness and toadyism, to attempt to accuse other men of it who have never yet been guilty of a mean or dishonorable action.

Sir, I have been worse treated by this Administration than any man upon this floor. All my friends have been worse treated. There is not a single, solitary friend of mine who has not been ostracized by the present Administration. But if other gentlemen can afford to gratify their hostility towards the Administration by striking through the sacred and venerated principles of the Democratic party, I, for one, have not the courage, or perhaps I ought to say, the baseness, to follow them. It seems to me like firing the magazine of a ship which contains some five hundred men—many among them being your nearest and dearest friends—for the purpose of reaching its commander, to whom you are opposed. I will follow no such example. The position that I now occupy is the position that I have always occupied—it is the position that every man claiming to represent the national Democracy affected to be in favor of at the commencement of this session, when Mr. DOUGLAS's bill was first introduced. I recollect, very distinctly, that we talked over the matter, and decided to offer an amendment to that bill in its then shape, repealing, in emphatic and direct terms, the Missouri compromise. If any gentleman entertained a different sentiment, he did not express it upon that occasion. I stand, sir, now where I stood in 1848, when I traversed almost every county of my State, and other States too, to sustain the principle of self-government, as set forth in the Nicholson letter, which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] yesterday sadly misquoted by stating that it referred exclusively to territory thereafter to be acquired. It meant all territory, and it was written long before California was admitted—long before we knew upon what terms it would be received.

Mr. BANKS. Will the gentleman from New York read a passage from the letter referred to, if I will hand it to him?

Mr. WALSH. With the utmost pleasure.

"To apply them to new Territories to be acquired would scarcely affect their tranquillity."

Our tranquillity has always been, and always will be affected, as long as there are any traitors among us. [Laughter.]

"Briefly I am opposed to the exercise of any jurisdiction by Congress over this matter, and I am in favor of leaving to the people of any Territory which may be acquired hereafter, the right to regulate it for themselves under the general principles of the Constitution."

This does not conflict with what I have been saying. My friend who handed me that paper, said yesterday that he had not had the advantages of education which other gentlemen had received. I think he is better off in that respect than I am; for I never attended school but three quarters, and then I believe I got turned out once or twice. [Laughter.] A man can be a man of education without being drilled through college. It is far better to know the men among whom one lives, than to know of men who have been dead three thousand years. If I am deficient in classical lore, I am pretty well booked up in the rascality of the age in which we live. [Laughter.] It makes no odds how a man gets up to the roof of a house, whether he climbs by a ladder or goes up some other way. I would not barter away all the practical knowledge I have received in lumber and ship-yards for all the Latin that was ever spoken in ancient Rome. I had rather speak sense in one plain and expressive language, than speak nonsense in fifty. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left, as that appears to be the standing question? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Half an hour.

Mr. WALSH. I will commence somewhere again. [Laughter.] My friend from New York [Mr. DEAN] pledged his friends, in the early part of this session, to support this bill. I never pledge anything except I redeem it. As I said before, the principle of this bill is the recognition of the ability of the people for self-government. If that principle is false, if it is erroneous, then the whole theory of our Government is a lie; and then the great men of the Revolution, whom and whose memory we have been taught from our earliest childhood to regard with veneration, have been simply but idle, visionary, and impracticable dreamers. The Federal party have always been afraid of the people; and I regret to say that they have always found a sufficient number of slippery allies in the Democratic party, or rather upon its outskirts, to act with them.

I stand here upon the same ground—and I trust that the gentlemen elected upon the same grounds

I was will listen to what I say—upon which we stood at the commencement of this session. I stand where the national Democracy of New York, and a great many of those with whom we differ, stand. I stand where stood that noble-hearted, lofty, and self-sacrificing patriot, to whom the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MILLER] paid such a just and magnanimous tribute yesterday. I stand where Daniel S. Dickinson stands.

One of my Buffalo colleagues, [Mr. MATTESON,] at the early part of our New York controversy—since then there has been a kind of fusion, and I do not know where to hunt him up now—stated that Daniel S. Dickinson had been offered the collectorship of the port of New York as an evidence of the desire of the Administration to do justice to the national Democracy; and he expressed his great surprise that he had not at once availed himself of the offer, with hundreds of offices at his disposal. Sir, I was in Washington when Daniel S. Dickinson was appointed. I was in Washington when the arch-intriguers of the Cabinet suggested that little piece of pettifoggery artifice. I was in Washington at the time; and when I was urged to telegraph Mr. Dickinson, and request him to accept the office, I said that I would rather telegraph him to hang himself. [Laughter.] The idea of making a tide-waiter of a man who had refused the Presidency of the United States to attest his sincerity and devotion to his friends! Daniel S. Dickinson, and all those who claim to belong to the Hards of New York, have been sneered at repeatedly on this floor during the early part of the session. And when this Administration came into power—when we were all supposed to be standing on the Baltimore platform—a portion of the Democracy of New York, who were false towards the principles of the Democratic party, concentrated their spite on him, and asked that his head should be brought to them, like the head of John the Baptist, on a salver, that they might exhibit their hostility to him for his devotion to the Constitution.

But, sir, if Daniel S. Dickinson lives, and if a sturdy, well-knit frame, a sound and vigorous constitution, a conscience which can look back in proud and serene approval on every act of his glorious and eventful life; if the prayers of the true-hearted, the virtuous, and the patriotic, and the bitter, inexorable hatred of the vile, the venal, and the perfidious, can prolong a good man's life, he has, thank Heaven, a good square quarter of a century yet to devote to the welfare of this country, for which he has already made such gigantic sacrifices, and to which he has rendered such numerous and inestimable services—he will have his reward. Yes, sir, if Daniel S. Dickinson lives, he will yet receive the acknowledgments, and, I trust, also, the reward which a grateful and generous people—when not thwarted in their wishes, as has been, I regret to say, too often latterly the case, by intriguing and mercenary demagogues—rarely fail to bestow, ultimately, on their able, devoted, and disinterested benefactors. And when, sir, at length he shall be called from among us; when all that is mortal of him shall be returned to the mother earth; and when the bright green grass shall bloom, in its freshest verdure, on the moist sod which rests lightly upon his bold, manly, and patriotic breast, the record of his gallant deeds; and of his noble, fearless, and spotless life, shall shine forth as a brilliant beacon to encourage and cheer the sinking hopes, and to reinvigorate the faltering steps of future travelers, whose instincts may perhaps have taught them to be equally true, equally faithful, and equally patriotic, but whose hearts shrank back and trembled at the dark and dreary ordeal through which they must successfully pass ere they are permitted to reach the cherished objects of their fondest hopes.

Daniel S. Dickinson affords a bright and brilliant contrast to the time-serving and timid course of many other public men. Daniel S. Dickinson stands before the American people as an honor to any age, as an honor to any party; and when I can have the indorsement of such a man for the measure now before this House, I feel no fear in following his honest and patriotic example.

Sir, I felt as much disappointment, as much indignation as any of my colleagues could, at the ostracism to which we were subjected when this Administration came into power. I was reading a little extract this morning in a newspaper from an English writer, wherein he describes a poor, virtuous girl, shivering and famishing upon the steps of a Magdalen asylum, into which she was refused admittance upon the ground of not being qualified. So when I passed the White House last spring, I felt that I was excluded from the favor of its inmates because I had not first passed through all the degraded and debased stages of political prostitution. [Laughter.]

Sir, Goldsmith, in one of his admirable essays, makes a Chinaman say to an Englishman, that "you punish vice, but we do more. We reward virtue." The present Administration, at least in the earlier stages of its power, seems to have repudiated both of these maxims by bestowing its blandest smiles and richest favors upon men who had rendered themselves eminently conspicuous, and infamously conspicuous, as traitors to the Democratic party of the Union. I ask no favor of the Administration. No relative of mine ever held a public office; and I would rather follow every relative of mine to the grave than to see him receive a favor at the hands of the Administration. Sir, the Administration is only a thing for a day. It has an existence that is to continue two years and ten months only. But the principles of the Democratic party are as immutable as the laws that govern the universe itself, and I trust they may prove as enduring. Mr. Chairman, I believe if it had not been for the course pursued by the Administration when it came into power, they would not have found the Democratic majority of eighty-odd in this Hall scattered and divided upon one of its leading measures.

Sir, there are two or three men in the Cabinet who are looked upon with more favor by some of my colleagues than they have been looked on by me. I have not crossed the threshold of the President's domain since I have been in Washington. You may search the records of the President's Private Secretary, and you may also search the records of every Department of the Government, and you will not find a single solitary recommendation for office coming from me; for I expected nothing different from what has occurred. Whenever I see the great men of the nation elbowing out of the way to make room for others, who, no matter how good they may be, have not made their impress upon the history of the country, I can always see a bargain behind which does not appear upon its face.

No, sir, I have not been deceived. But I would say to the intriguers of this Administration—and I do not characterize them all as such; on the contrary, there are men in the Cabinet who would do honor to any stage of our nation's history—but let me say to the intriguers, who look out of the northern window of that room where so many treacherous and contradictory schemes have been devised, upon the equestrian statue of that immortal hero whose iron nerves, resistless will, and changeless purpose, invariably triumphed whenever and wherever the Constitution of his country and the great cardinal principles of his party were either assailed or threatened. Let them look there, and blush with shame at their faithless vacillation. Let them look nearer, within the inclosure, and under the very windows of the White House, upon the stern figure of the illustrious father of Democracy, the inspired author of the Declaration of Independence, and recoil abashed at their own gross departure from the pure patriotic principles to which he so fearlessly and unwaveringly adhered. Let them look to the South, upon the waters of the Potomac—that classic stream, hallowed by so many recollections of the past; that stream whose waves wash the shore where rest the sacred ashes of the Father of his country. Let them gaze upon the lofty column now rising to perpetuate his memories; then let them look up into the broad, blue canopy of heaven, wherein is mirrored that purity, that nobleness of character to which man should aspire—and while thus engaged in this simple duty, let them pause and determine whether these circumstances, whether circumstances so eminently calculated to inspire nobler sentiments, will not at least awaken them to a consciousness of their own selfish and disreputable intriguing. Let them then remember that to their temporary keeping is now confided the destinies of the same great, glorious, and promising Union, at the head of which, at three several and equally eventful periods, stood this departed trio. Let them remember that they are at the head of a Republic which is now the only beacon of hope for long suffering and grievously outraged humanity in this sadly misgoverned world. Let them determine at once to use the largely increased means placed at their disposal in seeking the forgiveness of an insulted people, by employing those means in elevating the social and political morals of the Union, in diffusing, by wise and happy example, and by all other means which a great and prosperous people may legitimately employ, the benefits of our own democratic institutions among the nations of the earth. Then, sir, and not until then, I solemnly assure you, may they, in my belief, ever hope to even partially regain the confidence and respect of the masses of the people, who believe that they have been grossly outraged, if not shamelessly betrayed.

In reply, Mr. Chairman, to what dropped from the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WENTWORTH] last night, and to others who have been overflowing with sympathy for the southern slaves, I have to say, that the only difference between the negro slave of the South, and the white wages slave of the North, is, that the one has a master without asking for him, and the other has to beg for the privilege of becoming a slave. [Great laughter.] The one is the slave of an individual; the other is the slave of an inexorable class. After the latter has added, by his labor and his toil, wealth to the community in which he has lived, he is turned adrift without any, among all the different employers that he has had, to give him a mouthful of victuals or a night's lodging. I would ask the particular advocates of Abolition upon this floor, to point me to one single solitary degradation heaped on the negro of the South that a white man at the North is not liable to have imposed on him for the time being through poverty? Last night the gentleman from Massachusetts said, as I noted it down at the time:

"No man or woman, black or white, could be deprived of their freedom for one hour, without it was for the commission of a crime, and then on the judgment of a court."

Has it come to this? Is the fact of having a black skin a crime in the South, and is the fact of having a collapsed stomach and an empty pocket a crime in the North? [Laughter.] What is the difference? I have never gone through the one state; I have never had a black skin, but I have gone through the other state. [Laughter.]

Now, I was going to read an affidavit to the committee, but my time is too short; so I will only state the substance of it. It is one of nearly a thousand cases that I know of myself. It is an affidavit wherein it is stated that a woman, after having lived for eight or nine years in the town of Southbridge, in Massachusetts, where she had had children born, and where she had been herself employed by the selectmen of the town to scrub out the public building, and where she had caught cold and had become unable to support herself and children, was, under the provisions of a law of Massachusetts, which I have here, taken—not upon the order of a court, but upon an order written by a magistrate—and transported to New York, for fear she should become an incumbrance on Massachusetts.

It is all very well for gentlemen to get up here and clamor about the wrongs and outrages of the southern slaves; but, sir, in the city of New York alone, during the last year, there have been over thirteen hundred people deprived of their liberty without any show or color of an offense, but because they were poor, and too honest to commit a crime. Now what is the appeal that these men make when they go to the South? They do not make the appeals to them that they make here and at the North. They do not appeal to the magnanimity, sense of justice, or Christianity of the southern slaveholder, but they appeal to his avarice. They tell him, abolish your negro slavery in the South, and adopt the slavery of wages that we have substituted for it in the North, and it will put money into your pockets, and add to the oppression of those who do your work. Why, sir, a poor man at the North will, for fifty cents a day, drag more in a hand-cart than three negroes, with four mules, will bring into Washington, though they have a white man to watch them. [Laughter.] A man at the South gives $1,200 for a negro; he has to support him; he has to feed and clothe him; he has to provide for him in old age; to take care of him in his sickness, and to bury him when he is dead. In the North we have no such bold, manly, open, and above-board oppression. Oh, no, sir. There are no lashes in the North. Here is a specimen of the kind of lash we have there. These are the boys, [exhibiting a pawnbroker's duplicate amidst great laughter.] I will read it:

"No. 122. Joseph Simpson & Company, 25 Chatham street, July, 1853. Gold watch, $6. Mike Walsh. Not answerable in case of fire for damage by fire or robbery; twenty-five per cent. per annum."

And it is more, as a general thing. At twenty-five per cent. he has $300 a year, and his $1,200 eats nothing, wears nothing, consumes nothing, and can be used as the same instrument of oppression after he is dead. His children after him can be used as the same instrument of oppression among the children and grandchildren of the survivor. One thousand two hundred dollars invested in northern pawn-broking—and it is almost the same thing in landlordism—brings $300 a year. For that $300 a man can own one of the best living, breathing, white, thinking men of the North; and after he has worn him out, at the age of forty years, he can pass him away and take a younger fellow. The difference between the two systems is simply this: If a dozen of us own a horse in common, we want to ride him as much as possible, and feed him as little as possible. [Laughter.] But if you or I own a horse exclusively, we will take good care that we do not feed him too much to endanger his health, but just enough to keep him in good traveling order.* But as I find my time is getting short, I must conclude by a brief allusion to another matter.

There have been innuendoes and insinuations made against me, because I have supported this bill. As I said before, I supported it because it lies at the very bottom of the principles of the Democratic party. These charges and insinuations have not been made publicly in a manner so that I could reply to them; and I shall now simply dispose of them as they deserve. They have not troubled me a great deal. It takes something more than that to shake my nerves, or ruffle my composure. The eagle while quietly reposing in his mountain home, may be temporarily annoyed by the biting, buzzing swarm of miserable, despicable insects, but when once he spreads his imperial pinions to soar aloft, with the first flutter of his wings he sweeps them down, and with the next he soars onward, upward, and heavenward into sunlight regions, to which it is not given even to the vision of meaner birds to follow.

Mr. MORRISON said that he was not opposed to a bill to organize the Territory of Nebraska. He did not, however, believe that there was any urgent necessity for such organization; for, according to the statement made by the Indian agent in his report of last November, there were in that whole vast region but three white men, with the exception of those connected with the Army and their employees, and those who were there as trappers and traders.

He was, however, opposed to this bill because it contained a provision to which he could never assent, namely: the one proposing to repeal the Missouri act of 1820. That act, he contended, was constitutional, and not inconsistent with the compromise of 1850.

Mr. KNOX was assigned the floor.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman from Illinois will give way for a moment, I will move that the committee take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. BENTON. If no gentleman wants the floor now, I wish to occupy it for about ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Knox] is entitled to the floor, the Chair having recognized him. If the gentleman from Illinois will yield the floor for ten minutes, and if the committee will be willing that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENTON] may proceed, he may do so.

The gentleman from Illinois yielded the floor, and general assent was given to the gentleman from Missouri to proceed.

Mr. BENTON said: Mr. Chairman, I have nothing more to say to this bill on account of its interference with the Missouri compromise. On that point I have spoken my share, and shall not recur to it again. I pass on to a new point—one significantly revealed to us some ten days ago by a Representative from Georgia, the member from the first congressional district of that State, [Mr. SEWARD.]

That gentleman spoke against the bill in a way entirely accordant to my own opinions; but came to the conclusion that he would vote for it, and gave his reasons for doing so; reasons which had not been mentioned by any other speaker, and which struck me as momentous, and worthy to arrest the attention of the House, and of the country. He objects to the bill because it is unfounded and contradictory in its statements and assumptions—inconsistent with itself, with the act of 1820, and of the acts of 1850—because it was manufactured for a particular purpose, and is of no value in itself to the slave States; but which commands his support, as a southern man, on account of its ulterior operations, as containing a principle to be asserted in future, and which was put into the bill to become the basis of some grand movement in this country. I will read what he said, as the proper way of doing justice to his clear and well expressed opinions—to his momentous revelations—and as the best way of availing myself of his important declarations. I find them thus in the official copy of the speech:

"I oppose the details of this bill, because they are not consistent with themselves or with the transactions to which they relate; and the bill itself shows that it was manufactured for a particular purpose. Some of the clauses embraced in it, conflicting as they are, were introduced for the purpose, in my opinion, of setting up a principle to be asserted in future, and which the acts of 1850 never contained. Now, sir, let us see. We are called upon here now to vote for this bill, which is not drafted in the ordinary shape of legislative acts. But the framers of this bill have furnished the reasons, within the bill itself, on which we must act, and which they call on us to subscribe to. What is it? They tell us that the law of 1820, being inconsistent with the legislation of 1850, therefore that the act of 1820 is inoperative and void. I take issue with them; and, for myself, occupying the position that I do as a southern man, I never have subscribed, never will, and never can subscribe to the doctrines contained in the acts of 1850. My objections to the acts of 1850 are known at home. They are recorded in the proceedings of the convention which took place in Georgia in 1850. I was a member of that convention. I voted against the Georgia platform on principle. And now, when that portion of the South having feelings in common with me on this question, have waived their objections to it for the purpose of uniting with the South, and harmonizing public feeling on this great question, it is put in here as the basis of some grand movement in this country. I know not what that movement is."

I concur in the truth and justice of everything which the member from Georgia has here said, but differ from him in the conclusion to which he arrives—that of voting for the bill; and find in his reasons for that vote, additional reasons for my own vote against it; but he votes as a southern man, and votes sectionally. I also am a southern man, but vote nationally on national questions. He sees in it a principle set up which is false and useless in its application to Nebraska, but which is to be asserted in future, and which is put into the bill as the basis of some grand impending movement in this country. Of the nature of this movement, which is to be so grand, and at the same time sectional, the member declares himself to be ignorant; and that ignorance, I would suppose, should be a reason for holding back from a bill which commits its supporters to great unknown things. That is the way it works with me. I also am ignorant, that is to say, uninformed of this grand movement which is to be in this country; but I believe in it, and so believing am the more against the bill. I am against anything that I do not understand, and which nobody will explain to me, and which, according to my own short and dubious lights, is dangerous to the peace and honor of the country. I believe in the utility of this bill—its absolute utility to the slaveholding States—and that not a single slave will ever be held in Kansas or Nebraska under it, (even admitting it to be passed.) Though adapted to slave labor in two of its great staples, (hemp and tobacco,) I do not believe that slaves will ever be held there. The popular vote will expel them. Kansas is contiguous to middle and southern Missouri, where slave labor is profitable, and slaves held in great number—a single owner within two hours' ride of the line holding one hundred more than the five hundred of Randolph of Roanoke; and five thousand in his county alone; but the holder of slaves will have but one vote, and will be beat at the polls by the many who have none. In relation to Kansas and Nebraska, then, I hold the bill to be a deception and a cheat—what gamblers call gammon, congressmen bumcombe, and seamen a tub to the whale: that is to say, an ambidextrous operation upon the senses of confiding people, by which they are made to see what is not, and not to see what is. This is what I believe; and not being obliging enough to join in a scheme of self-deception, or to suffer a game of deception to be played upon me, I must now turn my back upon the illusions of this Nebraska bill, and look out for its real object—the particular purpose for which it was manufactured, and the grand movement of which it is to be the basis.

In this search I naturally look about into the signs and rumors of the times, and into the contemporaneous events which may connect themselves with the grand movement in question; and think I find them in two diplomatic missions, of which the country has heard much—but not all. I speak upon rumor, but neither tell, nor believe, the half of the half of what I hear; but believe enough to excite apprehension, and to justify inquiry. What is a state secret in the city of Washington is street talk in the city of Montezuma.

First. The mission of Mr. Gadsden to Santa Anna. It must have been conceived about the time that this bill was; and, according to transpiring accounts, must have been a grand movement in itself—$50,000,000 for as much Mexican territory on our southern border as would make five or six States of the first class. The area of the acquisition, as I understand it, was to extend from sea to sea, on a line that would give us Santander, Monterey, Saltillo, Parras, Sonora, and all Lower California. This was certainly a large movement, both in point of money and of territory, and also large in political consequence; and clearly furnishing a theatre for the doctrine of non-intervention, if there should be any design to convert the newly acquired territory from free soil, that it is, into slave soil that it might be desired to be. Here, then, I believe I have found one branch of the grand movement; and although Mr. Gadsden returned from his mission with a small slice only of the desired territory, yet he has returned to his post, and may have better luck on a second trial—if Santa Anna escapes from the speckled Indians (Los Indios Pintos) who have him at bay in the Sierra. I say nothing on the merits of this new acquisition, only that it is an old acquaintance with me, having first heard of it in November, 1846, and afterwards in March, 1848—at which latter time it was proposed in the Senate, (by Mr. Davis, of Mississippi,) on the ratification of the Guadalupe Hidalgo treaty; and rejected by the Senate. I voted against the Santander and Monterey line then, and have not seen cause to change my opinion. [Here Mr. BENTON read the article proposed by Mr. DAVIS for the new line.]

Secondly. The mission of Mr. Soule to Madrid—also a grand movement in itself, if reports be true—two hundred and fifty millions for Cuba; and a rumour kicked up if the island is not got. Here again might be found a case for the non-intervention principle; but of that I say nothing, because I know nothing, and wish to know something. Of the acquisition itself I say nothing now, but did say something, about forty-four years ago, in a Nashville newspaper, published by Thomas Eastin, called the Impartial Review; in which I discussed Cuba as the geographical appurtenance of the valley of the Mississippi, and eventually to become its political appurtenance; but to be got with honor whenever it was got; and in all that faith I still remain firm. No dishonor! no stain on the bright and spotless fame left us by our fathers!

Mr. Chairman, I discuss nothing in relation to those rumored acquisitions of the Island of Cuba and a broad side of Mexico; I only call attention to them as probable indexes to the grand movement of which the member from Georgia gave us the revelation, and which no one has denied. According to him; and according to my own belief, this Nebraska bill is only an entering wedge to future enterprises—a thing manufactured for a particular purpose—a stepping stone to a grand movement which is to develop itself in this country of ours. I wish to know what that movement is. I have a right to know, to enable me to discharge my duties understandingly; and I respectfully crave the information from those who have the conducting of the bill.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I would like to know, Mr. Chairman, how much of this time consumed in the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri is to be taken out of the hour allotted to the gentleman from Illinois?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri occupied twenty minutes. As a matter of course, that time must be taken out of the hour allotted to the gentleman from Illinois. It is distinctly understood that the Chair did not authorize the gentleman from Missouri to take the floor from the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KNOX. I am very happy in having yielded to the gentleman from Missouri so much of my time, because what he may have said is of far greater interest, and of far more importance to the country, than any poor remarks of mine would have been.

[This declaration was greeted with warm applause.]

Mr. GROW. Will the gentleman from Illinois now allow the motion to be renewed that the committee take a recess?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope my colleague will proceed now with his speech. There are a great many gentlemen here who want to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. GROW?]

Mr. KNOX. I do.

Mr. GROW. Then I move that the committee take a recess till six o'clock.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw that motion. Let those who want to speak on this bill have an opportunity of doing so.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraw his motion?

Mr. GROW. No; unless the gentleman from Illinois should want to speak now.

The question was put; and a division was called for.

The Chair announced that there were thirty-six votes in the affirmative.

Several MEMBERS. Give it up; count the other side.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The motion is overruled. There are not enough to carry it.

The CHAIRMAN. The majority of members present may take a recess. It does not require a quorum for that purpose.

The Chair announced that there were thirty-six votes for, to twenty against, the motion.

So, at four o'clock and twenty-five minutes, the committee took a recess till 6 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

On the reassembling of the committee at six o'clock,

Mr. KNOX resumed the floor, but gave way to Mr. EVERHART, who asked leave to write out and print a speech, seeing there was no prospect of obtaining an opportunity to deliver it in the House.

Mr. KNOX said, that six months ago, before he came to this city, such a state of things as now exists was not dreamed of by him, nor when he took a solemn oath to support the Constitution of the United States. After further prefatory remarks, he proceeded to speak of the bill under consideration. His principal objection to it was because of the proviso which seeks to repeal the Missouri compromise. The spirit of kindness and concession which brought Missouri into the Union suggested the legislation of 1850. Instead of the measures of the last named year impairing the Missouri compromise, it was indorsed and reaffirmed thereby, if there is any efficacy in the acts of men not secured under their hands and seal.

He dwelt upon this subject until the expiration of the hour to which he was limited in debate.

Mr. HAMILTON, assuming that territorial governments should be established over the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, proceeded to argue in favor of the principles established by the bill. The provision which recommended the bill to the approbation of his judgment, in preference to the geographical line, the absolute prohibition established by the Missouri act of 1820, was the one which enacted that the States to be admitted out of this Territory, in the future, should be admitted with or without slavery, as they should for themselves determine. He contended that the bill neither established nor prohibited slavery in these Territories; and, instead of being a double-faced measure, was one which could be understood by everybody who had a knowledge of the English language.

He replied to the arguments heretofore advanced against the bill by Messrs. MILLSON and FRANKLIN.

Mr. GOODE said he was a cheerful and cordial advocate of that measure. He desired to state, candidly and frankly, perhaps with some degree of imprudence, the reasons which would control his vote.

It had been announced to the country that this measure has been unnecessarily, rashly, recklessly, thrust upon Congress, and that the apple of discord, a fire-brand, had been thrown among the people. As usual, the responsibility of the measure and the discussion is referred to the South, the ever-injured South. It is not the party which asks justice, but the party which refuses justice, which incurs the responsibility. But the South is not responsible. She has preferred no claim at all. She has learned from the bitter past, that if she would enjoy tranquillity she must be silent. He charged that the responsibility of this measure rests with the North. Far be it from him to say it was an odious responsibility. It was a glorious responsibility. The northern men who brought forward this measure were patriots, deserving well of their country. The odious responsibility of this discussion, and the excitement which it has produced, rest with the fell spirit of Abolition, the offspring of fanaticism and of unholy ambition. Having vindicated the South from the responsibility of the introduction of this bill, he proceeded to advocate the measure because of the great principle therein contained, of non-intervention on the part of Congress, in imposing an anti-slavery restriction on the organization of territorial governments. This, he contended, was important as a precedent.

Mr. DUNHAM said that no one could regret more than himself that this subject had been brought forward at this time. He did not believe the objects to be accomplished, upon the one side or the other, were equal to the evils which would grow out of this renewed agitation of the subject of slavery.

He thought that the effect of reviving this agitation would be to breathe the breath of life into the almost dead body of the Whig party; to clothe with flesh the skeleton of Abolitionism. But he had an abiding confidence in the intelligence of the American people, and believed that when the principles of this bill should become thoroughly discussed and understood by them, the excitement which was now attempted to be created out of it would, as in 1850, be hushed into silence.

He then opposed the Clayton amendment. No member from Indiana, nor from any of the north-western States, could vote for this amendment; for, by their organic law, they had established provisions for the foreign class of population which were in direct contradiction to what was called the Clayton amendment.

The great question, he contended, which was involved in the bill, was the ability, the right of the people to govern themselves. This he defended at length, arguing that it was in accordance with our republican institutions.

He then argued to prove that slavery could only exist by municipal law, and said that there would be no legislation, after the passage of this bill, in the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, by which title to slave property would be recognized. There must be positive law before slavery could be taken into Nebraska and Kansas. He further argued to prove the improbability of the introduction of slavery into these Territories, and declared that there could be no compromise under the Constitution, so far as slavery was concerned.

Mr. PRATT said that the proposition to repeal the Missouri compromise, contained in this bill, must plead his apology for occupying the time of the committee for a brief period. It may well be doubted whether it would not be a breach of good faith for the General Government to organize territorial governments over the heads of the aborigines, who have been guaranteed peaceable possession of the Territories in question. If there was any human being more than another abused by the white man, it was the Indian. It was claimed by the friends of the bill that its provisions are ample for this unfortunate race. He trusted in God that this may prove the fact, if the bill become law.

When a bill for organizing the Territory of Nebraska was passed by the last Congress, he thought it was unwise and premature. So thought the people of New England. To organize a government where there were no inhabitants, or next to none, seemed to be the extreme of folly, especially when there are so many good lands within the organized Territories.

But there are reasons for organizing new Territories now which did not exist a year ago. If the bill before the committee were divested of the odious feature, he should not occupy the floor at this moment.

When this question was sprung on the country, everybody was shocked at the idea of such a monstrous proposition. Its open advocates were very few. On its introduction, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] was the only member pledged to the support of the measure, so far as he knew. Northern members expressed themselves hostile to it. Southern gentlemen said if the North chose to give them a boon, they would not refuse to accept of it. In other words, it was an adopted child, though they were not willing to have it sworn to them. He denied that the North have violated the Missouri compromise. They have regarded it sacred as the Constitution itself. The people did not ask or require this repeal. They were satisfied to let well enough alone. They never thought of repealing it.

He declared that this was neither a Whig nor a Democratic measure. It was a sectional measure—nothing else. Who was so blind as not to see the object? Whether this bill pass or not he declared his determination not to make any factious opposition to it. If the majority favor the passage of the bill, they have a right to pass it. If a majority was opposed to it, as he trusted in God there was, he should rejoice; but whether the bill pass or not, he should continue to the extent of his ability to aid in promoting the peace and harmony of this glorious Confederacy, which is the pride and admiration of the world.

Mr. CASKIE said that the great measure of organizing a large extent of our fair possessions upon a constitutional basis was now before them, the Representatives of the people. A happy augury was to be found in the fact that this proposal of justice to the South had been presented by the North, had been inaugurated by a gallant Senator from the North, there born, there living, and there to be buried. It had supporters, too, in men from the same region, who graced senatorial dignity, and who were infused with the spirit of that brotherhood which our fathers strove to secure under the great shield of the equality of all the State and all the sections of our Confederacy.

He then characterized the Missouri compromise as unconstitutional and unjust to the South, and advocated the doctrine of leaving to the people the right to determine the question of slavery for themselves. In regard to the former point, he inquired if any two things could be found more opposite than what was claimed for the Missouri restriction by its friends and its true character, as presented by the historical records of the country? Everybody knew that it was but an act of Congress, repealable in its very nature.

The idea that members of Congress had the right to make unconstitutional, sacred compacts, was a novelty which there was little danger would supplant the old-fashioned notion that they were merely law-makers, bound to vote on each proposition as their consciences dictated, without any shadow of authority to barter votes with each other, or make treaties for their respective sections. The States had done this in an instrument called the Constitution, and would to God it was more respected! It was now offered as the law for both North and South in Kansas and Nebraska, and as the only law.

He then referred to various precedents to prove that the North had frequently violated the act of 1820, and denied the right of Congress to fetter any State in regard to slavery.

Mr. PRINGLE opposed the passage of the bill on account of the many objectionable features contained in it; but the great objection, in his mind, and the one which overshadowed all others, is, that it proposes a violation of good faith. It proposes a repeal of the Missouri compromise, to abrogate the restriction against slavery north of 36° 30', after all the territory south of that line has been converted into slave States. This line, forced upon the North by southern representatives and northern dough-faces, it is proposed to erase; and the power that is to annul is composed of the same material that established it.

Mr. HOWE. With the permission of my colleague, [Mr. DRUM,] I rise simply to say that I had desired to make some remarks in opposition to the bill now under consideration before the committee; but as the time is so limited, I will forego that privilege, if it meets the wishes of gentlemen present, and publish my remarks without occupying the attention of the committee.

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]

Mr. DRUM remarked that he came here as a friend of the Administration, and therefore he felt that it was the duty of every friend to extricate it from the toils in which unwise counsels have involved it. He did not rise for the purpose of merely consuming time, or making a vain display. He was perfectly indifferent as to whether what he intended to say should be heard beyond the limits of this House. He rose for the specific purpose of allaying the excitement in the country, and of explaining an amendment which he should offer to-morrow. The committee could find no constitutional objection to it, and he saw no reason why they should not prefer it to the particular section which had been the basis of so much discussion. He proposed to strike out all that part of the section which had been the subject of dispute, and to insert as follows:

That the said territory, or any portion thereof, when admitted as a State, shall be received into the Union, with or without slavery, as its constitution may prescribe at the time of admission; anything contained in the eighth section of the act passed by Congress March 6, 1820, commonly called the Missouri compromise, or any other law of Congress, to the contrary notwithstanding.

This amendment, he said, proposes that a State, as an independent sovereignty, has a right to repeal the Missouri compromise, but that Congress has no right to repeal it. He further explained his amendment.

Mr. GREENWOOD said, that although he did not believe slavery could exist in Kansas and Nebraska to any considerable extent, yet it was no reason why he should not support the bill. Although it contained principles which did not meet with his approbation, for the reason that they were not southern enough for him, yet he should support it so long as it should contain the great principle of non-intervention, as, in his opinion, should this doctrine be established and carried out, it would have the effect of forever withdrawing slavery agitation from the Halls of Congress.

Mr. SEYMOUR then argued to show that the bill, instead of transferring the subject of slavery from the Halls of Congress to the people of the Territories, transferred it, in effect, to the President of the United States.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, then obtained the floor, when (at quarter past twelve) the committee took a recess until nine o'clock in the morning.

SATURDAY MORNING, MAY 20, 1854.

The committee reassembled this morning, pursuant to its order, at nine o'clock, a. m., (Mr. OLDS in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill (No. 236) for the organization of the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, being entitled to the floor, yielded to

Mr. HARLAN, of Ohio, who said he was opposed to this bill, because

1. It repeals the Missouri compromise, which, in his opinion, the South is in honor bound to respect, and the free States bound, both by honor and duty, to maintain.

2. The legislation of 1850 is not inconsistent with that of 1820.

3. The principles of the legislation of 1850 are transcended and violated by this bill.

4. The platforms of both political parties of 1852 are violated by this bill, and had it been understood that the Democratic platform did either warrant, justify, or demand the repeal of the Missouri compromise, Franklin Pierce would have now been a private citizen, and the seats of the northern men who now tender this repeal would have been filled by others.

5. He held it not only within the power of Congress to legislate for the Territories, but that it is the duty of Congress, and a duty which cannot be abandoned.

6. He was opposed to the extension of slavery over Territories now free, and he would not do it himself, nor would he remove any obstacle now in the way of its extension. He would not use the Territorial Legislature as a cats-paw to do that which he had not the courage to do himself.

These were the propositions which he desired to constitute the skeleton of a speech.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio, said he had desired to address the committee on this subject, but finding that he would not have an opportunity, asked and obtained leave to print a speech.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, then took the floor, and replied to gentlemen who had preceded him. It had been said the Missouri restriction of 1820 was a solemn compact, and therefore irrevocable, and on this ground it was alleged with great earnestness, and he had no doubt with a great deal of sincerity, by gentlemen on the other side of the House, that it would be a gross violation of faith, an unwarrantable aggression on the rights of the northern people, to pass the bill in its present form. He could not view the matter in this light.

There was, he contended, nothing in either the Constitution or the laws, which justifies the looking at any enactment of Congress as anything more than an enactment. There was nothing in the Constitution or the laws which justifies the putting of the stamp of irrevocability on anything done by Congress.

It was acknowledged universally, and it must be acknowledged, so far as the sense and substance of the act of 1820 was concerned, that it is certainly not a compact or agreement of an irrevocable character. But it was alleged, with a show of reason, that there was something in the circumstances of the times, on the occasion of its passage, which gives it a moral force, equivalent to what would be the moral force of a compact binding parties to an irrevocable agreement.

He would not attempt to deny that, in the circumstances which attended the passage of the Missouri act, there was something of a solemn and important character, which stamps the act with a character somewhat different from an ordinary act of legislation; and if the circumstances continued the same to this day, he should be the last to raise his hand to disturb a settlement which, in that point of view, was considered sacred and binding.

The tacit understanding originated in circumstances of great importance, and must pass away with the circumstances which gave it birth. It seems certain it cannot be considered as binding future generations. We now stand in the midst of scenes and circumstances wholly different.

He proceeded to recount briefly the circumstances under which the Missouri act was passed; and contended it had since been wholly repudiated by the North and had been trampled on again and again. In 1850 the principle of the act of 1820 lost its power, and was rejected by the dominant majority in this House. The circumstances, he repeated, have entirely changed, and it would be unjust to say that we are bound by the compact of 1820. It would be absurd in itself and contrary to plain understanding.

The Constitution and equality require that this restriction should be removed in the organization of all the Territories of the United States.

He argued the question, and advocated the passage of the bill until the expiration of the hour to which he was restricted to debate.

Mr. GOODRICH said that it was high time that they should do away with compromises. If they were to be regarded as binding in honor and good faith no longer than when the section of country which had received and appropriated its part of the consideration found it to be for its interests to come in and take the other part, compromises were henceforth at an end. The North were beginning to understand what the public men of the South, who gave tone and direction to public sentiment there, meant by this proposed repeal; and, his word for it, no more compromises would be made. The technical arguments, by which it was sought to throw off the honorable obligations of the Missouri compromise, had had no other effect in the North than to convince the public mind that the South regarded compromises upon the subject of slavery as mere temporary expedients to extend slavery, to be set aside whenever they became practical barriers to stay slavery.

Should this bill pass, and establish a tabula rasa in these Territories, there would be a counterpart to it at the North—a tabula rasa in regard to compromises. When, said he, you strike down the legal power of the Missouri compromise of 1820, you strike down the moral power of the compromise of 1850. Repeal the Missouri compromise, the most sacred that has been made since the great compromises of the Constitution, and you wipe out, as with a sponge, all compromises at the North. Your laws may be made and have the force of laws, but they will not be respected as compromises.

He then criticised the report of the Senate on the subject of the bill, as compared with the bill itself, and said that if they should now repeal the Missouri compromise, the report of the 4th of January would stand as a confession of one of the greatest frauds upon northern compromise men that had ever been perpetrated in the history of political parties.

He then argued to prove that the Missouri act of 1820 was a compromise, and contended that the North had not repudiated it.

Mr. PHILLIPS made the following explanation in reply to some remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Goodrich:]

The gentleman from Massachusetts, who has just taken his seat, asserted that I had argued "that the Missouri restriction was not intended to be perpetual;" and, upon this assertion, he has treated us with a refutation. Now, sir, permit me to read from my printed speech what I did say:

"It will be remembered that though Missouri was finally admitted without a condition for the inhibition of slavery, yet that the claim of power on the part of Congress to insist upon one was sustained. The eighth section of the act asserts the power not only to exclude slavery during the territorial condition, but through all changes of Government. The prohibition is not for a limited time, but FOREVER."

It will be seen that my statement is the very reverse of the assertion made on this floor. I will now, Mr. Chairman, conclude by recommending to the gentleman from Massachusetts a safe rule, that before he attempts to reply to an argument, he should understand what in fact the argument is.

Mr. HENN. Mr. Chairman, the bill now under consideration for the organization of Nebraska and Kansas Territories is, perhaps, of more practical importance to the State of Iowa, and the people of the district which I have the honor to represent upon this floor, than to any other State or constituency in the Union, and hence it is that I desire to say something of the reasons that will induce me to give a warm, cordial, and unflinching support to the substitute proposed by the chairman of the Committee on Territories, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] and for all of its provisions. I shall say something for the information of individual members of this committee, something for the information of my constituents, and something to correct the erroneous views of those not acquainted with the West and her enlightened population. To this end I propose to demonstrate:

First. The importance of an organization of these Territories at this time; the influence of their organization upon the character of the great West; the correctness of the principles of self-government and congressional non-interference, as recognized by both the original bill and the substitute; and give my views as to the rules which should govern the legislative and executive branches of this Government in their action upon territorial matters.

Secondly. I propose to speak of the physical character of the country which it is contemplated to organize; of its political past, of its political future, and of its commercial importance to Iowa, and to the whole country.

I will then add a few words relative to the situation of parties in Iowa, and elsewhere, upon the great questions involved in this bill, and define, briefly, my objections to that part of the Senate bill which prohibits those who have sought an asylum in our country, and have evinced their intention of becoming citizens, from having a part in the organization of the Territories proposed to be created.

Mr. WITTE, in the course of his remarks, said that if the North—he spoke of the Democratic party—are divided in sentiment on this subject, it is because they do not understand the proposition. If the people, by the exercise of their legal sovereign rights, shall desire to make every square foot of the soil on the continent slave, he would have it so; if, on the other hand, by the exercise of the same rights and power, they would make every square foot free, he would have it so. This was the sentiment of the North, so far as one man could speak for them. The Democracy of the North are as sound on this question of State-rights doctrine as the South are. They would yield not one jot or tittle, because the principles which constitute the safety of the North, constitute the safety of the South. The question is: Is the Missouri compromise repealable? The people want to know whether this bill can be enacted without a repeal of the Missouri compromise. He held that this compromise is, like other acts, repealable. He, however, questioned this a little at one time.

If it should be found that it was unwise to invest the people of these Territories with the power to settle the question of slavery for themselves, he should console himself with the reflection that it is always well, where there is a doubt as to the construction of the Constitution, to give to the people the benefit of the doubt.

He replied to his colleague, [Mr. Grow,] who, he said, had misrepresented the sentiment of the North, no doubt unintentionally.

Mr. CHASTAIN contended that this measure was in strict accordance with the Constitution, just to the North and the South, and to the people who were hereafter to inhabit the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas. He also contended that the restriction of 36° 30' was forced upon the South, was unconstitutional, and was only submitted to by that section for reasons weighty in themselves.

Mr. EDMANDS. I have made several attempts to address the committee on the bill before us. I remained here during the night, until the recess of this morning, in hopes to get an opportunity of so doing. I saw many gentlemen given their hour. An hour to speak! It was an hour for sleep; past the hours of business; ay, even those of recreations; an hour fit only for dark designs; fit only for such an outrage as is being perpetrated on the moral sense of the North, in the attempt to pass this bill, compatible with the foul means adopted to force it through the House! I appeal to the sober sense of this House, whether it is proper, whether, in the spirit of American liberty, to carry on the business of legislation at such unseasonable hours? I protest, in the name of my constituency, against being kept up here at the behest of an imperious majority, during midnight hours, to legislate on—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LYON said he designed, at the proper time, to offer an amendment to the bill in the following form:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the executive power and authority in and over said Territory of Nebraska shall be vested in a Governor who shall be elected by THE PEOPLE OF SAID TERRITORY. The Governor shall reside within said Territory, shall be commander-in-chief of the militia thereof, shall perform the duties and receive the emoluments of superintendent of Indian affairs, and shall approve of all laws passed by the Legislative Assembly before they shall take effect; he may grant pardons and respite for offenses against the laws of said Territory, shall commission all officers who shall be appointed to office under the laws of the said Territory, and shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

He said that he would avail himself of the occasion to present to the members of the House and the country his views on the bill, and on the propriety of the amendment he suggested.

Mr. PENNINGTON then addressed the committee. He said that before the debate should be finally closed upon this bill, and while its defeat, though now scarcely to be hoped for, was still possible, and the evil it foreboded might yet be averted, he desired to state the grounds on which he had hitherto opposed, and should continue to oppose, the passage of this odious and dangerous measure.

He was opposed to the passage of the bill on many grounds.

He objected to it, in the first place, because there is no immediate necessity for the organization of the proposed Territories, and the measure was therefore premature. No reason had been assigned, here or elsewhere, satisfactory to his mind, for such organization. There is no population now within the limits of the proposed Territories to demand it. There can be no population there, lawfully, so long as the Indian intercourse act remains un repealed. That act forbids the ingress into those Territories of all persons not belonging to the Indian tribes, other than the authorized agents of the Government, and such as shall have a temporary and revocable license from the Government, and that solely for the purposes of trade.

This act was passed for the protection of the Indian tribes against intrusion, and the public domain from encroachments by unlawful settlements, and in fulfillment of solemn treaty stipulations made by the United States with these tribes. It could not be repealed without a breach of good faith thus pledged by the Government. Not a foot of the soil within the limits of the proposed Territories is now owned by a white man; and, until surveyed and opened for sale and entry, no title to any portion of it can be acquired or lawfully occupied for settlement.

He objected to the bill, in the second place, because it is against the sound policy of the Government to extend its land system over this portion of the public domain, and to open them for settlement. The Government has large quantities of public lands now lying unsold and unoccupied within the limits of the new States, and in the Territories already organized, which ought first to be settled. He maintained that it was not good policy to diffuse the population of the country over so vast an expanse of country. It would greatly increase the burdens, without contributing in the slightest degree to the prosperity or happiness of the people, or to the development of the resources of the country. It would be a hindrance to both. Emigration was needed, all the emigration indeed that can be led in the direction of Oregon, Washington, Utah, and New Mexico.

The Government had adopted the policy of encouraging the settlement of those Territories by holding out large bounties in donations of public lands as inducements to emigration. He was opposed to the bill under consideration, as a measure directly calculated to counteract this policy. It had been said, that the tide of emigration would sweep over the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska whether these territorial governments should be established or not, and in spite of the prohibitions of law. He was unwilling to believe that this Government is powerless to protect its own public domain against its own citizens, or against any aggression, come from what quarter it might. He was unwilling to concede that the clearest dictates of sound policy should be yielded to any species of filibusterism.

He objected to the bill, in the third place, because it violates the public faith, pledged by numerous treaties with the Indian tribes within the limits of the proposed Territories. The United States had guaranteed to these tribes their homes, set apart for them by treaty, as permanent homes, to be enjoyed by them forever against the encroachments of white settlements. These treaties remain. In letter and in spirit the Government is bound by the highest obligations of good faith, to guarantee and protect these homes of the aborigines. And this might be done, as he had shown, consistently with the sound policy of the Government, having reference only to its own best interests.

He objected to the bill, in the fourth place, because it repealed the Missouri compromise, a compromise to which the national faith had been solemnly pledged under circumstances which give it a sanction scarcely less sacred than that which attaches to the Constitution itself. It embodies the mutual pledges of the two great sections of the country, and had hitherto been sacredly maintained by both. Its constitutionality was clear and undoubted. He should not stop to inquire whether it be true of any portion of the North that it may not rightfully or gracefully remonstrate against its repeal, because opposed to it at the time of its enactment. This cannot be truthfully said of the State of New Jersey. She was a party to it, and it owes its existence to the votes of her Representatives on the floor of this House. As a Representative from New Jersey, in her name, and in conformity with the sentiments of the great body of her people, he demanded the fulfillment of the bond. He, for one, would not betray her.

He objected to the bill, in the fifth place, because it is designed to authorize slavery extension to regions now dedicated to freedom, and is thus opposed not only to the policy of the fathers of the Republic, but to the true policy of the Union at this period of our progress, and to the spirit of the age in which we live. He deprecated it as a fountain of bitter waters, and as fruitful of danger to the Union.

Mr. SAGE. Mr. Chairman, the hour having arrived to close debate on the bill to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, and not having been able to get the floor to express my views in relation to the same, I ask permission of the committee to publish in the Globe the remarks which I intended to have made to the committee on this subject.

On motion by Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, all gentlemen similarly situated obtained that privilege.

The hour of twelve having arrived, to which debate had been limited by an order of the House,

Mr. RICHARDSON proceeded to close the general debate on this bill, remarking that the propositions which it contained to secure the equality of the States and the rights of the people, under the Constitution, must triumph everywhere.

During the progress of this debate, he remarked, various gentlemen, representing what they were pleased to call northern States, had said that they had stood by the South upon this question, when their course did not meet with the approval of their constituents. He occupied no such position. He stood by the South whenever the principles they maintained met the approval of his judgment. All he asked was, was it right and just? would it advance the great interests, and contribute to the renown of the Republic? Only when he had determined this question in the affirmative had he lent the South his support.

Gentlemen misapprehended the course he had pursued, if they thought that he had been more favorable to the North than to the South, or to the South than the North. He looked upon all sections as his country, and wherever the glorious banner of the Republic floated on this land, that land was his country. To-day he would fight to defend the interests of any section.

He then replied to various arguments against the bill; and urged its friends to reject all amendments, and pass the substitute as it now stood.

The debate on the Nebraska bill having closed, The CHAIRMAN. Before we proceed to the consideration of the bill by sections, the Chair will ask the Clerk to read so much of the 34th rule of the House as applies to the five-minute debate.

Mr. DEAN, (at one o'clock, p. m.) I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the question after the rule is read.

A portion of the 34th rule was read, as follows:

"Provided, That where debate is closed by order of the House, any member shall be allowed, in committee, five minutes to explain any amendment he may offer; after which any member who shall first obtain the floor, shall be allowed to speak five minutes in opposition to it; and there shall be no further debate on the amendment; but the same privilege on debate shall be allowed in favor of, and against any amendment that may be offered to the amendment; and neither the amendment nor the amendment to the amendment shall be withdrawn by the mover thereof, unless by the unanimous consent of the committee."

The CHAIRMAN. I called for the reading of this rule for the purpose of saying to the committee that I intend to act strictly up to the letter of the rule, and to insist that speeches must be for the amendment or against the amendment; not to the bill and against the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN took the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana cannot hold the floor now.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not intend to question the decision of the Chair, nor to infringe on the rules of the House; but I rise to ask the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON]—

The CHAIRMAN, (interrupting.) The gentleman from Illinois has no power to extend any courtesy to the gentleman from Indiana. The committee are now under the five-minute rule, and the Chair shall enforce the rule strictly.

The question being on the motion of the gentleman from New York,

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL and CHASTAIN were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 92.

So the committee refused to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the first section of the bill.

Mr. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman, I propose to amend the bill by striking out all that follows, after the word "included," at the end of the third line, and substituting in lieu thereof what I send to the Chair; and if the committee will allow me, I will explain to them precisely the character of the amendment.

[The amendment proposed was the bill organizing a territorial government for Nebraska, passed by the House at the last session of Congress.]

Several MEMBERS. Let it be read.

Mr. EDGERTON. It may be read now, or at the close of my five minutes. I prefer, however, to say what I have to say now.

Mr. Chairman, I will explain, if permitted, that the bill which I now propose is the bill passed by this House during the last Congress, and on the 10th day of February, 1853. When the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] introduced the House bill now before the committee, to organize the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, I gave notice to the House that I would offer this bill as an amendment in the nature of a substitute. I did it, sir, because I believed it to be the best bill that could be passed to organize these Territories, and because it passed this House with only forty-three votes against it, and seventeen of the votes in its favor were southern votes.

It went to the Senate, was supported by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DOUGLAS,] by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. ATCHISON,] and by seventeen other Senators, who voted to take it up out of its order. During the whole time it was before Congress for consideration, no sectional question was raised, either in this House or in the Senate, in relation to it. It gave rise to no sectional argument; it created no sectional difficulty. It was not stated in this House that it was necessary to repeal the Missouri compromise in order to do justice to the South; neither was it intimated that it was inconsistent with the principles of the legislation of 1850. The time had not come for that violation of compact.

At that time the only objection that was made to it was, that it did injustice to the Indians. That objection, however, was obviated by amendments, and it passed this House, and I believe it would have passed the Senate if it had had a fair vote. That vote was prevented by the urgent necessity of considering the appropriation bills.

This amendment which I offer proposes to organize but one Territory. If one Territory was all that was then required, it is all that is required now; for there has been no material increase in the white population since that time. I have not yet heard any satisfactory reason assigned by any one who has spoken upon the subject, in this House or in the Senate, not even the gentleman from Illinois, who has last spoken upon the bill, why there should be two Territories organized at this time. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs was in that Territory, I believe, in October last, and states there was but eleven white men legally in the Territory. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] thinks that two Territories are necessary, but assigns no substantial reason for the organization. He says, if we are to have the fight upon this question of organization, we might as well have it now, and for two Territories, as at any other time.

But if two Territories are to be organized, why not provide for a fair division? The country which it is proposed to organize into the Territory of Kansas is much the most valuable portion, and that portion which will most likely be the first to be settled and formed into States, and contains not more than a third or a fourth of the entire Territory of Nebraska. It is only about one fourth the size of that which it is proposed to organize into the remaining Territory of Nebraska. I say, therefore, that if it is necessary that there should be two Territories, why not make a fair division? Divide the Territories so that they shall be as nearly equal as possible in soil and inducements for settlement. The division proposed cuts off from the Territory of Nebraska the most valuable portion for the Territory of Kansas, that best adapted for profitable slave labor—and intended for it—and leaves the northern portion, barren and uninhabitable, for the people of the North.

Another reason why we should pass the substitute I have offered is, that it contains more of the principles of non-intervention and self-government than are to be found in the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois. Upon that question I challenge him to a discussion upon the merits of the two bills. This bill, sir, gives no veto power to the Governor of the Territory. By it the people, in their legislative capacity, are supreme. They do in fact govern themselves by making their own laws. Neither the original bill, nor the substitute of the gentleman, which is the Senate bill, permits them to do so. It takes from Congress the power to revise the legislation of the Territory; and in other respects it places more power in the hands of the people, and, if there be any truth in the doctrine of non-intervention, it is contained in this bill, and to a greater extent than in the substitute proposed by the gentleman. And, another thing. My amendment proposes to give to the free white inhabitants of the Territory the privilege of the elective franchise. That is a privilege not found in the other bills, but prohibited by them.

But the greatest of all reasons why northern men should support the bill of the last Congress, which is my amendment, is, that it does not propose the repeal of the Missouri compromise. During the last Congress, when that bill was under consideration in this House, no southern man dared to get up and move a repeal of that compromise. The time had not arrived when that imposition on the North was to be attempted. Southern men voted for the bill as it was. The gentlemen from Georgia, [Messrs. TOOMBS and STEPHENS] were members of this House, and then, as now, the jealous and zealous guardians of the rights of the South; but they did not discover that their rights required the repeal of the Missouri compromise, or that the legislation of 1850 was inconsistent with it, or with the bill. The gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] gentlemen from Louisiana, gentlemen from Virginia, all voted for the bill. No man dared to raise the question that it was necessary to repeal the Missouri compromise in order to do justice to the South. But in one short year the necessities of politics have demanded its repeal, and popular sovereignty has been seized upon by northern men who have been elevated by its power, and fear its vengeance for their errors, as an excuse for the violation of a compact which reason and justice sustained. Popular sovereignty is not a new doctrine. It is as old as the Union, and goes everywhere with the American citizen, except into the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, under the bill I am endeavoring to amend. They exclude it. The people there would not be sovereign. The great law that the majority shall rule, would there have no existence. The legislation is to be controlled by a Governor not the choice of the people, beyond their reach. The veto power is bad enough anywhere, but it is monstrous when exercised by an Executive not elected by the people nor responsible to them, but who holds his office in defiance of their wishes.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Is it in order to move to perfect the matter proposed to be stricken out?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. EDGERTON. I now ask that the amendment which I offered be read.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be read.
The Clerk then proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I move to amend the first section of the bill by striking out all between the words "Nebraska," in the eighteenth line, and the word "provided," in the twenty-second line.

The words proposed to be stricken out were reported by the Clerk, as follows:

"And when admitted as a State or States, the said Territory, or any portion of the same, shall be received into the Union, with or without slavery, as their constitution may prescribe at the time of their admission."

Mr. GIDDINGS. It is unnecessary that I should say I am opposed to the bill. I wish to call the attention of the committee to that part which says what future Congresses shall do, and what they shall not do. Such a provision is utterly and palpably at variance with the construction which every statesman has ever given to the Constitution.

The absurdity of the proposition that to legislate for those who shall come after us, or attempt to determine what our successors shall do in relation to the admission or rejection of a State with slavery or without slavery, appears to me absurd. It strikes me that no member of the House will be willing to place his name upon the record in favor of such a proposition; particularly would I suppose that to be the case at the present time, when every man upon the opposite side of the House has taken the position that the most solemn obligation of a former Congress, entered into under peculiar circumstances, shall be disregarded, trampled upon, and repudiated. Am I to stand here and gravely enact what my successors shall do in relation to admitting States from this Territory, with or without slavery, when the record of this discussion will bear to our successors the fact that the doctrine has been gravely and solemnly denied in our debates, and in this very bill, which declares the Missouri compromise inoperative and void? Every member who sustains it has taken the ground that all former attempts to bind a subsequent Congress are held in contempt. When we see this in the bill before us, can we turn around and embrace in all directions to such future Congresses as may have the question before them, and instruct them to admit such States as may apply for admission, with just such constitutions as they may happen to present?

Sir, if we possess the right or the power to do that, this bill is itself an absurdity, for it denies the power. I ask if gentlemen will maintain such inconsistencies? Do they suppose they can make the people believe these absurdities? Will gentlemen place such contradictions upon the record, and with the expectation that the people will not detect them? The bill itself on its very face denies the obligation which former Congresses have attempted to impose upon us; and having repudiated that, it attempts to bind those who shall come after us. Sir, gentlemen may make any attempts in that direction which they may please; but I tell them that all such attempts to bind our successors in future times will be in vain; they will repudiate all your efforts to guide their action. When they see that we have disregarded the will of our predecessors, who in 1820 consecrated this territory to freedom, they will repudiate this very act. You may say to them that these new States shall come in, with or without slavery, as they themselves may determine, but your instructions will be in vain. You may say that they shall not legislate upon this subject in future; but, gentlemen, they will meet you on this point; the free States will make their voices heard on a subject in which they will have so much interest. The question will go before the people ere that period shall arrive; the popular voice will be heard, and the popular influence will be felt, and the popular will understood, by men who shall hold seats here when these States apply for admission.

Gentlemen who now appear to feel themselves clothed with powers to condemn all past action of our predecessors, and to guide all future action of our successors, will be likely to hear the voice of popular indignation, pronouncing the dread sentence of "depart, ye politically accursed, into outer darkness."

Gentlemen may understand that we of the North recognize no obligation to associate in this body with Representatives from new slave States. I think the last slave State has been admitted. We want no more Representatives in this Hall, unless they are the Representatives of freemen. Gentlemen cannot palm off upon us a proposition so much opposed to the feelings and sentiments of a majority of the people of the Union. No, sir. When these States come in, they must come as free States. We want no more Representatives of slavery; we must have Representatives of freemen, or none at all.

Now it strikes me that this proposition is so palpably just, that I almost expect the support of gentlemen upon the other side of the House. I look to their support with some degree of confidence. They must vote for this amendment if they intend to maintain consistency of action. Their avowed doctrines are distinctly in favor of the amendment; and I am not at liberty to suppose they will reject an amendment in such accordance with the whole tenor of their action.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, and hope it will be rejected. I am not, however, disposed to discuss it, and I therefore give the balance of my five minutes to the committee.

The question now being on Mr. GIDDINGS's amendment,

Mr. BENNETT. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. SAPP and HAMILTON were appointed.

The question was then taken on Mr. GIDDINGS's amendment; and it was decided in the negative, the tellers having reported—ayes 53, noes not counted.

Mr. WALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike from the first section the words "be, and the same is hereby," and in lieu thereof to insert the words "shall not, during the year 1854, be," so that, if the amendment be adopted, the section will read, "thence down the main channel of said river to the place of beginning, shall not, during the year 1854, be created into a temporary government by the name of the Territory of Nebraska."

I do not wish, Mr. Chairman, that any friend of this bill should regard the amendment which I submit as a frivolous one. It is not so intended by me. It is intended as a substantial amendment. And for the purpose of testing the sense of the committee on the question involved, I propose it to the committee, and through the committee I wish to have it understood by the country that it has been proposed as the olive branch of peace.

Mr. Chairman, this House of Representatives was not elected on the issue which is now engrossing our thoughts, our hearts, and our feelings. Members were sent here to transact the ordinary business of the country; if need be, to create the Territory of Nebraska; and if there be occasion for more than one Territory, to form two, by the names of Nebraska and Kansas, or what not. I put it to this committee, I put it to the friends of this measure, I put it to their own consciences, that we were not sent here—

Mr. RICHARDSON. I call the gentleman to order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman is not discussing the proposition involved in his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts proposes that the bill shall take effect at a future period, and is stating his reasons why the amendment should be adopted. The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman is in order.

Mr. WALLEY. I do not intend to travel one iota, one hair's breadth from the line of order. I say, with great deference to the gentleman who has interrupted me, that I am strictly in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. WALLEY. Allow me to say to this committee, that we are unprepared to act upon this matter now; we were not elected for this purpose; and if gentlemen do not agree with me in this sentiment now, they will be convinced that I am right before the present year closes.

I am telling gentlemen what I know from what I hear, and from what my constituents write to me. I have letters from the most conservative men in Massachusetts, from men who have stood by the institutions of this country, and by all the compromises faithfully and fearlessly, and they tell me "you are periling everything; pray tell us, cannot you make the South understand that they are jeopardizing their own interests, as well as the interests of the whole country?"

Such is the language that is written to me by men who have been the most conservative men in Boston and in Massachusetts, up to the present time, and I have offered this amendment for the purpose of saying to the friends of this bill, to those who wish to rush it through the present Congress with hot haste, that I ask them to pause until there have been elections held, until the people shall have spoken in their primary assemblies on this question, until we have heard from our constituents North and South. Why, sir, I received a letter from a friend in North Carolina, this morning, saying that he sympathizes with me in the views expressed in my speech the other day, and that the South were making a mistake, in his judgment, upon this matter, and I am well convinced that vast numbers of southern people cherish widely different sentiments from those which are urged upon this floor, and pressed upon the country by politicians—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRIDGES. I am opposed to the amendment, and ask for a vote upon it.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I call for tellers on the amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WHEELER and BRIDGES were appointed.

The question was then put; and the tellers reported—ayes 77, noes 103.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PECKHAM. I wish to offer the following amendment in the sixth line of the first section of this bill, after the words "to wit," strike out all, including the word "beginning," in the seventeenth line, and insert the following:

Beginning at a point on the western boundary of the State of Missouri where the thirty seventh parallel of north latitude crosses the same; thence westward on said parallel to the eastern boundary of New Mexico; thence north on said boundary to latitude 38°; thence following said boundary westward to the east boundary of Utah, or the summit of the Rocky Mountains; thence on said summit northward to the forty-ninth parallel of north latitude; thence east on said parallel to the western boundary of Minnesota; thence southward on said boundary to the Mississippi river; thence down the main channel of said river to the place of beginning.

This amendment includes both Nebraska and Kansas, and hence makes one instead of two territorial governments.

I offer this amendment in good faith, not expecting, however, that it will be carried in this committee; because I perceive that there is a majority in favor of doing what the chairman of the Committee on Territories [Mr. RICHARDSON] announced should be the order of business—that is, to vote down every amendment proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York must confine his remarks to the amendment he offers.

Mr. PECKHAM. I will endeavor to do so. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] said that he proposed to organize two Territories now, for the reason that if he omitted to do so he anticipated another fight in an attempt to organize another, and hence he intended to organize two now. Why now? Because, if there should be another fight, on which side will be the victory is not doubtful. Is the gentleman afraid to leave this question to the popular voice? He advocates the doctrine of popular sovereignty with great energy. He claims to rely upon that principle as sustaining this bill, but he has not the courage to act upon his principle, and trust the popular sovereignty to decide whether we shall have two Territories or one. Such a position has never before been taken in this House, nor in any legislative body, in my belief, as the one here announced by the gentleman—in effect that they will legislate, not upon the merits of the bill, not for the wants of the country, not for its interests or its welfare, but simply because they chance to have the power, it shall be exercised while they have it to organize two Territories over this land where it is not denied, in fact it is virtually conceded, that only one territorial government is required, as it is not pretended that there are inhabitants enough in the whole territory now to form a small village.

Sir, the gentleman might as well go one step further—his position will carry him there—he might as well admit both these Territories as States now. It may save strife, and the Constitution does not prohibit it. This organizing two Territories, when he concedes that only one is necessary, from the scarcity of population, is at war with the action of this Government as to Territories from its earliest history to the present day. The practice has been uniform to divide territories as the increase of population required it. The whole Northwest Territory, northwest of the Ohio river, was organized under one government at first, from which five States are now formed. This was afterwards divided into other Territories as the increased population demanded. Indiana Territory, which was very extensive, was first organized in the same manner. Out of Indiana Territory was taken Michigan Territory; and from Michigan was taken Wisconsin, and so on. So in 1848, a territorial government for Oregon was formed, and, as population increased in 1853, Washington Territory was formed from a part of Oregon.

Now, however, a new course of policy is to be adopted, and at a heavy and unnecessary annual expense, to be paid by this Government, about $100,000 per annum for each territorial government. We are to have two, when only one is required, simply because the gentleman fears another contest. He has not the courage to risk it. I speak of courage in a political sense—not otherwise, of course, as I know the gentleman to be a true man in every respect. The only merit in such legislation, I believe, is its novelty; and in this progressive age perhaps that is a merit—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania. I object to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, on the ground that these Territories are too large to be embraced under the one government.

The question being on the adoption of the amendment,

Tellers were called for and ordered; and Messrs. CHANDLER, and HARRIS of Alabama, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 83, noes 100.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MACE. I propose to add to the following words of the first section of the House bill:

"And when admitted as a State or States, the said Territory, or any portion of the same, shall be received into the Union, with or without slavery, as their constitution may prescribe at the time of their admission,"

the following words:

And the Territorial Legislature shall have power to admit or exclude slavery at any time by law.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I hope the gentleman will allow the amendment to be reported from the Clerk's desk, so that we may all know what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would request gentlemen who have amendments to offer to reduce them to writing, so that they may be read from the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. MACE. Mr. Chairman, in good faith I propose the following amendment to the bill under consideration: Insert after the word "admission," in the first section:

And the Legislature of said Territory is hereby clothed with full power, at any session thereof, to establish or prohibit slavery in said Territory.

This amendment is offered for the purpose of testing the sincerity of western members who support the bill, and especially my colleagues from Indiana. With them, and in my State, the burden of the song on the part of the friends of the bill is, that it establishes the great doctrine of popular sovereignty, whereby the people of the Territory are left "perfectly free," through the Territorial Legislature, to admit or reject slavery.

I know, and every man knows who has read the bill carefully, that it does not, and was not intended to confer the power upon the Territorial Legislature to pass laws rejecting slavery or admitting it. But if in this I am mistaken, and the friends of the bill are, in fact, in favor of popular sovereignty, and more particularly the friends of General Cass, the father of the doctrine of popular sovereignty in the Territories, the committee will readily adopt my amendment, and relieve the bill of all doubt as to the power of the Territorial Legislature over the question of slavery. But, sir, full well do I know that the amendment will be rejected, not by the vote of the members acting with me against the bill, but by the friends of the bill, the pretended friends of popular sovereignty. I desire to place on the record the fact that the friends of the bill did most directly and distinctly repudiate the doctrine of "squatter," or popular sovereignty, while those who act with me support it to the fullest extent, so far as this bill is concerned.

It has been said that the following clause of the fourteenth section of the bill confers the power upon the Legislature to legislate on the subject of slavery; to wit:

"It being the true intent and meaning of this act not to legislate slavery into any Territory or State, nor to exclude it therefrom, but to leave the people thereof perfectly free to form and regulate their domestic institutions in their own way, subject only to the Constitution of the United States."

Now, what is the true construction placed upon this southern clause of the bill by its friends, and perhaps others? It is, that the people of the Territory, when they form a State constitution, and not before, are "left perfectly free to form and regulate their domestic institutions (which means slavery) in their own way, SUBJECT ONLY TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES." The vote on my amendment will demonstrate that I have placed the construction upon this clause intended by those who concocted the bill. "Squatter sovereignty" has no vitality in the bill; all she has is a short, high sounding, well adjusted little stump speech, put in to enable venal presses and cross-road stump orators to deceive the people. The bill, in fact, is nothing more nor less than an ordinary bill establishing Territories, such as has in the main been adopted since the organization of Territories, except the repeal of the Missouri compromise act, and the provision granting foreigners the right to vote as soon as they make the declaration to become citizens. Members from the free States argue that it does not admit slavery; members from the slave States argue the reverse, with the further declaration that slavery will not go into the Territory on account of the soil and climate. The truth is, that slavery will go into the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska both, if the bill passes in its present form.

For proof of this assertion, I assume the fact, and defy contradiction, that there is not a Christian country or Government on earth where slavery and involuntary servitude does not exist, unless specially prohibited by law. All the States of this Union, where slavery does not exist, would have slavery to a greater or less extent, if a prohibition against it did not exist.

Remove the slavery restriction in Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, and all of those States would have slavery, in a few years, equal to Maryland, Kentucky, or Tennessee.

Mr. ENGLISH. Will my colleague vote for the bill if his amendment is adopted.

Mr. MACE. I will. I am safe in making the pledge, because I know the amendment will be rejected by the friends of the bill, or, if adopted, it will defeat the bill. I will add, as I have revised my remarks since the vote was taken on the amendment, that the vote was, for the amendment 76, against it 94; but one friend of the bill voted for the amendment, and that was my colleague, [Mr. ENGLISH.]

Mr. WARREN obtained the floor, but yielded to

Mr. ENGLISH, who said: I desire to ask my colleague one question. If your amendment is adopted, will you vote for this bill?

Mr. MACE. I will.

Mr. ENGLISH. Then, for one, I shall vote for the amendment, because the same principle which I warmly approve, is substantially incorporated in the Senate bill, now pending as a substitute for this House bill, and which I have no doubt will be adopted. I understand the friends of Nebraska intend passing the substitute, and not the original House bill, which my colleague proposes to amend. We shall see when the vote is taken on adopting the substitute, whether he will stand by the principle of his amendment.

Mr. WARREN. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, because I do not want to abolish the ground for making these stump speeches.

The amendment was again reported; and the question being upon its adoption,

Mr. MACE demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. CARPENTER and BRECKINRIDGE were appointed.

The question was then taken on Mr. MACE's amendment; and it was decided in the negative, the tellers having reported—ayes 76, noes 94.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all after the words "beginning at," in the sixth, and the whole of the seventh line, and in lieu thereof, to insert the words "a point on the Missouri river where the parallel of 42° 30' crosses the same."

This runs the north boundary of Kansas some degrees further north. The only difficulty, sir, which we have in this bill, amounting to anything, is the one in reference to the subject of slavery. My amendment looks directly to that. It will be observed, by a reference to the map which gentlemen have before them in the Congressional Directory, that the Territory of Kansas lies to the extreme south of the unorganized region, and, as adjusted in the bill, immediately west of Missouri, and is not more than one fourth as large as the Territory of Nebraska. There is a vast difference in the magnitude of the two Territories. Kansas is to the south. I wish to run it up further north, and lap it also upon Iowa. If slavery would go into any portion of that unorganized territory, it would be most apt to go into the Territory of Kansas, and would decrease in relative strength as you leave the southern border and go north. The great body of the population which will push out there will, of necessity, and unquestionably, go into the southern part of the unorganized Territory. That is to say, it would strike into the Kansas, not the Nebraska region.

My object is to run further north that southern portion, so as to be sure of securing a clear preponderance of inhabitants from the northern and free States on their emigration to the country, to the end that, if the subject of slavery be referred, as you propose to refer it, to the people there, slavery may be excluded from that Territory.

I have no disguise whatever about the object I have in view in presenting this amendment. I wish gentlemen from the free States to understand it perfectly; and then let them take the responsibility, and vote against it with their eyes open. North of the line that I propose as the northern boundary of Kansas, there will be very few inhabitants, I presume, for many years to come. It lies north of the range of all the stream of travel towards the Pacific coast, as I understand it. It lies north, as I understand it, of nearly all the white population that is there at this time. It lies north of where the great body of the population will go for a long time to come.

Just in proportion as you multiply the population south of the line I propose, and north of the one now in the bill, will you multiply the probabilities of making Kansas free soil. And that is my object in offering the amendment. The great object that I have had in view from first to last is simply to hold back slavery from this region, and has not been to prevent the organization of the Territory. I desire that it shall be organized. I voted in the last Congress for its organization. There was great unanimity in that vote—no excitement or ill feeling, for this slavery fire-brand was not then thrown in. But I do object, and the whole North objects to this virgin soil—dedicated long ago to freedom—being now made the abode of slaves.

Southern gentlemen tell us that they have no idea that slavery will ever go into this Territory, and in that I differ from them altogether; that their object is simply to wipe off from the statute-book an offensive restriction that has remained there for years, and to establish a principle that they may avail themselves of hereafter. If that be really their sole object, my amendment does not affect that object in the least. And if they are sincere in what they say—and it is not for me to question their sincerity—they can have no objection to my position of the line.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Brooks] asks me if I will support the bill if my amendment be adopted. I answer, no, never, so long as it aims at the repeal of the Missouri compromise. Let that stand in full force as it has for a full generation, and let the foreigner who honestly seeks a home there, and so declares his intention, have the privileges of an American citizen, as I think he should, in such a case, everywhere amongst us; and leaping over all else in the bill that may be objectionable, I will then go for it with both hands up.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Being unable to agree with my friend from Indiana in his facts, his arguments, or his conclusions, I am constrained to oppose his amendment, and I ask for a vote upon it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. RITCHIE, of Pennsylvania, and HILLYER, were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 66, noes 85.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FLAGLER. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the sixth section:

And this act shall not take effect until the rights of the Indians in said Territories shall be extinguished in the manner provided by this section.

This very section prescribes a way of extinguishing the title of these Indian tribes. It presupposes that it can be accomplished, and therefore it is that in this act we are opening a door for the admission of white men. Now, considering the circumstances under which so many of these tribes have been located there, and the solemn guarantee which has been extended to them that they should there dwell unmolested, so long as they existed as tribes, it does seem to me that this act should take effect only upon the removal of this great obstacle in the way of our organizing the territorial governments prescribed by this bill. I offer this as an additional reason for delay, and I would join my voice with my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALLEY] in doing it.

Another reason why this committee should not persist in their efforts to press through this objectionable bill is, that it not only violates the principles of the Missouri compromise, but it contemplates an invasion of the rights of the Indians of these Territories, and extends an invitation to white men to invade their hunting grounds pledged to them forever. I submit this amendment to the friends of the bill. The rights of these red men should be held sacred. Are they willing to give up their homes in this wilderness? The bill seems to anticipate it, and prescribes a method of removing this difficulty; but who can tell when it will be accomplished? Until it is done, the operations of this bill should be suspended.

And, meanwhile, the action of the people can be had, and their will can be expressed in reference to the merits of all the questions involved in this measure. We shall then not merely guess at, but know what they desire to have done. I offer this amendment in good faith, as one very important, in my judgment, to be incorporated into the bill, and one which, if adopted, will do something towards removing the objections which gentlemen have to its passage. We ought to give time for the sense of the people to be expressed in the matter.

Mr. HAMILTON. I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, and shall vote against it.

The question being on the adoption of the amendment,

Mr. CAMPBELL demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BROOKS and WHEELER were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 63, noes 84.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. FULLER. I propose an amendment to the first section of the bill, to come in after the word "Nebraska," in the eighteenth line:

And the Territorial Legislature shall have the power to establish or exclude slavery as to them shall seem proper.

As a national Democrat, and the only one that came into the Thirty-First Congress from New England, as an anti-Wilmot proviso man, I am anxious to vote for this bill. If the amendment which I have offered shall be adopted, I shall vote for it; if it does not prevail, I shall vote against it, as at present advised. And, sir, in the spirit of kindness, I ask some of those gentlemen who stood by me in the Thirty-First Congress, and there are several such from the southern section of the Union upon this floor now, to yield a little for the sake of harmony. I helped make the compromises of that period. I, sir, voted for every one of the five so-called compromise measures of 1850, and when three men only from the slave States did vote for all of them, and only twenty-seven men in that Congress voted for all of them. This bill has been advocated at the North solely upon the ground that it gives to the people of the Territory the right to legislate for themselves upon the subject of slavery while in a territorial state. I declare myself here to be the friend and advocate of that doctrine, and it is because this bill does not establish this great American principle, and vindicate this doctrine, that I am opposed to it in its present shape.

The distinguished gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. PHILLIPS,] in his speech upon this subject, has stated the true reading of this bill, and the reason why it was made so. I quote his remarks:

"Now, it is admitted that a difference of opinion exists between the different sections of the Confederacy, as to the period when the right of the people of the Territory to act upon the subject of the admission or exclusion of slavery arises. On the one hand, it is said that this right exists as soon as the territorial organization takes place; on the other it is maintained that it is in abeyance until the people proceed to establish a State government."

Again he says:

"The bill refers the question of legislation on the subject of slavery to the people of the Territories. One side maintains that such legislation would not be authorized until the formation of a State government; the other, that it would be as soon as the territorial government is organized. But whether the one or the other be correct, depends upon the Constitution. The bill expressly (though unnecessarily) declares that their legislation shall be 'subject to the Constitution of the United States.' And the difference thus existing as to the appropriate period of legislation on this subject is left to be decided by the judicial tribunals of the country, according to constitutional right, and the support of the bill involves no compromise or concession by either side."

The right of popular sovereignty, or the right of the people to legislate on this vexed question for themselves, is the thing, the idea in dispute, and is left by the bill still in doubt, and is referred not to the people, but to the courts for settlement. In other words, "it is the play of Hamlet," with the character of Hamlet omitted by special request! The men in my State who are in favor of this bill, support it upon the ground, and with the entire belief, that when the Territory is organized, then is the point of time that the people have a right to determine that question for themselves. Now, sir, I wash my hands of any attempt to deceive them upon this vital point in the bill.

With this amendment voted down, the equivocal language of the bill, and the quoted construction placed upon it by an able jurist, who hereafter will contend that this bill gives the right, which is claimed for it? My constituents shall not be deceived by me. I avow here in my place, that I am an advocate of the doctrine of popular sovereignty upon the ground of expediency and the fitness of things; and when the bill shall be made to conform to it, it shall have my vote; but unless it does I vote against it. If we of the North give up the restriction of 1821, give up the Utah and New Mexican bills, canonized as is their language, by the plighted faith of the country, expressed in their two great presidential conventions, what do we get in exchange? Why, the chance of a law suit, if the question shall be raised.

Mr. RIDDLE. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Maine, but I will not take up the time of the committee by giving my reasons why I am opposed to it.

Mr. FARLEY. I call for the reading of the amendment.

The amendment was again reported; and the question being upon its adoption,

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. DRUM and GREY appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 91.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "with or without slavery, as their constitution may prescribe at the time of their admission," and insert the words "without slavery."

After the votes which have been already taken in the committee upon this portion of the first section of the bill, I regret that I cannot anticipate that gentlemen will receive with favor the amendment I have offered. But I have presented it, in order that the committee may express themselves fully upon this subject, that the legislation here on that part of this section may be sound and complete.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GIDDINGS] proposed an amendment striking out all that portion of the section referring to the subject of slavery. That was voted down by the committee.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. FULLER] came forward with the declaration in advance that he would vote for the bill if his amendment were adopted, and moved to give the Territorial Legislature the right to say that slavery shall not exist within the Territory. The committee refused its assent to that amendment. Now, sir, the majority of the committee may go one step further, as they will do, if they vote against my amendment, and say that this Territory shall not come into the Union as a State without slavery!

There are gentlemen on this floor from Missouri who have been voting against those who oppose this bill. How did they come here, unless by virtue of that compromise which makes their land the land of freedom? Now, sir, let them come up to the mark, if they see fit so to do, and say, so far as it depends on them and their votes, that this Territory, secured to freedom when Missouri was admitted as a slave State, shall not itself be received into these United States without slavery!

Then the committee will have all the questions passed upon. They will have decided that Congress ought to say something upon the subject of slavery. They will have decided that the Territorial Legislature shall not settle and determine this matter for themselves. And if they now vote down this amendment, they will decide that the Territory shall not, without slavery, be received as a State.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee are not prepared to say that. There are votes enough on this floor, more votes than will pass this bill, that would not have been here, as I believe, except for the fact that this territory was consecrated to freedom. What a return is this for the compromise, for the concession made in 1820!

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. In the course of this debate, great emphasis has been laid by the members from Massachusetts upon the obligatory force of the Missouri compromise. The gentleman, in proposing his amendment now, has laid great stress on that point. Now, sir, it so happens that in 1836, upon the admission of Arkansas, which was a part of the territory embraced within that compromise, Massachusetts spoke on this floor with very great emphasis. I desire to call the attention of the committee to what one of her most distinguished men said upon that occasion, and with the approbation, as the vote shows, of her entire delegation. This is an extract from the speech of Mr. Cushing. [Roars of laughter.] He spoke for his party then, and for Massachusetts too, as the vote shows. So the laugh is out of place:

"It is demanded of us. Do you seek to impose restrictions on Arkansas, in violation of the compromise under which Missouri was admitted into the Union? I might content myself with replying that the State of Massachusetts was not a party to that compromise. She never, directly or indirectly, assented to it. Most of her Representatives in Congress voted against it. Those of her Representatives who regarded that compromise in the light of an act of conciliation, important to the general interests of the Union, and voted for it, were disavowed and denounced at home, and were stigmatized even here by a southern member as over-compliant towards the exactingness of the South."

Mr. PECKHAM. I would ask the gentleman from Virginia if he reads from the speech of that gentleman as the organ of the present Administration? [Laughter.]

Mr. BAYLY. My friend from New York is too sagacious not to see the point that I am making; it is to show that at that time a distinguished Representative from Massachusetts, sustained by his delegation, thus spoke of the Missouri compromise. I take great pleasure in saying, further, that I have reason to believe that the gentleman from whom I have quoted is consistent, and that he thinks to-day, as he thought in 1836, that there is no obligatory force in the Missouri compromise. [Laughter.]

Mr. ELIOT. I call for tellers on my amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MAYALL and PHILLIPS appointed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move to strike out the nineteenth, twentieth, and twenty-first lines, and insert the following:

Provided, That there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude therein, except for punishment of crime.

A few of those who advocated that time-revered provision of the ordinance of 1787, which excludes slavery from the Territories of the United States, have survived to make their voices heard in this Hall. I am one of them—one of the spared monuments!

I came here to-day to assert the right of Congress to exclude slavery and involuntary servitude, except to punish crime, from this Territory, and all the Territories belonging to the American people. It is a power that has been recognized and exercised by every Administration of this Government from its organization until the present time. It is a power that has been acknowledged by statesmen whose memories we hold near and dear. Mr. Webster asserted it. Mr. Clay asserted it. Other great men of all parties asserted it.

I need not say that the amendment I have offered is in the language of that God-like provision penned by the immortal Jefferson. Gentlemen may sneer as much as they please, and as they have done to-day, about the proviso having been discarded; but let me tell them that there is a spirit abroad in this free land which will soon rear aloft a standard upon which this very principle will be inscribed, if you dare, with ruthless hand, to-day, destroy the compromise of 1820. I came here, sir, to practice no deceit, no fraud upon the Representatives of the people. I think I may be permitted to say, that, so far as I have participated in this struggle, I have deceived no man from the North, the South, the East, or the West. My opposition has been as frank and open as it has been unceasing and determined.

I desire to say now, to each and to every member, if this bill passes, that for one I shall return to my constituents, not as I have done heretofore, with a view of pursuing a conciliatory course in relation to the institution and evils of slavery, but I will, so far as I have the power, wage an unrelenting and ceaseless war against it to the furthest limits of the Constitution.

A VOICE. You go to the bitter end.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Ay, to the bitter end. I will violate no provision of the Constitution which I have sworn to support; but I will, in my humble sphere, raise the standard of no admission into the Union of any State from this territory, secured to freedom, as it was, by the patriotic compromise of 1820, or from any other now held or hereafter acquired, which shall not contain in its constitution an unequivocal provision excluding human slavery; the repeal of—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PRESTON. I am opposed to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio. I announce that fact, and desire a vote upon it.

Mr. CAMPBELL demanded tellers.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, (at two o'clock and fifty minutes, p. m.) Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee do now rise. We have been already here six hours.

Mr. WHEELER demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WASHBURN of Maine, and TAYLOR of New York, appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 67, noes 91.

So the committee refused to rise.

Tellers were then ordered upon the amendment of Mr. CAMPBELL; and Messrs. BOCK and BENNETT appointed.

The question was then put; and the tellers reported—ayes fifty; not a majority of a quorum.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We have had a pretty long session. I therefore move that the committee do now rise.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman of the committee [Mr. OLDS] reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and more particularly House bill No. 236, to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly, at three o'clock, p. m., adjourned until Monday next.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 22, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

Oh Thou, the high and mighty Ruler of the universe, devoutly we implore thy blessing to rest upon this House, again about to enter upon one of the most arduous and memorable struggles the country has ever known. Help every member to keep cool, calm, and self-possessed, remembering that the angry man gives his adversary the advantage, and the enraged party compromises its truest interests. Assist every man to cooperate with the Speaker and Chairman in preserving order, recollecting that the eyes of the country are fixed upon this House, and that the deep interests of the country are involved in the deliberations of this Congress. May every man dare to do his duty, and abide the issues of his conscious convictions, we pray, through Jesus Christ.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

IMPROVEMENT OF WESTERN RIVERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the War Department, transmitting a report of the Colonel of the Corps of Topographical Engineers, in compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 4th ultimo, "that the Secretary of War be requested to communicate to this House the inspection report of Colonel S. H. Long, of December 20, 1853, and such other communication as may have been made by him in reference to the improvements of western rivers, since the passage of the act of August 30, 1852; and also a copy of Lieutenant Warren's report of the operations on the Des Moines and Rock River rapids in the Mississippi river, together with any maps, charts, or diagrams of survey made by the last named officer during the past year."

The report included all the papers called for, with the exception of Lieutenant Warren's report, which was not yet prepared.

On motion by Mr. HENN, it was Ordered, That the communication be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the call of States for resolutions, beginning with the Territory of New Mexico.

POSTAL SERVICES FOR CALIFORNIA, ETC.

Mr. McDUGALL. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads a bill, for the purpose of having it printed. It is important that the bill should be acted upon before the next mail leaves for California.

Mr. LETCHER. Let the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read by its title.

The bill was accordingly reported, as follows:

A bill making provisions for the postal services for the State of California, and in the Territories of Oregon and Washington.

Mr. HAMILTON. I would inquire of the gentleman from California what disposition he proposes to make of the bill?

Mr. McDUGALL. I desire to have it printed, and action upon it postponed.

Mr. HAMILTON. That will not do.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the bill will be received.

Mr. HAMILTON. Will the Chair allow an inquiry? If this bill is introduced, and consideration of it postponed, it will come up in the morning hour of business, and it will preclude the report of bills from other committees. I have no objection to the printing of the bill, if the bill shall remain in the possession of the committee which reported it. If it shall not remain there, I object to its being received.

Mr. McDUGALL. I am perfectly satisfied to have the bill printed, and that it shall remain in my possession.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair may be allowed a suggestion, he will say that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, from which this report is made, will be the first committee to be called when committees are again called for reports.

No objection being made, the bill was received, read a second time, and ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

RESOLUTIONS OF CONNECTICUT.

Mr. PRATT. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to submit joint resolutions from the Legislature of the State of Connecticut, in reference to the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, in order that they may be laid upon the table, and printed.

No objection being made, it was so ordered.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—NEBRASKA.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to offer a resolution, and ask the unanimous consent of the House that it may be read for information.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to furnish this House with copies of all documents and correspondence in his possession or under his control in relation to the alleged aggressions of the authorities of the Kingdom of Greece—or of the authorities of Athens, in that kingdom—upon the rights of Dr. King, formerly the American Consul; and of all communications from Athens or elsewhere in relation thereto.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object.

Mr. WHEELER. Then I move to suspend the rule, to enable me to introduce it.

The SPEAKER. That proposition brings up a question of order presented by the Chair the other day, but not acted upon by the House. It is in this form: The gentleman from Illinois moved to suspend the rules for the purpose of going into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The rule declares that that motion shall be in order at any time, in the following language:

"The House may, at any time, by a vote of the majority of the members present, suspend the rules and orders for the purpose of going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and also for providing for the discharge of the Committee of the Whole House, and the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, from the further consideration of any bill referred to it, after acting without debate on all amendments pending, and that may be offered."

Formerly the rules of the House permitted the rules to be suspended upon any day in the week. The inconvenience of the permission of that motion so often, however, induced the House to change that rule in reference to a suspension of the rules, restricting the right to make that motion to Mondays.

Upon an original proposition upon the laws of Congress, the Chair would decide, as he indicated the other day, in favor of the precedence of the motion to suspend the rules generally. Upon looking to the subject, however, the Chair finds that such has not been the practice in this body, and he is not disposed to change that practice. He is very well satisfied of the inconvenience which would result in carrying out what he considers the proper construction of the rule, and he is therefore disposed to adhere, and does adhere, to the practice of the House heretofore, and will hereafter put the motion to suspend the rules to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, or that to suspend, in the order in which they are made—first made, first put. The Chair, therefore, entertains the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON.]

Mr. DEAN. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and decided in the affirmative—yeas 105, nays 70; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thos H. Bayly, Barksdale, Bock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Caruthers, Caskie, Chastain, Christian, Churchill, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Cox, Craig, Jno. G. Davis, Dayson, Drum, Dunbar, Dunham, Edmundson, English, Faulkner, Florence, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hill, Hillier, Houston, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milson, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Puryear, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rogers, Ruffin, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollieffer—105.

NAYS—Messrs. Ball, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Bugz, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Culom, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Edgerton, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Flagg, Giddings, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Hastings, Haven, Hiestor, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lindsley, Lyon, Matteson, Mayall, Meacham, Middleswarth, Morgan, Murray, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Peck, Pennington, John Perkins, Pringle, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Skelton, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elijah B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, and Wheeler—70.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDDY, pending the call of the roll, when his name was called, stated that his colleague, Judge CHAMBERLAIN, had been called home, and had requested him to pair off upon all minor motions in reference to the Nebraska bill. The understanding, however, did not extend to the final vote upon the passage of the bill.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. Olds in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on Saturday last, it had under consideration the bill of the House (No. 236) to organize the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, to which a motion was pending, offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. EGGERTON], to substitute for it the bill which passed this House during the Thirty-Second Congress.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I rise to a privileged motion. I move to strike out the enacting words of this bill. I will state to the committee, and I want the attention of the committee to my object in making that motion, it is to cut off all amendments, and to have this bill reported to the House, that we may have a vote upon it.

The 119th rule of this House is in these words:

"A motion to strike out the enacting words of a bill shall have precedence of a motion to amend; and, if carried, it shall be considered equivalent to its rejection."

Let this committee agree to my motion, and let this action be reported to the House. When we get into the House, the question will be upon agreeing to that report. If the friends of the bill vote that motion down, we shall then have the bill before the House to vote upon or to amend, as a majority may determine. When the majority has disagreed to the report, as I suppose they will, it will then be in order for the chairman of the Committee on Territories to offer his substitute, which all of us want to vote upon, as an amendment; the friends of the bill standing together, will then be brought to vote directly upon the measure, and in this way we shall get rid of these continued motions to amend.

Mr. Chairman, I make this motion because it is time that this measure was brought to a final vote. It has been under consideration before Congress for the last five months. It has been discussed in the Senate; it has been discussed in this House; it has been discussed before the country, and every man, I doubt not, has made up his mind upon the subject. Why should we longer delay? We have already had motions to amend upon the most important features of the bill. One motion has been made to strike out that provision for the admission of these Territories as States, with or without slavery, as their constitutions may direct. We have had votes upon the amendments offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. MACE], and the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FULLER], touching the powers or rights of the people in the Territories to restrict or regulate slavery. These amendments have been voted on; the sense of the committee has been taken on them; the friends of the bill, as it stands in the substitute, know that it now, as they intend to pass it, grants to the people of the Territories all the powers over this subject of slavery that we can grant them under the Constitution of the United States. The phraseology now is as full and clear as it can be made on this point. No amendment can make it clearer. In the bill they have all the power that they can have under the Constitution. They cannot ask more, and if they did, we could not grant it.

It is time, therefore, to have a decision of the question. Every gentleman on this floor has had an opportunity of being heard upon it by a speech to be published in the Congressional Globe, if he wishes. Let us, then, vote on the measure, and go to other important business of the country.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman's motion is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the motion of the gentleman from Georgia is in order, under the 119th rule, which has just been read.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Hear me on the question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is not debatable.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I do not expect that it is debatable. I would only inquire whether it is in order, while we are considering the first section of the bill, and after amendments have been submitted and acted on, to move to strike out the enacting clause?

The CHAIRMAN. The 119th rule was expressly adopted for that purpose.

Mr. STEPHENS. The motion cuts off all amendments under the rule. When interrupted by the question of order, I was just remarking that we had motions to amend—

Mr. DRUM. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman take an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. DRUM. No, sir; I wish to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question. Is it contemplated by the majority, after the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] has been put upon the bill, to call for the previous question?

Mr. STEPHENS. It is. The object is to bring the House directly to a vote on the substitute. That is the object of my motion; and it is the object of the friends of the bill that we should have a vote upon the subject immediately, and then go to the other business of the country.

Mr. CHANDLER. I presume, Mr. Chairman, that this is one of those motions for amendment—and going, as it does, to the decision of the whole matter—on which we can be allowed five minutes for its defense and five minutes for its opposition?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has five minutes in which he may oppose the motion.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not rise to argue the point, but only to express my regret at this wicked—

Mr. DEAN. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his question of order.

Mr. DEAN. My point of order is this: We have a motion pending made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] to strike out the enacting clause and to insert a substitute; and I insist that, while that is pending, no other motion to strike out is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ORR. The motion of the gentleman from Illinois is to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert a substitute.

Mr. CHANDLER. I rise solemnly to protest against this extra gag which is applied to the passage of this bill, and to say that while it is possible a majority may thus ride rough-shod—

Mr. PRESTON. I dislike to rise to a question of order; but it strikes me the motion is not debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entitled to the floor for five minutes, in opposition to the motion.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am satisfied that any member of this majority dislikes to rise to a question of order. It must be painful to them to start a question of that kind here, whatever ruling may be made on their motion of order.

The minority has stood before this House on the Constitution of the country, and on the rules which this House solemnly adopted for its regulation; and while we have stood up manfully and constitutionally against the efforts of those who have proved a growing majority, while they have read day after day in the papers that are the organs of this Administration, not merely invitations to come over against us, but indications why they were losing their influence in the Executive Department; and while we have thus seen ourselves threatened, if not wasted by these insidious attacks, we of the minority have not resorted to any mode for defeating this bill that is not recognized in the Constitution of the country, and not warranted by the rules of this House.

If I could once see that effort made; if I could, once see that party to which I am attached, quietly and moderately attached—for this is the first time I have occupied the floor since this measure has been under active consideration in the House—if I could see the rampart of order once asserted—

Mr. ORR. Does my friend from Pennsylvania say that this motion is "not in strict conformity with the rules?"

[Loud cries of "Order!" and great excitement.]

Mr. ORR. If the gentleman yields me the floor, I have a right to ask the question:

[Renewed and vociferous cries of "Order!"]

Mr. CHANDLER. I am satisfied that the motion now made is one which was not contemplated by those who drew up those rules; nor was it, I hope, contemplated by those who drove us from the regular debate in the committee, and told us to take shelter under the five-minute debate. They drove us to that, that they might drive us from it by this decision. And was not this House last week—I appeal to the whole House—driven from its ordinary action by the decision of the House overruling the righteous decision of the Chair? I appeal to the House whether that was not the case? Every one knows that it was.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I rise to a question of order. It is this: that it is not in order to move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill while the House is in the Committee of the Whole, but that the motion can only be made in the House, and I ask that the note to the 119th rule may be read, from which it will appear that the practice of this House has been directly contrary to that now proposed by the motion of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS.]:

[Cries of "Order!"]

The Clerk read the note to the rule, which is as follows:

"The Manual states, that if a committee be opposed to the whole paper or bill, and think it cannot be made good by amendment, the committee cannot reject it, but must report it back to the House without amendment, and there make their opposition. In 1814, a Committee of the Whole struck out the first and only section of a bill, and so reported to the House. Mr. Speaker Cheves refused to receive the report, on the ground that it was tantamount to a rejection of the bill, which the committee had no power to do. After this, that the merit of questions might be tested in Committee of the Whole, rule 119 was adopted. The Manual provides that a paragraph or section may be first amended by its friends, so as to make it as perfect as they can; the question is put for striking it out. By this rule, (i. e., rule 119,) it is expressly established that a motion to strike out, for the purpose of destroying, shall be paramount to a motion to amend. Rule 139 provides that the Manual shall govern in cases in which it is applicable, where it is not inconsistent with established rules. In the case, then, of giving precedence to motions to insert or to amend, over motions to strike out or reject, it is clearly inconsistent with an established rule; and, consequently, the practice of the House for the last few years has been in violation of the 119th rule."

Mr. WASHBURN. I supposed that the Chair would rule my point out of order, but I desired to have that note read to show what the uniform practice of the House for many years has been; and if the Chair and committee will now reverse that practice—

[Loud cries of "Order!" and "Question!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides this question in accordance with the note which has been read. That note expressly states, that when Mr. Speaker Cheves had decided that the committee could not strike out the first and only section of a bill, this 119th rule was adopted to amend that defect in the parliamentary law; and the same note states expressly that the practice of the House has been in violation of the 119th rule.

[Loud cries of "Question!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that there is an appeal taken from his decision?

Mr. WASHBURN. I did not take an appeal. I only wanted to show what the practice of the House has been, and the construction uniformly given to the rule referred to, and to denounce before the House and the country this most flagrant attempt ever made in this country to trample on the constitutional rights of a minority of the Representatives, and majority of the people.

Mr. WHEELER. I call for tellers on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. ROGERS. I wish to state to the country, and to the members of the House with whom I have been acting up to this time, that I desire to introduce an amendment to this bill. I feel it due to myself to state—

The CHAIRMAN. Is it the pleasure of the committee that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROGERS] should be heard?

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. ROGERS. I desire to say only one word. I feel it due to myself, entertaining the views I do, and knowing the wishes of my constituents, to say that I desire to introduce the amendment offered by Mr. Clayton in the Senate, and incorporated in the Senate bill.

Mr. PRESTON. I object.

Mr. ROGERS. I have stated all I can say now under the rules, and I will trouble the House no further.

Mr. SAGE. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not amendable.

Mr. DICKINSON. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill now before the House.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order while a motion to strike out the enacting clause is pending.

Mr. DICKINSON. I ask to have the bill read.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order to have it read while a motion to strike out the enacting clause is pending, made by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS.] Upon the motion tellers have been demanded.

Mr. DEAN. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. SAGE. Upon that motion I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CHURCHWELL and WHEELER were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 104.

So the committee refused to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the motion made by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS,] to strike out the enacting clause of the bill. On that motion tellers have been demanded.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CLINGMAN and SAPP were appointed.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the 127th rule read from the Clerk's table.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine take an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. FULLER made no reply.

The CHAIRMAN. At all events, the Chair holds that it is too late to take an appeal, the committee being in the act of dividing.

Mr. STRATTON. Is it not in order, Mr. Chairman, to have the rule read?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order at this time, the committee being in the act of dividing.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 103, two only in the negative, if the reporter heard correctly.

Mr. DEAN, (amid great confusion.) I hope that no member in the minority will vote upon the question. Oppose tyranny by revolution.

[Much excitement, and cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. FLORENCE. Mr. Chairman, the Sergeant-at-Arms should be sent to compel the gentleman to come to order.

The CHAIRMAN. Those in the negative of the question refused to vote, the motion is carried.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I require that the other side be counted.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen refuse to vote on the other side.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I insist upon a count being taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The count on the negative side has been called, and gentlemen refused to vote. The Chair will, however, again entertain the call for the negative vote:

As many as are opposed to the motion of the gentleman from Georgia will therefore pass between the tellers.

Mr. CAMPBELL, (passing through the tellers.) There will be one vote given against the motion, at all events.

Several other members also voted in the negative.

The tellers thereafter reported—ayes 103, noes 22.

So the motion to strike out the enacting clause of the bill was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the committee rise, and report to the House the action of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. That is understood.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Upon that motion I demand tellers.

Mr. HIBBARD. I submit to the Chair that upon the vote just taken the committee rises, as a matter of course, and reports the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair supposes that the bill must be reported under a previous order of the House when the committee rises. A motion that the committee rise should be entertained.

Tellers were then ordered; and Messrs. NORTON and HIBBARD were appointed.

The question was then put; and the tellers reported—ayes 101, noes 2, (a sufficient number.)

[Cries of "No quorum!" "No quorum!"]

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum is necessary to enable the committee to rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman of the committee [Mr. OLDS] reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 236, to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, and had directed him to report the same back to the House, with a recommendation to strike out the enacting portion of the bill.

Mr. DEAN. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will suspend a moment, until the Chair announces the report of the committee.

The Chair then formally stated the report of the committee.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to lay the bill and report upon the table.

Mr. DEAN. I rise to a question of order. It is this: that less than a quorum of the committee cannot rise and report a bill to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no official knowledge of the number of votes given in committee.

Mr. DEAN. Then I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HAMILTON. The gentleman has not the floor. The gentleman has not the floor for that purpose. He rose to a point of order.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the rights of gentlemen, and will endeavor to preserve them. The gentleman from New York must be aware that he has not the floor for any such purpose. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor, and it can only be taken from him by rising to a question of order.

Mr. HUGHES. I rise to a question of order.

I submit that the report of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shows that the action of that committee is tantamount to a rejection of the bill, which the committee have no power to do.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from New York indicate the rule under which it denies the committee that power?

Mr. HUGHES. It is under the 119th rule.

And under that rule the Speaker of the House once decided in the same manner. The Speaker refused to entertain the report of a committee, upon the ground that it was tantamount to a rejection of the bill, which the committee had no power to do. The note to the 119th rule gives the same construction to the rule, and upon that I raise my question of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would remark, that the same note declares that the very object of the rule was to obviate and supersede the offering of further amendments. The attention of the Chair was called to the rule this morning, indeed, on Saturday; and after a pretty full examination of the subject, he is unable to see any ground upon which it is competent for him to reject the report of the committee.

Mr. HUGHES. Well, sir, I merely desired to call the attention of the Chair to the construction of the rule which has been heretofore given.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that, under the 119th rule, to which the gentleman has referred, the report of the committee must be received.

Mr. MEACHAM. I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Illinois obtained the floor, and I insist that the Chair has no right to give it to other gentlemen, until he has ascertained the purpose for which the gentleman from Illinois obtained the floor.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Illinois states that he rises to a question of privilege, the Chair will not recognize any other gentleman until he ascertains what that question is. He, however, has made no such statement. The gentleman from Vermont states that he does rise to a question of privilege, and the Chair decides that the latter gentleman is, therefore, entitled to the floor.

Mr. MEACHAM. The 34th rule provides that, "Where debate is closed by order of the House, any member shall be allowed in committee five minutes to explain any amendment he may offer, after which any member who shall first obtain the floor shall be allowed to speak five minutes in opposition to it," &c. Now, I submit that the rights of members under this rule have not been respected in committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not perceive any question of privilege in the point presented by the gentleman from Vermont. That is a question which the committee must decide for itself. It is not competent for the Chair to know officially what has taken place in committee, except through the report of its Chairman.

Mr. MEACHAM. My point is simply this: that having been deprived of our rights under the rules in committee, it is our duty to go back again into committee to regain them.

The SPEAKER. That is a question for the majority of the House to determine.

Mr. PURYEAR. I desire simply to state that I endeavored to obtain the floor in committee for the purpose of expressing my opinions in reference to the motion made by the gentleman from Georgia to strike out the enacting clause of this bill, but failed to obtain it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand the previous question upon concurring in the report of the committee.

Mr. ELLISON. I rise to a question of order.

The 26th rule provides that when the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union finds itself without a quorum, the Chairman shall cause the roll to be called. Now, sir, I submit that the committee did find itself without a quorum, that it was not competent for it to report the bill to the House without a quorum, and that the roll was not called as the rule directs.

The SPEAKER. That is a question which the gentleman should have raised in committee, and which it is not competent for the House to have any knowledge of, unless so reported by the Chairman of the committee.

Mr. OLDS. If the House will allow me, I will make an explanation.

Mr. WHEELER. I object.

Mr. OLDS. I merely want to say, that in making that decision, I followed the example of my illustrious predecessor, [Mr. CHANDLER.]

Mr. DEAN. I move that the House do now adjourn; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. PRINGLE. I move that when this House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

Mr. PENNINGTON. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MEACHAM. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn over.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAGE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn over takes precedence of the motion to adjourn.

The question was then taken on the motion to adjourn over; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 68, nays 136; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Everhart, Farley, Ferguson, Flagler, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Howe, Hughes, Daniel T. Jones, Knox, Lindsley, McCulloch, Mace, Matteson, Mayall, Meacham, Middlesworth, Morgan, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Wallley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Yates—68.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bell, Bocoek, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cumming, Curtis, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Faulkner, Florence, Fuller, Gambie, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hill, Hillyer, Houston, Hunt, Ingersoll, Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milson, Morrison, Noble, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Puryear, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rowe, Ruffin, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hestor L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trout, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Wells, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—136.

So the House refused to adjourn over until Wednesday next.

Pending the above call, the following statements were made by unanimous consent:

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that some time since I paired off with Mr. McMULLIN, of Virginia, who is yet absent, and I am told is sick at home. A colleague of his [Mr. SNODGRASS] is paired off with a colleague of mine, [Mr. CORWIN,] who is also absent. Mr. SNODGRASS and myself, upon consultation with the friends of the absent gentlemen, have come to the conclusion to vote, and to leave those gentlemen to stand against each other on the question, and I make the statement in order that none of us shall be placed in a false position. I desire to vote on the pending question.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that before Mr. CORWIN, of Ohio, left this city for his residence, I agreed to pair off with him on all the votes arising on the Nebraska and Kansas bill now under consideration—the gentleman from Ohio being an opponent, while I am a friend of the bill. Mr. NICHOLS, of Ohio, under similar circumstances, paired off with Mr. McMULLIN, of Virginia. In the absence of Messrs. CORWIN and McMULLIN, their mutual friends have agreed to pair them off together; leaving Mr. NICHOLS, of Ohio, and myself, to vote on the said bill. As the above arrangement will not change the result of the vote, I will vote on the bill until Mr. McMULLIN returns.

[Here a message was received from the Senate by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, notifying the House that that body had passed certain bills, and requesting its concurrence therein.]

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that when the House adjourns to day, it be to meet on Thursday next.

Mr. MEACHAM. I move that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. ORR.) The Chair decides the motion to be out of order.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The motion to adjourn takes precedence.

Mr. DICKINSON. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn over until Thursday next.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on Mr. SIMMONS's motion; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 62, nays 136; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Hastings, Haven, Hiestor, Howe, Hughes, Daniel T. Jones, Knox, Lindsay, McCulloch, Mace, Matteson, Mayall, Meacham, Morgan, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Pennington, Pringle, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Yates—62.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bell, Biscoe, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchill, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cullom, Cumming, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Eastman, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hill, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milson, Morrison, Noble, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Pur year, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rowe, Ruffin, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hestor L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trout, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—136.

So the House refused to adjourn over until Thursday next.

Mr. DEAN. I move that there be a call of the House; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would beg the gentleman to withdraw his motion to adjourn for a moment.

Mr. SAGE. I withdraw it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the resolution which I send to the Clerk that it may be read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I object.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Let the resolution be read. [Cries of "I object!"]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then I move that the rules of the House be suspended, for the purpose I have indicated.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I object to the reading of it.

Mr. DICKINSON. I call for the reading of the resolution for information.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman has a right to move to suspend the rules, it is not only in order to demand the reading, but it is the right of any member to demand it.

Mr. DICKINSON. Well, I demand the reading of the resolution.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I maintain that the House has already suspended the rules and reported this bill, and the previous question is now pending upon it, and it is not in order to suspend the rules until that is disposed of.

Mr. HAVEN. It is true that a demand for the previous question is pending; but pending that demand, it is in order, under the rules, to move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The rules were suspended, and the House went into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union under that suspension, and reported a bill. In the opinion of the Chair, it is not in order, at this stage of the proceedings, to move to suspend the rules generally.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am compelled to take an appeal from the decision, though I do it reluctantly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that the rules of the House have been already suspended. To illustrate the point: Suppose that, instead of going into the Committee of the Whole under a suspension, the rules had been suspended generally, and a bill introduced, would the gentleman contend that, during the consideration of that bill, any member would have a right to move to suspend the rules to go to something else?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would suggest—

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman allow the Chair to finish the remark; it is but a passing one? The motion made this morning to suspend the rules, does not require a vote of two thirds, and it differs in that respect only from a motion to suspend the rules generally. But the rules were suspended, and the bill has been reported under that suspension; and the Chair therefore thinks that it is not in order to move to suspend the rules for the purpose of going to any other business. That is all the Chair has to say.

Mr. HAVEN. May I be allowed to make a suggestion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be pleased to hear the gentleman.

Mr. HAVEN. The rules were suspended this morning for the purpose of allowing a motion to be made to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. When the motion was made and carried, and the House went into committee, then the rules were not further suspended, but governed us in our action in the committee. Under the rules the committee rose and reported the bill to the House. When the rules were in full force, and not suspended, under the rules the demand was made for the previous question; and before the vote was taken seconding the demand, according to the rules, the motion was made by the gentleman from Ohio to suspend them, it being Monday, to allow him to introduce his resolution.

From the moment we went into committee until the motion to suspend by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL,] we have been acting under the rules of the House unsuspended. The suspension in the morning was only to go into committee. Since we came out, we have been under the rules. There are several territorial bills now on the table, that have lain there two weeks, that were reported by the Committee of the Whole, into which the House went by a suspension of the rules; but no one can pretend the rules have been suspended ever since those bills were reported.

The SPEAKER. If the decision of the Chair was correct this morning, when he decided that the motion to suspend the rules to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was of equal dignity with a motion to suspend the rules generally, and that when those two motions were made, the one first made must be first put, the Chair thinks there can be no doubt as to the correctness of his present position. The gentleman from Ohio appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I desire to ask whether the rules are suspended now?—whether the act of suspension did not end when we went into committee?

[Cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be glad to respond to the gentleman, if he can be permitted to do so; and he thinks the answer a very ready one.

The Chair states that we are acting under a suspension of the rules, and it is not now in order to suspend them again.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. We had this exact question presented last Monday. After the House had suspended the rules by two thirds, another motion was made to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. It was clearly out of order in that case.

Mr. HAVEN. Let me make this further suggestion—

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move to lay the appeal taken from the decision of the Chair upon the table.

Mr. HAVEN. I would make this suggestion, that it is in order to move a suspension of the rules upon every Monday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair replies to the gentleman from New York, that we can suspend the rules several times upon every Monday. Under a suspension of the rules, a proposition can be introduced, but it must be acted upon by the House before another suspension of the rules. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] moves to lay the appeal taken from the decision of the Chair upon the table.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Upon that appeal I demand the yeas and nays, and I also desire tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL and CHURCHWELL were appointed.

The House then divided; and the tellers reported forty-eight gentlemen voting in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MATTESON. I ask for tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Mr. CLINGMAN. There is another question pending, which is an appeal from the decision of the Chair in regard to a motion made to suspend the rules, and I ask whether it is in order to submit another motion of the same character until the motion now pending is decided?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be glad to hear suggestions from any gentleman upon either side of this proposition. It is within the recollection of the Chair, that very often when bills have been reported from either the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, or the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, that the House have returned into committee by a suspension of the rules. That has been the practice of this body, as every member who has served here will recollect. The Chair does not at this moment see upon what principle he can overrule that practice.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Mr. Speaker, can two motions to suspend the rules be entertained at once?

Mr. BANKS, (addressing the Chair at the same time.) After the House has suspended the rules for a specific purpose, and that purpose has been accomplished, is not a motion to suspend the rules generally in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the point is well taken by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN.] There is already pending a motion to suspend the rules, and such motions cannot be multiplied. The first motion that has been made must be first put to the House. There is a motion to suspend the rules generally, and an appeal has been taken from the decision of the Chair that that motion was not in order.

Mr. BANKS. I would inquire, Mr. Speaker, if the business for which the rules were suspended has not been exhausted?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is led to doubt the correctness of the decision which it has already made, that the motion to suspend the rules was not in order. The Chair is inclined now to doubt the correctness of that decision, for the reason that it has been the every-day practice of this body, after the committee, either of the Whole House on the state of the Union, or of the Whole House, have reported a bill or bills, to return immediately into committee, and then dispose of it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I ask this question of the Chair, for the purpose of ascertaining the fact. Has there not been a motion made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] to suspend the rules generally which the Chair very properly, in my opinion, declared to entertain, and is there not an appeal pending from that decision?

Mr. SPEAKER. That is so.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Well, if the House should reverse the decision of the Chair, the question will again come up, on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, and it must be put. Therefore, until this motion be disposed of, the second motion to suspend the rules cannot be entertained.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, for the present I will withdraw my motion until the question on the appeal is settled. In the mean time, however, (at one hour and fifty minutes, p. m.) I move that the House do now adjourn; and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Thursday. The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain that motion.

Mr. MEACHAM. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. WALSH. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will state his question of order.

Mr. WALSH. The question of order to which I rise is this: that the rules of the House are established for the purpose of facilitating the transacting of the public business, and not with a view of retarding it; and that all these motions are made for the express and avowed purpose of retarding the public business.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WALSH.] In reference to the motion of the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MEACHAM,] the Chair will remind that gentleman of the fact, what the Chair supposes he will recognize, that a motion for a call of the House cannot take precedence of a motion to adjourn.

Mr. MEACHAM. I was not aware, Mr. Speaker, that a motion to adjourn was pending.

The roll was then called; and the question was decided in the negative—yeas 70, nays 124; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Hastings, Haven, Hiestler, Howe, Hughes, Daniel T. Jones, Knox, Lindsley, McCulloch, Mace, Matteson, Mayall, Meacham, Middleswarth, Morgan, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, John L. Taylor, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Yates—70.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Boccock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cumming, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Upham, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, Ellison, English, Faulkner, Florence, Fuller, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Andrew J. Harlan, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hill, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milson, Morrison, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Rogers, Rowe, Ruffin, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hestor L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—124.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on laying the appeal from the decision of the Chair on the table.

Mr. MEACHAM. My motion for a call of the House is now in order; and I make it, and on it ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MATTESON. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, has there not been a demand for the call of the House already disposed of this morning?

The SPEAKER. No.

Tellers were ordered on the call for the yeas and nays; and Messrs. CAMPBELL and HARRIS were appointed.

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported—yeas forty-one, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 66, nays 123; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Bennett, Benson, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Flagler, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Hastings, Haven, Hiestler, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lindsley, Matteson, Mayall, Meacham, Middleswarth, Morgan, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, John L. Taylor, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Yates—66.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barry, Belcher, Bell, Boccock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cullom, Cumming, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Florence, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hill, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Lilly, Macdonald, McDougall, Maxwell, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milson, Morrison, Noble, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rowe, Ruffin, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Alexander H. Stephens, Hestor L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trout, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Wells, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—123.

So the House refused to order a call.

Mr. BENSON. I move that the House do now adjourn; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. WASHBURN. I call for tellers upon the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WALSH. I rise to a question of order. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Here it is in writing.

The point of order was as follows:

Mr. WALSH renews the point of order submitted by him before, as follows: That the rules of this House, and of all other legislative bodies, are enacted for the express purpose of facilitating and not retarding the public business; and that all motions made, as the present and sundry previous motions have evidently been made, with the sole and unconcealed object of embarrassing and preventing the legitimate action of this House, are clearly and unquestionably out of order, and for these reasons: That the whole theory of our government is based upon the right of the majority to govern fairly, and not despotically; that the majority, during the whole discussion of the question now at issue, have already acted with a liberality and forbearance unparalleled, and that any further extension of it, while subversive of the public interest, would tend to establish a precedent which would enable any captious minority to entirely control the legislation of the country.

Pending the reading:

Mr. CAMPBELL said: I object to any further reading of the argument upon the point of order.

The further reading was then dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the appeal taken from the decision of the Chair is legitimate.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I withdraw the argument, as I understand gentlemen cannot stand it. [Laughter.]

Tellers were then ordered upon the motion that the House do adjourn; and Messrs. CAMPBELL, and WRIGHT of Pennsylvania, were appointed.

The House was then divided, and the tellers reported—yeas thirty-nine, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FLAGLER. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER. The House but just now has voted upon that motion, and refused to adopt it. Since which a sufficient time has not elapsed, in the opinion of the Chair, to make the motion in order.

The question was then taken on the motion to adjourn; and decided in the negative—yeas 64, nays 118; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Bennett, Benson, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Hastings, Haven, Hiestler, Howe, Hughes, Daniel T. Jones, Knox, Lindsley, McCulloch, Matteson, Mayall, Meacham, Middleswarth, Morgan, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, John L. Taylor, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Yates—64.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Boccock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chastain, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cumming, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, John M. Elliott, English, Etheridge, Florence, Fuller, Gamble, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hill, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Lilly, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milson, Morrison, Noble, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rowe, Ruffin, Seymour, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Alexander H. Stephens, Hestor L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Wells, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—118.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question then recurred upon the motion made to lay the appeal from the decision of the Chair upon the table.

Mr. GOODRICH. Upon that question I ask to be excused from voting.

Mr. SAGE. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion to excuse the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I raise the question of order, that the previous question having been demanded, cuts off not only all speeches and amendments, but all motions of this sort.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman states correctly that the previous question has been demanded, but it has not been seconded.

Mr. CLINGMAN. That is very true; but the reason I have adduced that the demand cuts off all motions of this sort, as well as motions to amend and discussion, still holds good.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to suggest to the Chair that, after the previous question has been demanded, the rules prescribe that only certain motions can be made, and that this is not one of them.

Mr. HAVEN. Will the Chair allow me to say that, under the decision of the Chair, the rules are suspended, and that this rule is therefore not applicable? [Laughter.]

THE SPEAKER. The Chair will remark to gentlemen upon all sides, that discussion, as they are very well aware, is not in order. The Chair will give his decision upon the question, if the House wish him to do so. The Chair decides that the motion that the gentleman from Massachusetts be excused from voting is in order.

MR. CLINGMAN. From that decision I take an appeal.

MR. FLAGLER. I raise the question that one appeal from the decision of the Chair being already pending, the appeal of the gentleman from North Carolina is not in order.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair decides, for the same reason that he gave a similar decision the other day, that the appeal is in order.

MR. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

MR. CLINGMAN. My appeal is upon the same ground as that upon which I took an appeal the other day.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair decided the other day, upon a precisely similar question, that the gentleman from North Carolina had the right to take an appeal, upon the ground that it was an eminently practical question, rather than upon the express authority of any rule. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Goodrich] now asks to be excused from voting. The Chair decides that he has the right to make that motion. From this decision the gentleman from North Carolina takes an appeal, and the gentleman from Illinois moves to lay the appeal upon the table. The question is, therefore, upon the latter motion.

MR. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I demand the yeas and nays upon my motion.

MR. CAMPBELL. As this is rather an important question, I move that there be a call of the House.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair decides that motion not to be in order at this time.

MR. CAMPBELL. Upon what ground? Business has transpired since the motion was made and decided.

THE SPEAKER. What business?

MR. CAMPBELL. A motion to adjourn, and questions of order.

THE SPEAKER. A motion to adjourn has been made; but the Chair decides that nothing has occurred which could furnish a reason for the House to change its decision.

MR. CAMPBELL. With the permission of the Chair, I will refer him to decisions of the Chair on Thursday and Friday week, and I will also refer him to the decision of Mr. Speaker Cobb on the 18th of February, 1850; all of which are, that a motion to adjourn over may be repeated after any business has transpired.

THE SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio will remember that the decision now made by the Chair was sustained by the House last week.

MR. CAMPBELL. Well, sir, I desire to refer the Chair to his own decision on Monday last, and to those made by him on Thursday and Friday day.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

THE SPEAKER. The Chair trusts the House will allow the gentleman from Ohio to proceed in his suggestions.

MR. CAMPBELL. Last Thursday and Friday it was repeatedly entertained.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair may so decide again to-day for aught he knows; but he sees nothing, in his opinion, which may reasonably change the purpose of the House in reference to the call of the House. Very many even doubt whether it can be entertained during the day. For myself I do not. I think the question of time as well as the action of the House might be well considered in regard to the demand for a call of the House.

MR. STUART, of Ohio. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. INGERSOLL and CAMPBELL were appointed.

The House was divided; and the tellers reported—yeas forty-nine, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair decided that the gentleman from Massachusetts had a right to submit a motion that the House excuse him from voting on a pending appeal from the decision of the Chair. From that decision, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] took an appeal. A motion was then made that the appeal do lie upon the table.

MR. MATTESON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

THE SPEAKER. That was the last motion voted on; and the Chair decides it to be out of order.

The question was then taken on the motion to lay the appeal upon the table; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 88, nays 105; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Edgerton, Edmonds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Heister, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lindsley, Lyon, McCulloch, Mace, Matteson, Mayall, Meacham, Middlesworth, Morgan, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, Puryear, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seymour, Simmons, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburn, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Yates—88.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Bocoock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Caruthers, Chastain, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cumming, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, English, Faulkner, Florence, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hill, Hillyer, Ingersoll, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, Macdonald, McDougall, Maxwell, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Millson, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Ready, Richardson, Riddle, Rowe, Ruffin, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Warren, Wells, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—105.

So the House refused to lay the appeal upon the table.

THE SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the appeal.

MR. CAMPBELL. I rise to present the question of order whether, under the rulings of the Chair heretofore, this appeal can be entertained while another appeal is pending?

THE SPEAKER. The Chair stated, when he entertained the appeal awhile ago, that he did so in accordance with the practice of the other day. A precisely similar case occurred then, as the gentleman will recollect. He stated further that he did so from necessity, and as a practical measure, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, rather than with any justification under the rules of the House.

MR. CAMPBELL. It will be recollected when the question was raised week before last, that the Chair then decided, and I think that he was sustained by the House, that pending one appeal another appeal could not be made.

THE SPEAKER. That is a law of the House, and the Chair feels all its force in this particular case; but having entertained the appeal, he will now change his decision. The gentleman would have thought it hard if the Chair had overruled the right which the Chair thought the gentleman had, under the rule, to vote. He would have thought it hard if he could not have appealed from that decision. This is a privileged question. It goes to the privilege of a member; and some weight is to be given to that consideration in admitting an appeal.

MR. CAMPBELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

MR. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move that when the House adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Wednesday next.

MR. RICHARDSON. I rise to a question of order. That motion is not in order.

MR. CLINGMAN. That motion to adjourn over cannot be repeated. It has been once decided to-day.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair desires to administer the rules of the House practically and justly. He decides that the House has a right to adjourn over. It is a privileged question.

MR. WASHBURN. So the Chair has ruled before.

THE SPEAKER. It is even of a higher grade when viewed in one aspect than the motion to adjourn.

MR. CLINGMAN. After the House has once refused to adjourn over?

MR. HIBBARD. I rise to a question of order. The House having once voted to-day that they would not adjourn over, how can that motion be repeated?

THE SPEAKER. Since the motion to adjourn over was made and negatived, there has been a vote taken on a motion that there be a call of the House. Some time elapsed. There has also been a vote on the motion that the appeal from the decision of the Chair do lie upon the table. There has been action further on two motions to adjourn. The Chair entertains the motion under the circumstances.

MR. HIBBARD. I am constrained to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, believing it to be wrong.

MR. CAMPBELL. I rise to a question of order. When two appeals are pending, may a third one be taken from the decision of the Chair?

MR. HIBBARD. If the appeal be not in order, the motion is not in order.

THE SPEAKER. The original practice was, that one appeal could not be made on another. That, however, is in reference to the same subject; but on subjects entirely different, one from the other, the case is otherwise. That is the recollection of the Chair. If any gentleman has distinct recollection of practice different from that, the Chair would be glad to hear of it.

MR. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to lay the appeal from the decision of the Chair upon the table; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair entertains the motion, that when the House adjourns, it be to meet on Wednesday next. From that decision the gentleman from New Hampshire takes an appeal. The gentleman from Illinois moved that the appeal do lie upon the table. On the latter proposition the yeas and nays have been demanded.

MR. WHEELER. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CULLOM and BOCOOCK were appointed.

The House was then divided on the demand for the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported fifty in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

MR. CAMPBELL. I move that there be a call of the House.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair decides that motion out of order.

MR. CAMPBELL. I will take an appeal, then, as there are only three appeals already pending. [Laughter, and cries of "Good!"] I respectfully take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair will not entertain it.

MR. CAMPBELL. The Chair will entertain three appeals, but not a fourth!

MR. HIBBARD. I call the gentleman to order.

The question was then taken on Mr. Washburn's motion; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 85, nays 104; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Curtis, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Edgerton, Edmonds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Fuller, Gamble, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Heister, Howe, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lindsley, McCulloch, Mace, Matteson, Mayall, Meacham, Middlesworth, Millson, Morgan, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, Puryear, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seymour, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburn, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Wheeler—85.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Bocoock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Chastain, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Cox, Craige, Cumming, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, Faulkner, Florence, Gamble, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hill, Hillyer, Ingersoll, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Lilly, Macdonald, McNamee, Maxwell, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Morrison, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Ruffin, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R.

Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Wells, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—104.

So the House refused to lay the appeal upon the table.

The question recurred upon Mr. HIBBARD's appeal.

Mr. SAGE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WHEELER. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PHILLIPS and CULLOM were appointed.

The House was then divided on the demand for the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported forty in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

A MEMBER. What is the question now before the body?

The SPEAKER. A motion was made that the House adjourn over. The Chair entertained that motion. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. HIBBARD] contended that the motion to adjourn over was not in order, and appealed from the decision of the Chair entertaining that motion. The question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?"

The roll was called; and the question was decided in the negative—yeas 87, nays 98; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Edgerton, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Gamble, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Hiester, Howe, Hughes, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Letcher, Lindsley, McCulloch, Mace, Matteson, Mayall, Meacham, Middleswarth, Milson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Noble, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, Puryear, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seymour, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Wheeler—87.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Barry, Bell, Bocoock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chastain, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cumming, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, English, Faulkner, Florence, Goode, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hill, Hillyer, Ingersoll, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Lilly, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Rowe, Rufin, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—98.

So the decision of the Chair was overruled.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the Chair state the next question?

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL], that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MORGAN. I call for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The roll was called; and the question was decided in the negative—yeas 73, nays 100; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Curtis, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Flagler, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Hiester, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lindsley, Lyon, McCulloch, Mace, Matteson, Mayall, Meacham, Middleswarth, Morgan, Murray, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, David Ritchie, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Wheeler—73.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barry, Bell, Bocoock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chastain, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cumming, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, English, Faulkner, Florence, Gaubie, Goode, Greenwood, Grey, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Ingersoll, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Lamb, Latham, Letcher, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milson, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Puryear, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Rowe, Rufin, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Stratton, Straub, David Stuart, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—100.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the appeal taken from the decision of the Chair by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN.]

Mr. SAGE. I move that the House do now take a recess until seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I submit that that motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SAGE] is not in order.

Several MEMBERS. State the question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GOODRICH] had a right to submit a motion that the House excuse him from voting on the appeal taken from the decision of the Chair. From this decision—that the motion was in order—the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] takes an appeal; and the question before the body is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?"

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move now, if it is in order, that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that that motion is not in order until this appeal be disposed of.

Mr. WASHBURN. From that decision of the Chair I take an appeal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. CLINGMAN. A similar motion has been just voted down.

The SPEAKER. The proposition submitted by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] has been voted down a few minutes since.

Mr. SAGE. I want to inquire from the Chair if it is not in order to move to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 82, nays 100; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Flagler, Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Hastings, Haven, Hiester, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Letcher, Lindsley, Lyon, McCulloch, Matteson, Meacham, Middleswarth, Milson, Morgan, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, Puryear, David Ritchie, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Andrew Stuart, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Wheeler—82.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Bell, Bocoock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cumming, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, English, Florence, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hill, Hillyer, Ingersoll, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phillips, Powell, Preston, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Rogers, Rowe, Rufin, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Straub, David Stuart, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—100.

So the decision of the Chair was overruled.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the House adjourn; and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MATTESON. I demand tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MATTESON and KEITT were appointed.

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported forty in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GOODRICH. I now move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn until Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules the motion out of order, under the decision just made by the House.

The question was then put upon the motion to adjourn; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 68, nays 101; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Banks, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Flagler, Giddings, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Hastings, Haven, Hiester, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lindsley, McCulloch, Matteson, Meacham, Middleswarth, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, David Ritchie, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Andrew Stuart, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Wheeler—68.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Bocoock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cumming, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, English, Florence, Fuller, Goode, Greenwood, Grey, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hill, Houston, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Letcher, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phillips, Powell, Preston, Puryear, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Rowe, Rufin, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, David Stuart, Tweed, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—101.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules that motion out of order at this stage of the proceedings.

Mr. ELIOT. From that decision I respectfully take an appeal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already declined to entertain an appeal, as there is an appeal already pending before the House.

This morning the rules of the House were suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The committee rose, and reported to the House a bill—the Nebraska bill—upon which the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON], the chairman of the Committee on Territories, demanded the previous question. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] moved to suspend the rules generally, for the purpose of introducing a resolution. The Chair decided that motion out of order. The Chair remarked at the time that the House was acting under a suspension of the rules.

Gentlemen are aware that there are a good many privileged motions, nearly all of which have been crowded upon the Chair in a very short space of time, and in a manner well calculated to embarrass. The Chair was inclined to think that the House was then acting under a suspension of the rules, and that it was not in order to suspend the rules generally; and he also stated that a motion to suspend the rules generally—which motion is allowed only on Mondays—and a motion to suspend the rules for the purpose of going into the Committee of the Whole, were of equal dignity, and that it was the duty of the Chair to put them in the order in which they were made.

Some gentlemen called the attention of the Chair to the fact that it was the habit of the House, after the Committee of the Whole had reported a bill, without acting upon that report, to suspend the rules, and go back into committee. The Chair then doubted the correctness of his original decision; and but for the fact that the previous question had been demanded, the Chair would have reviewed his decision.

The Chair's decision, then, is, that during the pendency of the demand for the previous question, it is not in order to move to suspend the rules for either purpose. The Chair is sustained in that decision by his own practice, as it appears upon the Journal. The Chair thinks this is a rational and practical administration of the rules. If it be remembered that upon the question of seconding the demand for the previous question the yeas and nays cannot be called, it will be seen that it would require but a single vote to decide whether the House will order the main question; and that no hardship can result if the rules are thus administered constantly.

From the decision of the Chair an appeal was taken, and a motion was made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] to lay that appeal upon the table. That is the pending question.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That appeal has just been voted down.

The SPEAKER. That was another appeal.

The question was then put; and decided in the affirmative—yeas 114, nays 67; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Bocock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchill, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cumming, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunham, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, English, Etheridge, Florence, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hill, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Lindley, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Noble, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phillips, Powell, Preston, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rowe, Ruffin, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—114.

NAYS—Messrs. Ball, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Hastings, Haven, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lindsley, Lyon, McCulloch, Matteson, Mayall, Middlesworth, Morgan, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Skelton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Yates—67.

So the appeal was laid upon the table.

Mr. BANKS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House laid the appeal upon the table.

Mr. WALSH. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. BANKS. I ask the Chair to read to the House a precedent upon this point.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object.

Mr. BANKS. I do not wish to argue the question, but only desire to have a precedent read.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object. There are conflicting decisions upon the point.

The SPEAKER. It is objected to, and it cannot be read.

Mr. SAGE. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. WHEELER. I call for tellers upon the demand for the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ETHERIDGE and BRECKINRIDGE were appointed.

The House was then divided upon the demand for the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported—ayes forty-seven, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAPP. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MATTESON. I demand the yeas and nays upon that proposition.

Mr. BANKS. I call for tellers upon the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. DICKINSON. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER. Under the decision of the House, overruling the decision of the Chair, the Speaker rules the motion out of order; and that motion cannot be entertained during this session, under that decision.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Would it be in order to take an appeal?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not entertain an appeal.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Did not the Chair entertain a similar appeal when it came from the other side?

The SPEAKER. The Chair very reluctantly entertained an appeal then, but he very decidedly declines to entertain it now.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HAMILTON and SAGE appointed.

The House was then divided upon ordering the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported forty in the affirmative—more than one fifth of those present.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken upon Mr. SAPP's motion; and decided in the negative—yeas 75, nays 114; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—114.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question then recurred upon the motion to lay upon the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the appeal from the decision of the Chair was laid upon the table.

Mr. HUGHES. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken upon the motion; and decided in the affirmative—yeas 108, nays 73; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Bocock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchill, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cumming, Curtis, John G. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—108.

NAYS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Thomas Davis, Dean, Dickinson, Drum, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Giddings, Goodrich, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Hiestler, Howe, Hughes, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lindsley, McCulloch, Matteson, Mayall, Meacham, Middlesworth, Morgan, Morrison, Nichols, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pringle, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Skelton, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Wade, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Yates—73.

So the House agreed to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

[Loud and prolonged cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. SAGE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DEAN. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken upon Mr. SAGE's motion; and decided in the negative—yeas 79, nays 116; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belcher, Benson, Benton, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Curtis, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dickinson, Drum, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Hiestler, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lindsley, McCulloch, Mace, Matteson, Mayall, Meacham, Morgan, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Wheeler, and Yates—79.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Bocock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chastain, Churchill, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cumming, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, English, Faulkner, Florence, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hill, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Lindley, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, May, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Puryear, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Rogers, Ruffin, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—116.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question then recurred upon the motion to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. I move to recommit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order under an express rule of the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion to lay the bill upon the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That motion is not in order. The House has decided that a motion for a call of the House is not in order at this stage of the proceedings.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demanded the previous question upon the report of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. A motion that there be a call of the House was made, and the House refused to order it; thus indicating its purpose to vote upon the report made by the committee. Since that time, the condition of business has not been changed at all. The Chair therefore decides that a motion for a call of the House is not in order.

Mr. WASHBURN. From that decision I take an appeal.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I submit that the gentleman cannot take an appeal. A motion that there be a call of the House is not in order; and an appeal from the decision of the Chair deciding that it is not in order, is no more in order than it would be on a motion that the House adjourn.

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is no appeal pending now, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order, and decides the appeal in order.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Upon further reflection, I will withdraw my motion, and allow the vote to be taken directly upon sustaining the decision of the Chair.

Mr. WHEELER. I renew the motion to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. SAGE. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken upon Mr. WHEELER's motion; and decided in the affirmative—yeas 118, nays 73; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Bocock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Caruthers, Caskie, Chandler, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchill, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, English, Faulkner, Florence, Gamble, Goode, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hill, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Lecher, Lilly, Lindley, Lyon, McCulloch, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, May, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Morrison, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Preston, Puryear, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Rogers, Ruffin, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hestor L. Stevens, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Ellihu B. Washburne, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—118.

NAYS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Campbell, Crocker, Cullom, Curtis, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Fuller, Goodrich, Green, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Heister, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lindsley, Mace, Matteson, Mayall, Meacham, Middleswarth, Millson, Morgan, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Pringle, David Ritchie, Russell, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Skelton, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Walley, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Yates—73.

So the appeal was laid upon the table, and the decision of the Chair sustained.

Pending the call of the roll,

Mr. WHEELER, who was outside the bar when his name was called, asked leave to vote.

Mr. WALSH objected.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I rise to a privileged motion. I move to reconsider the vote by which the appeal was laid upon the table.

Mr. HAMILTON. How did you vote upon that motion?

Mr. WASHBURN. I voted with the majority.

Mr. MORGAN. Upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I submit that that motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order made by the gentleman from North Carolina, and decides the motion to be in order.

Mr. WALSH. I rise to a question of order. I now renew the point I made some time ago, that motions which are made with the express view, with the express intention, to retard the business of the House, are not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order.

Mr. WALSH. I then appeal from the decision of the Chair. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. SAGE. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

Mr. MATTESON. I demand tellers upon ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. WALSH. At the suggestion of some gentlemen upon whom I rely, I withdraw my appeal.

Tellers upon the yeas and nays were ordered; and Messrs. WHEELER and Cox were appointed.

The House was divided; and the tellers reported forty-one in the affirmative, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken upon Mr. CLINGMAN's motion; and decided in the affirmative—yeas 114, nays 74; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Boccock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cumming, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dowdell, Dunbar, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, English, Faulkner, Florence, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Lecher, Lilly, Lindley, Macdonald, McNair, Maxwell, May, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Puryear, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rogers, Rowe, Ruffin, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hestor L. Stevens, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—114.

NAYS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Heister, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lindsley, Mace, Matteson, Mayall, Meacham, Middleswarth, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, David Ritchie, Russell, Sage, Sapp, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Yates—74.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question?"]

Mr. BENSON. I move that this House do now adjourn.

Mr. MORGAN. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken upon Mr. BENSON's motion; and decided in the negative—yeas 72, nays 117; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Campbell, Carpenter, Crocker, Cullom, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Farley, Fenton, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lindsley, Lyon, McCulloch, Mace, Matteson, Mayall, Meacham, Middleswarth, Morgan, Murray, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, David Ritchie, Russell, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Wade, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Wheeler—72.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barry, Bell, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Caruthers, Caskie, Chastain, Chrisman, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cumming, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunham, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, English, Faulkner, Florence, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hill, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Lecher, Lilly, Lindley, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, May, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Nichols, Noble, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rowe, Ruffin, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hestor L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—117.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question then recurred upon the motion to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. I made the motion to recommit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CLINGMAN. That motion is not in order.

Mr. STUART. The Chair ruled that motion to be out of order. I now renew that motion, and I call the attention of the Chair to the 120th rule, with the note thereto.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves to recommit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and refers to the 120th rule. The Chair has read that rule once or twice to-day, and cannot be mistaken in reference to its construction. The rule is express upon the subject.

Mr. STUART. Does not the note say after the previous question has been seconded?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no doubt that that note was put there long before the present rule was in existence. At all events, there is no note that can overturn a direct rule. It is provided by an express rule that a demand for the previous question cuts off all debate, motions to commit, motions to amend, motions to postpone to a day certain, and to postpone indefinitely, and brings the House to a direct vote upon the main question, first upon the amendment, if there be one pending. Under this rule, therefore, a motion to commit is not in order.

The yeas and nays were ordered upon the question to lay the bill upon the table.

The question was then taken on the motion that the bill do lie upon the table; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 92, nays 112; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Curtis, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Heister, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lindsley, Lyon, McCulloch, Mace, Matteson, Mayall, Meacham, Middleswarth, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, Puryear, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Hestor L. Stevens, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Wade, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Wheeler—92.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Boccock, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chastain, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cumming, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, English, Faulkner, Florence, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hill, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Lecher, Lilly, Lindley, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, May, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Millson, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Rowe, Ruffin, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—112.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

Pending the above call,

Mr. BUGG said: Mr. Speaker, I was not within the bar when my name was called, and I now ask the unanimous consent of the House to record my vote in favor of laying the bill upon the table.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object to anybody voting who was not within the bar when his name was called.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the gentleman cannot vote, if he was not within the bar when his name was called.

Mr. BUGG. I will then say, that if I had been within the bar when my name was called, I should have voted in favor of the motion that the bill do lie upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on seconding the demand for the previous question.

[Cries of "Question!"]

Mr. PENNINGTON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MATTESON. I move that when the House adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides the motion to adjourn over out of order, under the ruling of the House.

Mr. PENNINGTON. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL and HENDRICKS were appointed.

The House was then divided, and the tellers reported—yeas forty-two, (a sufficient number.)

The question was then taken on Mr. PENNINGTON's motion; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 83, nays 122; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Curtis, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Heister, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Wheeler—83.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Boccock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cumming, Cutting, John G. THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

MONDAY, MAY 22, 1854.

NEW SERIES....No. 79.

David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Warren, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—122.

So the House refused to adjourn.

[Cries of "Question!"]

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would make an appeal to the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw his call for the previous question until I can make a suggestion in reference to this bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The appeal is in vain. I decline to withdraw the call for the previous question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the gentleman withdraws his call, I will renew it in three minutes by the clock.

The question was then taken; and the call for the previous question received a second.

The question then recurred on ordering the main question to be put.

Mr. WHEELER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken on ordering the main question to be now put; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 117, nays 94; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Bocock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Caruthers, Caskey, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cumming, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, English, Faulkner, Florence, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hill, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Lindley, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, May, John G. Miller, Morrison, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Preston, Puryear, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Rogers, Rowe, Ruffin, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—117.

NAYS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Curtis, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Hiestor, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lindsey, Lyon, McCulloch, Mace, Matteson, Mayall, Meacham, Middleswarth, Morgan, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Yates—94.

So the main question was ordered to be now put.

Pending the above call, Mr. READY said: Mr. Speaker, I state as the reason why I have not voted that I have paired off with Mr. Seymour, of Connecticut.

Mr. SAGE. I move that the House do now adjourn; and on that motion demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on Mr. SAGE's motion; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 85, nays 121; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Curtis, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Gamble, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron, Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Hastings, Haven, Hiestor, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on agreeing with the report of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. SAGE. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I ask for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WHEELER and Bocock were appointed.

The House was then divided on the demand for the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported fifty-two in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 97, nays 117; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Curtis, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. So the House refused to concur in the report of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union striking out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now move to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting in lieu thereof what I send to the Clerk's desk; and upon that proposition I demand the previous question.

Mr. HAVEN. I rise to a question of order. I submit that the previous question is not exhausted, but is still pending on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order raised by the gentleman from New York, and for the reason that the proposition of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was nothing more nor less, in substance, than a motion to reject the bill; and it has no such connection with any one of the readings of the bill as that the previous question would cover both. For instance, the previous question ordered to be put will not cover too readings of a bill, neither can it cover the report of the committee, which proposed to reject the bill, and an amendment that is afterwards offered, or the ordering of the bill to a third reading.

That is the view taken by the Chair of the question of order raised by the gentleman from New York. The gentleman from New York will, perhaps, remember that upon a motion made—an unusual one, to be sure—during the present session, to reject a bill, precisely this course of proceeding was had.

Mr. BANKS. I desire to ask the Chair if the bill does not go to its readings without a question, if this was analogous to a rejection?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is very clear that a vote of the House is necessary.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire to raise the question of order, but I have no intention to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. DEAN. I call for the reading of the substitute.

Mr. ORR. I ask if the gentleman has a right to call for the reading of the substitute until the question is taken upon the demand for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no doubt at all that the gentleman has a right to demand that the bill be read.

Mr. ORR. If that be correct, could he not call for its reading after the previous question has been seconded?

The SPEAKER. Not at all. The bill having been read once, the gentleman could not call for its reading the second time.

The Clerk proceeded to read the substitute.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Chair to put my motion. I made a motion that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair regrets not having heard the gentleman from New York, as he most certainly should have entertained the motion. After the reading of the proposition, the motion made by him will be put to the House.

The substitute offered by Mr. RICHARDSON was then read, as follows:

A BILL to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas.

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That all that part of the territory of the United States included within the following limits, except such portions thereof as are hereinafter expressly exempted from the operations of this act, to wit: beginning at a point in the Missouri river where the fortieth parallel of north latitude crosses the same; thence west on said parallel to the east boundary of the Territory of Utah, on the summit of the Rocky Mountains; thence on said summit northward to the forty-ninth parallel of north latitude; thence east on said parallel to the western boundary of the Territory of Minnesota; thence southward on said boundary to the Missouri river; thence down the main channel of said river to the place of beginning, be, and same is hereby, created into a temporary government by the name of the Territory of Nebraska; and when admitted as a State or States, the said Territory, or any portion of the same, shall be received into the Union, with or without slavery, as their constitution may prescribe at the time of their admission: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to inhibit the government of the United States from dividing said Territory into two or more Territories, in such manner and at such times as Congress shall deem convenient and proper, or from attaching any portion of said Territory to any other State or Territory of the United States: Provided further, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to impair the rights of person or property now pertaining to the Indians in said Territory, so long as such rights shall remain unextinguished by treaty between the United States and such Indians, or to include any territory which, by treaty with any Indian tribe, is not, without the consent of said tribe, to be included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory; but all such territory shall be excepted out of the boundaries, and constitute no part of the Territory of Nebraska, until said tribe shall signify their assent to the President of the United States to be included within the said Territory of Nebraska, or to affect the authority of the Government of the United States to make any regulations respecting such Indians, their lands, property, or other rights, by treaty, law, or otherwise, which it would have been competent to the Government to make if this act had never passed.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the executive power and authority in and over said Territory of Nebraska shall be vested in a Governor, who shall hold his office for four years, and until his successor shall be appointed and qualified, unless sooner removed by the President of the United States. The Governor shall reside within said Territory, and shall be commander-in-chief of the militia thereof. He may grant pardons and respites for offenses against the laws of said Territory, and reprieves for offenses against the laws of the United States, until the decision of the President can be made known thereon; he shall commission all officers who shall be appointed to office under the laws of said Territory, and shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That there shall be a secretary of said Territory, who shall reside therein, and hold his office for five years, unless sooner removed by the President of the United States; he shall record and preserve all the laws and proceedings of the Legislative Assembly hereinafter constituted, and all the acts and proceedings of the Governor in his executive department; he shall transmit one copy of the laws and journals of the Legislative Assembly within thirty days after the end of each session, and one copy of the executive proceedings and official correspondence semi-annually, on the first days of January and July in each year, to the President of the United States, and two copies of the laws to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to be deposited in the libraries of Congress; and, in case of the death, removal, resignation, or absence of the Governor from the Territory, the secretary shall be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to execute and perform all the powers and duties of the Governor during such vacancy or absence, or until another Governor shall be duly appointed and qualified to fill such vacancy.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the legislative power and authority of said Territory shall be vested in the Governor and a Legislative Assembly. The Legislative Assembly shall consist of a Council and House of Representatives. The Council shall consist of thirteen members, having the qualifications of voters, as hereinafter prescribed, whose term of service shall continue two years. The House of Representatives shall, at its first session, consist of twenty-six members, possessing the same qualifications as prescribed for members of the Council, and whose term of service shall continue one year. The number of Representatives may be increased by the Legislative Assembly, from time to time, in proportion to the increase of qualified voters: Provided, That the whole number shall never exceed thirty-nine. An apportionment shall be made, as nearly equal as practicable, among the several counties or districts, for the election of the Council and Representatives, giving to each section of the Territory representation in the ratio of its qualified voters as nearly as may be. And the members of the Council and of the House of Representatives shall reside in, and be inhabitants of, the district or county, or counties, for which they may be elected, respectively. Previous to the first election, the Governor shall cause a census or enumeration of the inhabitants and qualified voters of the several counties and districts of the Territory, to be taken by such persons, and in such mode, as the Governor shall designate and appoint; and the person so appointed shall receive a reasonable compensation therefor. And the first election shall be held at such time and places, and be conducted in such manner, both as to the persons who shall superintend such election and the returns thereof, as the Governor shall appoint and direct; and he shall at the same time declare the number of members of the Council and House of Representatives to which each of the counties or districts shall be entitled under this act. To persons having the highest number of legal votes in each of said council districts for members of the Council, shall be declared by the Governor to be duly elected to the Council; and the persons having the highest number of legal votes for the House of Representatives, shall be declared by the Governor to be duly elected members of said House: Provided, That in case two or more persons voted for shall have an equal number of votes, and in case a vacancy shall otherwise occur in either branch of the Legislative Assembly, the Governor shall order a new election; and the persons thus elected to the Legislative Assembly shall meet at such place and on such day as the Governor shall appoint; but thereafter, the time, place, and manner of holding and conducting all elections by the people, and the apportioning the representation in the several counties or districts to the Council and House of Representatives, according to the number of qualified voters, shall be prescribed by law, as well as the day of the commencement of the regular sessions of the Legislative Assembly: Provided, That no session in any one year shall exceed the term of forty days, except the first session, which may continue sixty days.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That every free white male inhabitant above the age of twenty-one years, who shall be an actual resident of said Territory, and shall possess the qualifications hereinafter prescribed, shall be entitled to vote at the first election, and shall be eligible to any office within the said Territory, but the qualifications of voters, and of holding office, at all subsequent elections, shall be such as shall be prescribed by the Legislative Assembly: Provided, That the right of suffrage and of holding office shall be exercised only by citizens of the United States, and those who shall have declared on oath their intention to become such, and shall have taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States and the provisions of this act: And provided further, That no officer, soldier, seaman, or marine, or other person in the Army or Navy of the United States, or attached to troops in the service of the United States, shall be allowed to vote or hold office in said Territory, by reason of being on service therein.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the legislative power of the Territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation consistent with the Constitution of the United States and the provisions of this act; but no law shall be passed interfering with the primary disposal of the soil; no tax shall be imposed upon the property of the United States; nor shall the lands or other property of non-residents be taxed higher than the lands or other property of residents. Every bill which shall have passed the Council and House of Representatives of the said Territory shall, before it become a law, be presented to the Governor of the Territory; if he approve, he shall sign it; but if not, he shall return it with his objections to the House in which it originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, two thirds of that House shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two thirds of that house, it shall become a law. But in all such cases the votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, to be entered on the journal of each House respectively. If any bill shall not be returned by the Governor within three days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the Assembly, by adjournment, prevent its return, in which case it shall not be a law.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That all township, district, and county officers, not herein otherwise provided for, shall be appointed or elected, as the case may be, in such manner as shall be provided by the Governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Nebraska. The Governor shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council, appoint all officers not herein otherwise provided for; and in the first instance the Governor alone may appoint all said officers, who shall hold their offices until the end of the first session of the Legislative Assembly; and shall lay off the necessary districts for members of the Council and House of Representatives, and all other officers.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That no member of the Legislative Assembly shall hold, or be appointed to, any office which shall have been created, or the salary or emoluments of which shall have been increased while he was a member, during the term for which he was elected, and for one year after the expiration of such term; but this restriction shall not be applicable to members of the first Legislative Assembly; and no person holding a commission or appointment under the United States, except postmasters, shall be a member of the Legislative Assembly, or shall hold any office under the government of said Territory.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the judicial power of said Territory shall be vested in a supreme court, district courts, probate courts, and in justices of the peace. The supreme court shall consist of a chief justice and two associate justices, any two of whom shall constitute a quorum, and who shall hold a term at the seat of government of said Territory annually, and they shall hold their offices during the period of four years, and until their successors shall be appointed and qualified. The said Territory shall be divided into three judicial districts, and a district court shall be held in each of said districts by one of the justices of the supreme court, at such times and places as may be prescribed by law; and the said judges shall, after their appointments, respectively, reside in the districts which shall be assigned them. The jurisdiction of the several courts herein provided for, both appellate and original, and that of the probate courts and of justices of the peace, shall be as limited by law: Provided, That justices of the peace shall not have jurisdiction of any matter in controversy when the title or boundaries of land may be in dispute, or where the debt or sum claimed shall exceed one hundred dollars; and the said supreme and district courts, respectively, shall possess chancery as well as common law jurisdiction. Each district court, or the judge thereof, shall appoint its clerk, who shall also be the register in chancery, and shall keep his office at the place where the court may be held. Writs of error, bills of exception, and appeals, shall be allowed in all cases from the final decisions of said district courts to the supreme court, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law; but in no case removed to the supreme court shall trial by jury be allowed in said court. The supreme court, or the justices thereof, shall appoint its own clerk, and every clerk shall hold his office at the pleasure of the court for which he shall have been appointed. Writs of error, and appeals from the final decisions of said supreme court, shall be allowed, and may be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States in the same manner and under the same regulations as from the circuit courts of the United States, where the value of the property, or the amount in controversy, to be ascertained by the oath or affirmation of either party, or other competent witness, shall exceed one thousand dollars; except only that in all cases involving title to slaves, the said writs of error or appeals shall be allowed and decided by the said supreme court, without regard to the value of the matter, property, or title in controversy; and except also that a writ of error or appeal shall also be allowed to the Supreme Court of the United States, from the decision of the said supreme court created by this act, or of any judge thereof, or of the district courts created by this act, or of any judge thereof, upon any writ of habeas corpus, involving the question of personal freedom: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to apply to or affect the provisions to the "act respecting fugitives from justice, and persons escaping from the service of their masters," approved February twelfth, seventeen hundred and ninety-three, and the "act to amend and supplement to the aforesaid act," approved September eighteen, eighteen hundred and fifty; and each of the said district courts shall have and exercise the same jurisdiction in all cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States as is vested in the circuit and district courts of the United States; and the said supreme and district courts of the said Territory, and the respective judges thereof, shall and may grant writs of habeas corpus in all cases in which the same are granted by the judges of the United States in the District of Columbia; and the first six days of every term of said courts, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, shall be appropriated to the trial of causes arising under the said Constitution and laws, and writs of error and appeal in all such cases shall be made to the supreme court of said Territory, the same as in other cases. The said clerk shall receive in all such cases the same fees which the clerks of the district courts of Utah Territory now receive for similar services.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of an act entitled "An act respecting fugitives from justice, and persons escaping from the service of their masters," approved February twelve, seventeen hundred and ninety-three, and the provisions of the act entitled "An act to amend, and supplementary to, the aforesaid act," approved September eighteen, eighteen hundred and fifty, be, and the same are hereby, declared to extend to and be in full force within the limits of said Territory of Nebraska.

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That there shall be appointed an attorney for said Territory, who shall continue in office for four years, and until his successor shall be appointed and qualified, unless sooner removed by the President, and who shall receive the same fees and salary as the attorney of the United States for the present Territory of Utah. There shall also be a marshal for the Territory appointed, who shall hold his office for four years, and until his successor shall be appointed and qualified, unless sooner removed by the President, and who shall execute all processes issuing from the said courts when exercising their jurisdiction as circuit and district courts of the United States; he shall perform the duties, be subject to the same regulation and penalties, and be entitled to the same fees, as the marshal of the district court of the United States for the present Territory of Utah, and shall, in addition, be paid two hundred dollars annually as a compensation for extra services.

Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That the Governor, secretary, chief justice, and associate justices, attorney, and marshal, shall be nominated, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appointed by the President of the United States. The Governor and secretary to be appointed as aforesaid, shall, before they act as such, respectively take an oath or affirmation before the district judge or some justice of the peace in the limits of said Territory, duly authorized to administer oaths and affirmations by the laws now in force therein, or before the chief justice or some associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, to support the Constitution of the United States, and faithfully to discharge the duties of their respective offices, which said oaths, when so taken, shall be certified by the person by whom the same shall have been taken; and such certificates shall be received and recorded by the said secretary among the executive proceedings; and the chief justice and associate justices, and all other civil officers in said Territory, before they act as such, shall take a like oath or affirmation before the said Governor or secretary, or some judge or justice of the peace of the Territory who may be duly commissioned and qualified, which said oath or affirmation shall be certified and transmitted by the person taking the same to the secretary, to be by him recorded as aforesaid; and afterwards, the like oath or affirmation shall be taken, certified, and recorded in such manner and form as may be prescribed by law. The Governor shall receive an annual salary of two thousand five hundred dollars. The chief justice and associate justices shall each receive an annual salary of two thousand dollars. The secretary shall receive an annual salary of two thousand dollars. The said salaries shall be paid quarter-yearly, from the dates of the respective appointments, at the Treasury of the United States; but no such payment shall be made until said officers shall have entered upon the duties of their respective appointments. The members of the Legislative Assembly shall be entitled to receive three dollars each per day during their attendance at the sessions thereof, and three dollars each for every twenty miles' travel in going to and returning from the said sessions, estimated according to the nearest usually traveled route; and an additional allowance of three dollars shall be paid to the presiding officer of each House for each day he shall so preside. And a chief clerk, one assistant clerk, a sergeant-at-arms, and doorkeeper, may be chosen for each House; and the chief clerk shall receive four dollars per day, and the said other officers three dollars per day, during the session of the Legislative Assembly; but no other officers shall be paid by the United States: Provided, That there shall be but one session of the Legislature annually, unless, on an extraordinary occasion, the Governor shall think proper to call the Legislature together. There shall be appropriated, annually, the usual sum, to be expended by the Governor, to defray the contingent expenses of the Territory, including the salary of a clerk of the executive department; and there shall also be appropriated, annually, a sufficient sum, to be expended by the secretary of the Territory, and upon an estimate to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, to defray the expenses of the Legislative Assembly, the printing of the laws, and other incidental expenses; and the Governor and secretary of the Territory shall, in the disbursement of all moneys entrusted to them, be governed solely by the instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and shall, semi-annually, account to the said Secretary for the manner in which the aforesaid moneys shall have been expended; and no expenditure shall be made by said Legislative Assembly for objects not specially authorized by the acts of Congress making the appropriations, nor beyond the sums thus appropriated for such objects.

Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Nebraska shall hold its first session at such time and place in said Territory as the Governor thereof shall appoint and direct; and at said first session, or as soon thereafter as they shall deem expedient, the Governor and Legislative Assembly shall proceed to locate and establish the seat of government for such Territory at such place as they may deem eligible; which place, however, shall thereafter be subject to be changed by the said Governor and Legislative Assembly.

Sec. 14. And be it further enacted, That a Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States, to serve for the term of two years, who shall be a citizen of the United States, may be elected by the voters qualified to elect members of the Legislative Assembly, who shall be entitled to the same rights and privileges as are exercised and enjoyed by the Delegates from the several other Territories of the United States to the said House of Representatives, but the Delegate first elected shall hold his seat only during the term of the Congress to which he shall be elected. The first election shall be held at such time and places, and be conducted in such manner, as the Governor shall appoint and direct; and at all subsequent elections the times, places, and manner of holding the elections shall be prescribed by law. The person having the greatest number of votes shall be declared by the Governor to be duly elected, and a certificate thereof shall be given accordingly. That the Constitution, and all laws of the United States, which are not locally inapplicable, shall have the same force and effect within the said Territory of Nebraska as elsewhere in the United States, except the eighth section of the act preparatory to the admission of Missouri into the Union, approved March sixth, eighteen hundred and twenty, which, being inconsistent with the principle of non-intervention by Congress with slavery in the States and Territories, as recognized by the legislation of eighteen hundred and fifty, commonly called the compromise measures, is hereby declared inoperative and void; it being the true intent and meaning of this act not to legislate slavery into any Territory or State, nor to exclude it therefrom, but to leave the people thereof perfectly free to form and regulate their domestic institutions in their own way, subject only to the Constitution of the United States: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to revive or put in force any law or regulation which may have existed prior to the act of sixth March, eighteen hundred and twenty, either protecting, establishing, prohibiting, or abolishing slavery.

Sec. 15. And be it further enacted, That there shall hereafter be appropriated, as has been customary for the territorial governments, a sufficient amount, to be expended under the direction of the said Governor of the Territory of Nebraska, not exceeding the sums heretofore appropriated for similar objects, for the erection of suitable public buildings at the seat of government, and for the purchase of a library, to be kept at the seat of government for the use of the Governor, Legislative Assembly, judges of the supreme court, secretary, marshal, and attorney of said Territory, and such other persons, and under such regulations, as shall be prescribed by law.

Sec. 16. And be it further enacted, That when the lands in the said Territory shall be surveyed under the direction of the Government of the United States, preparatory to bringing the same into market, sections numbered sixteen and thirty-six in each township in said Territory shall be, and the same are hereby, reserved for the purpose of being applied to schools in said Territory, and in the States and Territories hereafter to be erected out of the same.

Sec. 17. And be it further enacted, That until otherwise provided by law, the Governor of said Territory may define the judicial districts of said Territory, and assign the judges who may be appointed for said Territory to the several districts; and also appoint the times and places for holding courts in the several counties or subdivisions in each of said judicial districts by proclamation, to be issued by him; but the Legislative Assembly, at their first or any subsequent session, may organize, alter, or modify such judicial districts, and assign the judges, and alter the times and places of holding the courts, as to them shall seem proper and convenient.

Sec. 18. And be it further enacted, That all officers to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for the Territory of Nebraska, who, by virtue of the provisions of any law now existing, or which may be enacted during the present Congress, are required to give security for moneys that may be intrusted with them for disbursement, shall give such security, at such time and place, and in such manner, as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Sec. 19. And be it further enacted, That all that part of the territory of the United States included within the following limits, except such portions thereof as are hereinafter expressly exempted from the operations of this act, to wit: beginning at a point on the western boundary of the State of Missouri, where the thirty-seventh parallel of north latitude crosses the same; thence west on said parallel to the eastern boundary of New Mexico; thence north on said boundary to latitude thirty-eight; thence following said boundary westward to the east boundary of the Territory of Utah, on the summit of the Rocky Mountains; thence northward on said summit to the fortieth parallel of latitude; thence east on said parallel to the western boundary of the State of Missouri; thence south with the western boundary of said State to the place of beginning, be, and the same is hereby, created into a temporary government by the name of the Territory of Kansas; and when admitted as a State or States, the said Territory, or any portion of the same, shall be received into the Union, with or without slavery, as their constitution may prescribe at the time of their admission: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to inhibit the Government of the United States from dividing said Territory into two or more Territories, in such manner and at such times as Congress shall deem convenient and proper, or from attaching any portion of said Territory to any other State or Territory of the United States: Provided further, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to impair the rights of person or property now pertaining to the Indians in said Territory, so long as such rights shall remain unextinguished by treaty between the United States and such Indians, or to include any territory which, by treaty with any Indian tribe, is not, without the consent of said tribe, to be included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory; but all such territory shall be excepted out of the boundaries, and constitute no part of the Territory of Kansas, until said tribe shall signify their assent to the President of the United States to be included within the said Territory of Kansas, or to affect the authority of the Government of the United States to make any regulation respecting such Indians, their lands, property, or other rights, by treaty, law, or otherwise, which it would have been competent to the Government to make if this act had never passed.

Sec. 20. And be it further enacted, That the executive power and authority in and over said Territory of Kansas shall be vested in a Governor, who shall hold his office for four years, and until his successor shall be appointed and qualified, unless sooner removed by the President of the United States. The Governor shall reside within said Territory, and shall be commander-in-chief of the military thereof. He may grant pardons and respites for offenses against the laws of said Territory, and reprieves for offenses against the laws of the United States, until the decision of the President can be made known thereon; he shall commission all officers who shall be appointed to office under the laws of the said Territory, and shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

Sec. 21. And be it further enacted, That there shall be a secretary of said Territory, who shall reside therein, and hold his office for five years, unless sooner removed by the President of the United States; he shall record and preserve all the laws and proceedings of the Legislative Assembly hereinafter constituted, and all the acts and proceedings of the Governor in his executive department; he shall transmit one copy of the laws and journals of the Legislative Assembly within thirty days after the end of each session, and one copy of the executive proceedings and official correspondence semi-annually, on the first days of January and July in each year, to the President of the United States, and two copies of the laws to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to be deposited in the libraries of Congress; and, in case of the death, removal, resignation, or absence of the Governor from the Territory, the secretary shall be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to execute and perform all the powers and duties of the Governor during such vacancy or absence, or until another Governor shall be duly appointed and qualified to fill such vacancy.

Sec. 22. And be it further enacted, That the legislative power and authority of said Territory shall be vested in the Governor and a Legislative Assembly. The Legislative Assembly shall consist of a Council and House of Representatives. The Council shall consist of thirteen members, having the qualifications of voters, as hereinafter prescribed, whose term of service shall continue two years. The House of Representatives shall, at its first session, consist of twenty-six members, possessing the same qualifications as prescribed for members of the Council, and whose term of service shall continue one year. The number of representatives may be increased by the Legislative Assembly, from time to time, in proportion to the increase of qualified voters: Provided, That the whole number shall never exceed thirty-nine. An apportionment shall be made, as nearly equal as practicable among the several counties or districts, for the election of the Council and representatives, giving to each section of the Territory representation in the ratio of its qualified voters as nearly as may be. And the members of the Council and of the House of Representatives shall reside in, and be inhabitants of, the district or county, or counties, for which they may be elected, respectively. Previous to the first election, the Governor shall cause a census, or enumeration of the inhabitants and qualified voters of the several counties and districts of the Territory, to be taken by such persons and in such mode as the Governor shall designate and appoint; and the persons so appointed shall receive a reasonable compensation therefor. And the first election shall be held at such time and places, and be conducted in such manner, both as to the persons who shall superintend such election and the returns thereof, as the Governor shall appoint and direct; and he shall at the same time declare the number of members of the Council and House of Representatives to which each of the counties or districts shall be entitled under this act. The persons having the highest number of legal votes in each of said council districts for members of the Council, shall be declared by the Governor to be duly elected to the Council; and the persons having the highest number of legal votes for the House of Representatives, shall be declared by the Governor to be duly elected members of said House: Provided, That in case two or more persons voted for shall have an equal number of votes, and in case a vacancy shall otherwise occur in either branch of the Legislative Assembly, the Governor shall order a new election; and the persons thus elected to the Legislative Assembly shall meet at such place and on such day as the Governor shall appoint; but thereafter, the time, place, and manner of holding and conducting all elections by the people, and the apportioning the representation in the several counties or districts to the Council and House of Representatives, according to the number of qualified voters, shall be prescribed by law, as well as the day of the commencement of the regular sessions of the Legislative Assembly: Provided, That no session in any one year shall exceed the term of forty days, except the first session, which may continue sixty days.

Sec. 23. And be it further enacted, That every free white male inhabitant above the age of twenty-one years, who shall be an actual resident of said Territory, and shall possess the qualifications hereinafter prescribed, shall be entitled to vote at the first election, and shall be eligible to any office within the said Territory; but the qualifications of voters, and of holding office, at all subsequent elections, shall be such as shall be prescribed by the Legislative Assembly: Provided, That the right of suffrage and of holding office shall be exercised only by citizens of the United States, and those who shall have declared on oath their intention to become such, and shall have taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States and the provisions of this act: And provided, further, That no officer, soldier, seaman, or marine, or other person in the Army or Navy of the United States, or attached to troops in the service of the United States, shall be allowed to vote or hold office in said Territory by reason of being on service therein.

Sec. 24. And be it further enacted, That the legislative power of the Territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation consistent with the Constitution of the United States and the provisions of this act; but no law shall be passed interfering with the primary disposal of the soil; no tax shall be imposed upon the property of the United States; nor shall the lands or other property of non-residents be taxed higher than the lands or other property of residents. Every bill which shall have passed the Council and House of Representatives of the said Territory shall, before it become a law, be presented to the Governor of the Territory; if he approve, he shall sign it; but if not, he shall return it with his objections to the House in which it originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, two thirds of that House shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two thirds of that House, it shall become a law. But in all such cases the votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, to be entered on the Journal of each House, respectively. If any bill shall not be returned by the Governor within three days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the Assembly, by adjournment, prevent its return, in which case it shall not be a law.

Sec. 25. And be it further enacted, That all township, district, and county officers, not herein otherwise provided for, shall be appointed or elected, as the case may be, in such manner as shall be provided by the Governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Kansas. The Governor shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council, appoint all officers not herein otherwise provided for; and in the first instance the Governor alone may appoint all said officers, who shall hold their offices until the end of the first session of the Legislative Assembly; and shall lay off the necessary districts for members of the Council and House of Representatives, and all other officers.

Sec. 26. And be it further enacted, That no member of the Legislative Assembly shall hold, or be appointed to, any office which shall have been created, or the salary or emoluments of which shall have been increased, while he was a member, during the term for which he was elected, and for one year after the expiration of such term; but this restriction shall not be applicable to members of the first Legislative Assembly; and no person holding a commission or appointment under the United States, except postmasters, shall be a member of the Legislative Assembly, or shall hold any office under the government of said Territory.

Sec. 27. And be it further enacted, That the judicial power of said Territory shall be vested in a supreme court, district courts, probate courts, and in justices of the peace. The supreme court shall consist of a chief justice and two associate justices, any two of whom shall constitute a quorum, and who shall hold a term at the seat of government of said Territory annually; and they shall hold their offices during the period of four years, and until their successors shall be appointed and qualified. The said Territory shall be divided into three judicial districts, and a district court shall be held in each of said districts by one of the justices of the supreme court, at such times and places as may be prescribed by law; and the said judges shall, after their appointments, respectively, reside in the districts which shall be assigned them. The jurisdiction of the several courts herein provided for, both appellate and original, and that of the probate courts and of justices of the peace, shall be as limited by law: Provided, That justices of the peace shall not have jurisdiction of any matter in controversy when the title or boundaries of land may be in dispute, or where the debt or sum claimed shall exceed one hundred dollars; and the said supreme and district courts, respectively, shall possess chancery as well as common law jurisdiction. Each district court, or the judge thereof, shall appoint its clerk, who shall also be the register in chancery, and shall keep his office at the place where the court may be held. Writs of error, bills of exception, and appeals, shall be allowed in all cases from the final decisions of said district courts to the supreme court, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law; but in no case removed to the supreme court shall trial by jury be allowed in said court. The supreme court, or the justices thereof, shall appoint its own clerk, and every clerk shall hold his office at the pleasure of the court for which he shall have been appointed. Writs of error, and appeals from the final decisions of said supreme court, shall be allowed, and may be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, in the same manner and under the same regulations as from the circuit courts of the United States, where the value of the property, or the amount in controversy, to be ascertained by the oath or affirmation of either party, or other competent witness, shall exceed one thousand dollars; except only that in all cases involving title to slaves, the said writs of error or appeals shall be allowed and decided by the said supreme court, without regard to the value of the matter, property, or title in controversy; and except also that a writ of error or appeal shall also be allowed to the Supreme Court of the United States, from the decision of the said supreme court created by this act, or of any judge thereof, or of the district courts created by this act, or of any judge thereof, upon any writ of habeas corpus, involving the question of personal freedom: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to apply to or affect the provisions of the "Act respecting fugitives from justice, and persons escaping from the service of their masters," approved February twelfth, seventeen hundred and ninety-three, and the "Act to amend and supplementary to the aforesaid act," approved September eighteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty; and each of the said district courts shall have and exercise the same jurisdiction in all cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States as is vested in the circuit and district courts of the United States; and the said supreme and district courts of the said Territory, and the respective judges thereof, shall and may grant writs of habeas corpus in all cases in which the same are granted by the judges of the United States in the District of Columbia; and the first six days of every term of said courts, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, shall be appropriated to the trial of causes arising under the said Constitution and laws, and writs of error and appeal in all such cases shall be made to the supreme court of said Territory, the same as in other cases. The said clerk shall receive in all such cases the same fees which the clerks of the district courts of Utah Territory now receive for similar services.

Sec. 28. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the act entitled "An act respecting fugitives from justice, and persons escaping from the service of their masters," approved February twelfth, seventeen hundred and ninety-three, and the provisions of the act entitled "An act to amend, and supplementary to, the aforesaid act," approved September eighteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty, be, and the same are hereby, declared to extend to, and be in full force within the limits of the said Territory of Kansas.

Sec. 29. And be it further enacted, That there shall be appointed an attorney for said Territory, who shall continue in office for four years, and until his successor shall be appointed and qualified, unless sooner removed by the President, and who shall receive the same fees and salary as the attorney of the United States for the present Territory of Utah. There shall also be a marshal for the Territory appointed, who shall hold his office for four years, and until his successor shall be appointed and qualified, unless sooner removed by the President, and who shall execute all processes issuing from the said courts when exercising their jurisdiction as circuit and district courts of the United States; he shall perform the duties, be subject to the same regulations and penalties, and be entitled to the same fees, as the marshal of the district court of the United States for the present Territory of Utah, and shall, in addition, be paid two hundred dollars annually as a compensation for extra services.

Sec. 30. And be it further enacted, That the Governor, secretary, chief justice, and associate justices, attorney, and marshal, shall be nominated, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appointed by the President of the United States. The Governor and secretary to be appointed as aforesaid shall, before they act as such, respectively take an oath or affirmation before the district judge or some justice of the peace in the limits of said Territory, duly authorized to administer oaths and affirmations by the laws now in force therein, or before the chief justice or some associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, to support the Constitution of the United States, and faithfully to discharge the duties of their respective offices, which said oaths, when so taken, shall be certified by the person by whom the same shall have been taken; and such certificates shall be received and recorded by the said secretary among the executive proceedings; and the chief justice and associate justices, and all other civil officers in said Territory, before they act as such, shall take a like oath or affirmation before the said Governor or secretary, or some judge or justice of the peace of the Territory who may be duly commissioned and qualified, which said oath or affirmation shall be certified and transmitted by the person taking the same to the secretary, to be by him recorded as aforesaid; and, afterwards, the like oath or affirmation shall be taken, certified, and recorded, in such manner and form as may be prescribed by law. The Governor shall receive an annual salary of two thousand five hundred dollars. The chief justice and associate justices shall receive an annual salary of two thousand dollars. The secretary shall receive an annual salary of two thousand dollars. The said salaries shall be paid quarter-yearly, from the dates of the respective appointments, at the Treasury of the United States; but no such payment shall be made until said officers shall have entered upon the duties of their respective appointments. The members of the Legislative Assembly shall be entitled to receive three dollars each per day during their attendance at the sessions thereof, and three dollars each for every twenty miles' travel in going to and returning from the said sessions, estimated according to the nearest usually traveled route; and an additional allowance of three dollars shall be paid to the presiding officer of each House for each day he shall so preside. And a chief clerk, one assistant clerk, a sergeant-at-arms, and doorkeeper, may be chosen for each House; and the chief clerk shall receive four dollars per day, and the said other officers three dollars per day, during the session of the Legislative Assembly; but no other officers shall be paid by the United States: Provided, That there shall be but one session of the Legislature annually, unless, on an extraordinary occasion, the Governor shall think proper to call the Legislature together. There shall be appropriated, annually, the usual sum, to be expended by the Governor, to defray the contin-gent expenses of the Territory, including the salary of a clerk of the executive department; and there shall also be appropriated, annually, a sufficient sum, to be expended by the secretary of the Territory, and upon an estimate to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, to defray the expenses of the Legislative Assembly, the printing of the laws, and other incidental expenses; and the Governor and secretary of the Territory shall, in the disbursement of all moneys intrusted to them, be governed solely by the instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and shall, semi-annually, account to the said Secretary for the manner in which the aforesaid moneys shall have been expended; and no expenditure shall be made by said Legislative Assembly for objects not specially authorized by the acts of Congress making the appropriations, nor beyond the sums thus appropriated for such objects.

Sec. 31. And be it further enacted, That the seat of government of said Territory is hereby located temporarily at Fort Leavenworth; and that such portions of the public buildings as may not be actually used and needed for military purposes may be occupied and used, under the direction of the Governor and Legislative Assembly, for such public purposes as may be required under the provisions of this act.

Sec. 32. And be it further enacted, That a Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States, to serve for the term of two years, who shall be a citizen of the United States, may be elected by the voters qualified to elect members of the Legislative Assembly, who shall be entitled to the same rights and privileges as are exercised and enjoyed by the Delegates from the several other Territories of the United States to the said House of Representatives; but the Delegate first elected shall hold his seat only during the term of the Congress to which he shall be elected. The first election shall be held at such time and places, and be conducted in such manner, as the Governor or shall appoint and direct; and at all subsequent elections the times, places, and manner of holding the elections shall be prescribed by law. The person having the greatest number of votes shall be declared by the Governor to be duly elected, and a certificate thereof shall be given accordingly. That the Constitution, and all laws of the United States which are not locally inapplicable, shall have the same force and effect within the said Territory of Kansas as elsewhere within the United States, except the eighth section of the act preparatory to the admission of Missouri into the Union, approved March sixth, eighteen hundred and twenty, which, being inconsistent with the principle of non-intervention by Congress with slavery in the States and Territories, as recognized by the legislation of eighteen hundred and fifty, commonly called the compromise measures, is hereby declared inoperative and void; it being the true intent and meaning of this act not to legislate slavery into any Territory or State, nor to exclude it therefrom, but to leave the people thereof perfectly free to form and regulate their domestic institutions in their own way, subject only to the Constitution of the United States: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to revive or put in force any law or regulation which may have existed prior to the act of sixth of March, eighteen hundred and twenty, either protecting, establishing, prohibiting, or abolishing slavery.

Sec. 33. And be it further enacted, That there shall hereafter be appropriated, as has been customary for the territorial governments, a sufficient amount, to be expended under the direction of the said Governor of the Territory of Kansas, not exceeding the sums heretofore appropriated for similar objects, for the erection of suitable public buildings at the seat of government, and for the purchase of a library, to be kept at the seat of government for the use of the Governor, Legislative Assembly, judges of the supreme court, secretary, marshal, and attorney of said Territory, and such other persons, and under such regulations, as shall be prescribed by law.

Sec. 34. And be it further enacted, That when the lands in the said Territory shall be surveyed under the direction of the Government of the United States, preparatory to bringing the same into market, sections numbered sixteen and thirty-six in each township in said Territory shall be, and the same are hereby, reserved for the purpose of being applied to schools in said Territory, and in the States and Territories hereafter to be erected out of the same.

Sec. 35. And be it further enacted, That, until otherwise provided by law, the Governor of said Territory may define the judicial districts of said Territory, and assign the judges who may be appointed for said Territory to the several districts; and also appoint the times and places for holding courts in the several counties or subdivisions in each of said judicial districts by proclamation, to be issued by him; but the Legislative Assembly, at their first or any subsequent session, may organize, alter, or modify such judicial districts, and assign the judges, and alter the times and places of holding the courts, as to them shall seem proper and convenient.

Sec. 36. And be it further enacted, That all officers to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for the Territory of Kansas, who, by virtue of the provisions of any law now existing, or which may be enacted during the present Congress, are required to give security for moneys that may be intrusted with them for disbursement, shall give such security, at such time and place, and in such manner, as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Sec. 37. And be it further enacted, That all treaties, laws, and other engagements made by the Government of the United States with the Indian tribes inhabiting the Territories embraced within this act, shall be faithfully and rigidly observed, notwithstanding anything contained in this act; and that the existing agencies and superintendencies of said Indians be continued with the same powers and duties which are now prescribed by law, except that the President of the United States may, at his discretion, change the location of the office of superintendent.

The previous question was seconded.

MR. EDGERTON. I rise to a question of order. There is no appropriation in this bill that requires it, under the 133d rule, to be discussed in Committee of the Whole; but there is a proposition in the bill for a tax or a charge upon the people which, under the 131st rule, must not be discussed upon the day on which it is introduced into the House, and which must be discussed in Committee of the Whole. That provision is in these words:

"There shall be appropriated annually the usual sum, to be expended by the Governor, to defray the contingent expenses of the Territory."

The 131st rule is, that

"No motion or proposition for a tax or charge upon the people shall be discussed the day on which it is made or offered; and every such proposition shall receive its first discussion in a Committee of the Whole House."

I hold that this bill contains a proposition for a tax and a charge upon the National Treasury, and, consequently, must be discussed in Committee of the Whole.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair must overrule the point of order, upon the ground that the bill has been discussed in Committee of the Whole.

MR. EDGERTON. The substitute now before the House has never been considered in Committee of the Whole.

THE SPEAKER. That is very true; but the bill has been so considered, which brings it within the meaning of the rule, according to the universal practice of the House.

MR. HOUSTON. The rule which the gentleman has read applies to another thing entirely—to those bills which propose to levy taxes.

THE SPEAKER. That is also true.

MR. EDGERTON. Any proposition which proposes a charge upon the National Treasury must first be considered in committee.

MR. HOUSTON. I object to all discussion.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order raised by the gentleman from Ohio.

MR. WASHBURN, of Maine. I demand the yeas and nays upon ordering the main question.

MR. MORGAN. I ask for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CULLOM and READY were appointed.

The House then divided; and the tellers reported forty-nine gentlemen voting in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 116, nays 90; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Bocock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craig, Cumming, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, English, Faulkner, Florence, Fuller, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hill, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Lindsey, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, May, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Rogers, Rowe, Ruffin, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Warren, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zolliecoffer—116.

NAYS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Crocker, Cullom, Curtis, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Giddings, Goodrich, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Hiestor, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lindsey, Lyon, McCulloch, Mace, Matteson, Mayall, Meacham, Middlesworth, Millson, Morgan, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, Puryear, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Hestor L. Stevens, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Yates—90.

So the main question was ordered to be now put.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the House adjourn; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. SAGE. I demand tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CULLOM and GREY were appointed.

The House then divided; and the tellers reported forty-one gentlemen voting in the affirmative, (not a sufficient number.)

[Cries of "Count the other side!"]

The SPEAKER. Forty-one is not a sufficient number, according to the vote this moment given; and the yeas and nays are not ordered.

The question is now on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON.]

Mr. MILLSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WASHBURN. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CULLOM, and DAVIS of Indiana, were appointed.

The House was divided; and the tellers reported sixty-five in the affirmative, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 115, nays 96; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Bocock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caskie, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craig, Cumming, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, English, Faulkner, Florence, Fuller, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hill, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Lindsey, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, May, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Rowe, Ruffin, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zolliecoffer—115.

NAYS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Curtis, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Gamble, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Hiestor, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lindsey, Lyon, McCulloch, Mace, Matteson, Mayall, Meacham, Middlesworth, Millson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, Puryear, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seymour, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Hestor L. Stevens, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Yates—100.

Sapp, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Hestor L. Stevens, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Yates—96.

So the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois was adopted.

Pending the announcement of the vote,

Mr. CARUTHERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state to the House that I have paired off on this bill with Mr. CHASE, of New York, otherwise I would have voted in the affirmative.

Several MEMBERS addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] was the first to address the Chair.

Mr. MILLSON. Mr. Speaker, I now move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And on that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that that motion is not in order, under the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no doubt that it is in order.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Is it in order after the previous question has been seconded?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides it is fairly in order under the rule.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The roll was called; and the question was decided in the negative—yeas 100, nays 114; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Crocker, Cullom, Curtis, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Hiestor, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lindsey, Lyon, McCulloch, Mace, Matteson, Mayall, Meacham, Middlesworth, Millson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pratt, Pringle, Puryear, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seymour, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Hestor L. Stevens, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Yates—100.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Bocock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craig, Cumming, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Eddy, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, English, Faulkner, Florence, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hill, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Lindsey, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, May, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Preston, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Rowe, Ruffin, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zolliecoffer—114.

So the House refused to lay the bill on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on ordering the bill to be engrossed, and read a third time.

Mr. MATTESON. (at twenty minutes past ten o'clock.) I move that the House do now adjourn; and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HAVEN. (addressing the Chair at the same time.) I ask for the yeas and nays on the question put by the Chair that the bill be engrossed and read a third time.

The House was first divided on ordering the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then put on the motion to adjourn; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. HAVEN. I now, Mr. Speaker, repeat my call for the yeas and nays, on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The roll was then called; and the question was decided in the affirmative—yeas 112, nays 99; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Bocock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caskie, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craig, Cumming, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Eddy, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, English, Faulkner, Florence, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hill, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Lindsey, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, May, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Preston, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Rowe, Ruffin, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Straub, David Stuart, John J. So the bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time.

It was accordingly read a third time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. HUGHES. I ask for the yeas and nays on the final passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put on the passage of the bill; and it was carried in the affirmative—yeas 113, nays 100; as follows:
